PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 76th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 28, 1939

(Legislative day of Thursday, June 22, 1939)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Arthur E. Paterson, of Middletown, Conn., chaplain of the Senate of the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut, offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who art the source of all that is good, at this, the beginning of another day, again we seek Thy blessing.

Bless the President of these United States, the Presiding Officer, and the Members of this House, and all those in this and other lands in places of public responsibility.

Especially in these days of peculiar stress in many lands, give us patience, wisdom, and a courageous faith; and increasingly move our people to know, love, and honor Thy law.

This we ask to the end that the children of our homes, and that generations to come in all the world, may praise Thee tomorrow because of what we are and do today. Through Christ our Lord. Amen.

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Tuesday, June 27, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of California, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Senate Joint Resolution 28

Relative to Eel River flood control and channel rectification
Whereas frequent serious floods of the Eel River, in Humboldt County, constitute a serious menace to the health, safety, and general welfare of the people of this State, in that they cause soil erosion, debris obstruction, frequent river-bed shallowing and changing, constant increase in the course, winding and spreading of the river, gradual washing away of thousands of acres in Eel River Valley and the destruction and damage to farm structures, livestock, and crops in the Eel River delta; and

Whereas as a result of the foregoing, destruction occurs which runs into millions of dollars; and

Whereas the control of the waters of the Eel River by revetment, channel straightening, rectification and deepening, and debris removal would assist in the prevention of such destruction and aid in the reclaiming of thousands of acres of Eel River delta lands, the controlling of the floodwaters of the Eel River, and in reducing the height of floodwaters, so as to, within a few years, effect sufficient property saving to repay the cost of such work; and

Whereas United States engineers in the twelfth district will within a short time complete a survey of the Eel River directed to be made in connection with a congressionally approved Federal project in relation to the Eel River: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the President and Congress of the United States be memorialized to include revetment, channel straightening, deepening, and rectification within said Eel River project and to appropriate Federal moneys in sums sufficient to complete said works at the earliest possible moment; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives from California be hereby respectfully requested to urge such action; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate be directed to send copies of this resolution to the President and the Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and to each Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from Local No. 432, Farmers Union, of Chester, Mont., praying for the enactment of the bill (S. 2395) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, for the purpose of regulating interstate and foreign commerce in wheat, providing for the orderly marketing of wheat at fair prices in interstate and foreign commerce, insuring to wheat producers a parity income from wheat based upon parity price or cost of production, whichever is the higher, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from Robert Boeracher, of Findlay, Ohio, praying that the United States keep clear of foreign entanglements, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from Angelo Perillo, of New York City, N. Y., praying for the enactment of the so-called Murray-Casey bill, being the bill (S. 2507) to provide a program for the relief of unemployment by affording opportunities for employment upon a public-works program to persons unable to secure private employment, which was referred to the Special Committee to Investigate Unemployment and Relief.

He also laid before the Senate a petition of several citizens of San Francisco, Calif., praying that the Federal theater, arts, and music projects be retained in pending legislation making appropriations for work relief, relief, etc., which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a petition of sundry citizens of Detroit, Mich., praying for amendment of the pending joint resolution (H. J. Res. 326) making appropriations for work relief, relief, and to increase employment by providing loans and grants for public-works projects, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, so as to exempt handicapped persons who have been employed by the W. P. A. for 18 months from being laid off for a period of 60 days, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Common Council of Milwaukee, Wis., protesting against the enactment in its present form of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 326) making appropriations for work relief, relief, and to increase employment by providing loans and grants for public-works projects, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and favoring the enactment of such a relief measure as proposed by the President, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a petition of several citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y., praying that a provision to the effect that workers under the W. P. A. for 18 months or more shall be laid off for a period of 60 days be retained in pending relief legislation, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PEPPER presented the following memorial of the Legislature of the State of Florida, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

House Memorial 14

Memorial to the Congress of the United States requesting the continuation of the present system of operating camps of the Civilian Conservation Corps in the State of Florida

Whereas it has been reported that Federal authorities, who are in charge of determining the policy followed in the operation of camps of the Civilian Conservation Corps in the State of Florida, are contemplating a change in the method of operating said camps, such proposed change to substitute civilians for Reserve officers of the United States Army, as the persons in charge of said camps; and

Whereas it would appear that the type of training and discipline afforded by the present system, which places such camps under the direction of Reserve officers of the United States Army, is beneficial to the persons enrolled in such camps and is advantageous to the welfare of the people of the United States from a military viewpoint: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Congress of the United States of America is hereby respectfully petitioned and requested to enact laws preserving the present system of operating camps of the Civilian Conservation Corps, under the direction of Reserve officers of the United States Army; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this memorial be transmitted by the Secretary of State to the two United States Senators and the five Members of the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States from the State of Florida.

THIRD TERM FOR PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I wish to place some newspaper items in the RECORD, but before making the request I shall make a short statement.

On Monday of this week I received a telegram from Mr. Walter Harrison, editor of the Daily Oklahoman. The telegram contained the question, "Are you for Roosevelt for a third term?" I wired back in four words, "As strong as horseradish."

This morning I noticed the following headline in the Washington Post:

Senator LEE climbs on third-term band wagon.

They would be closer to the truth if they said I helped to make it. I am surprised to have that appear in this newspaper, giving the impression that I am just now advocating a third term, when in the same newspaper—the Washington Post—of Friday, May 12, 1939, appeared an article under the headline "Democratic Women hear Senator LEE," in which it is stated:

Senator LEE launched his speech with the third term as the keynote and followed it through, diverging only long enough to discuss the three measures for which he urged support.

On March 1 of this year I addressed the Cosmos Luncheon Club here in Washington, D. C., advocating a continuation of the Roosevelt policies and a third term, if necessary, to carry them out. Then at Lancaster, Pa., at a Jefferson Day dinner on April 13, of this year, I made a speech in which I advocated a continuation of the liberal program of Roosevelt and a third term, if necessary, in order to accomplish that. The news services likewise carried the statement in which I was committed to a third term.

In fact, Mr. President, publicly and privately for over a year I have been giving expression to similar declarations, and I do not like to be pictured as climbing on a third-term band wagon which I have been helping to make from the very beginning.

I ask that the two articles to which I have referred be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post of June 28, 1939]

SENATOR LEE CLIMBS ON THIRD TERM BAND WAGON

Senator LEE (Democrat), of Oklahoma, joined his colleague, Senator ELMER THOMAS, yesterday in support of a third term for President Roosevelt. LEE said he was "strong as horseradish" for the idea.

[From the Washington Post of May 12, 1939]

DEMOCRATIC WOMEN HEAR SENATOR LEE—THIRD TERM, FARM RELIEF, JOBS, AND OLD-AGE PENSIONS ARE HELD MAJOR OBJECTIVES

(By Jessie Ash Arndt)

A third term for President Roosevelt and championship of farm relief, old-age pensions, and jobs for the unemployed were advanced by Senator JOSH LEE, of Oklahoma, last night as objectives for the Democratic Party in 1940. Addressing the Woman's National Democratic Club, he declared that, in the Democratic National Convention, "Roosevelt will either carry the ball or call the signals."

"The play will hit the left side of the line, just left of center," Senator LEE added. "There may be some on our team who will try to make the play go to the right, but I am sorry to say that I fear they will be knocked down and run over. * * * The best answer to radicalism is liberalism. Franklin D. Roosevelt is today saving the country from a dangerous left turn."

"If the opposition were able to destroy Roosevelt's leadership today, this country would not swing back to the right, but it would go further to the left."

Senator LEE launched his speech with the third term as the keynote and followed it through, diverging only long enough to discuss the three measures for which he urged support.

"In my opinion, there is but one argument that might cause President Roosevelt to consider a third term," he said, "which is that his work is not finished."

SEES BUT ONE ARGUMENT AGAINST

Declaring that the only argument against third term was that it had never been done, Senator LEE cited the fact that a similar argument would have kept Columbus from discovering America and Lindbergh from flying the Atlantic. George Washington's retirement after a second term he assigned to Washington's advancing years.

He met the argument that the President might become a dictator by saying that he had not abused his power during his two terms, which gave assurance that he would not do so. The country would take a chance on a new man's doing so, he said.

"Last week," said Senator LEE, "the national Republican Party, under the guise of the national chamber of commerce, held its annual session here in Washington and the spokesmen of that organization did their best to make it appear that everything is against the policies of this administration."

He said of the November elections, that they brought into office Republicans who "in their campaign pledges were more liberal than the Democrats they replaced."

BIG TAX PROGRAM HELD ESSENTIAL

Hand in hand with championship of the measures he advocated, Senator LEE declared "our party must have courage to champion a tax program that will make it possible to carry out these three important measures. . . . The program will yield enough increased national income to reward our efforts. By such a program, the Government can take money from the mountain tops of wealth in this country and level up the valleys of despair."

SERMON BY DR. HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK

[Mr. BYRD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a sermon delivered by Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick on February 19, 1939, at Riverside Church, New York City, the text being Dare We Break the Vicious Circle of Fighting Evil With Evil, which appears in the Appendix.]

ECONOMIC RELATIONS WITH PHILIPPINES—STATEMENT BY SAMUEL F. GACHES

[Mr. GIBSON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a statement by Samuel F. Gaches, relative to the economic relations between the Philippines and the United States, which appears in the Appendix.]

DECLARATION ON NEUTRALITY BY AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE ASSOCIATION

[Mr. REYNOLDS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a declaration by a group of American citizens of Akron, Ohio, regarding neutrality, which appears in the Appendix.]

ROOSEVELT HELD RIGHT AND BIG BUSINESS WRONG ON ECONOMY APPRAISAL—ARTICLE BY JAY FRANKLIN

[Mr. MINTON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by Jay Franklin, published in the Washington Evening Star of May 31, 1939, entitled "Roosevelt Held Right and Big Business Wrong on Economy Appraisal," which appears in the Appendix.]

WORK-RELIEF AND RELIEF APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 326) making appropriations for work relief, relief, and to increase employment by providing loans and grants for public-works projects, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, on page 21, beginning in line 14, as amended.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, as I understood the situation last night, the committee amendment on page 21 was allowed to go over on the understanding that it was to be reworded. I inquire if any effort has been made to reword that section?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed by the Parliamentarian that there was talk about it but no agreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest that the amendment be passed over temporarily in order to try to work out some language.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to passing over the amendment temporarily? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, we then are in such a position, I take it, that I may ask the Senator from Colorado to explain to us line 10, on page 22. In that connection I ask the Senator to observe that certification of work-relief clients may be made by "a local public certifying agency" or "the Work Projects Administration where no such agency exists"; and then we come to the nub of the import of this matter—

Or where the Work Projects Administration certifies by reason of its refusal to accept certification by local public agencies.

Will the Senator, for our benefit, please explain what possibilities are open to the Work Projects Administration by virtue of the last alternative?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, this is a provision which came from the House. I do not know that I can offer any suggestions other than such as are open to the Senator from Connecticut.

It is no answer to say to the Senator that the committee has been driven to act under great pressure as to time. We have not given the time that we would have liked to give to the different sections. It is not our fault. The House, exercising its own prerogative, considered the joint resolution, and it only came into our hands about 6 or 8 days before final enactment was imperative.

The purpose of this provision, as I gather, is to provide that the first agency charged with responsibility of certification shall be the local agency, which is the case now in all but a few States, or, in the absence of a local certifying agency, the W. P. A. I may say to the Senator that there are four States in which the W. P. A. have found the local certifying agencies to be either neglecting or not properly performing their functions, and they have taken over all the burdens of certification. I do not want to put in the RECORD the names of the States, but there were four States in which the Works Progress Administration, for the purpose of efficiency, felt compelled, according to their statement, to take over the burdens of certification.

If the matter were left to me, I would have all certifications made by the W. P. A. As the money is being provided by the Federal Government, I would have the Federal Government do the certifying; but that is not the wish of the Congress.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. President, I point out, then, that as the matter now stands, and as the language appears here, first, persons may be removed from the rolls; second, nobody may get on the rolls unless first a local certifying agency shall certify, or, in the alternative, the W. P. A. shall certify; and in the last connection it obviously has the right, has it not, to reject local certifications?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; which it has always exercised. Local certification has never been final or binding. It has always been a preliminary certification. In many places where the W. P. A. felt that the certifying officers were very careful, the local certifications have been accepted, not as a matter of law but as a matter of administration. Elsewhere the W. P. A. have reinvestigated.

We know that in the past year the W. P. A. was perhaps unduly lenient, because when the Congress directed the W. P. A. to make an investigation and eliminate those who did not belong on the rolls, some 60,000 persons were taken off who had gotten through the various certification agencies and on the rolls, but were not entitled to be there; also, an additional number of aliens who had been kept on the rolls in violation of law. But we are dealing with more than 3,000,000 persons, and it is inevitable that there shall be some errors. We thought the errors were perhaps larger than they should be.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, the press reports that the administrative heads of the W. P. A. in a certain State have recently been transferred to another State because of their interjection of politics into their administration. If ever there was a clause that makes it possible for such politically minded persons to reject local certifications, and thereafter, by refusing to accept the local certifications, to put on persons of their own choice, it is this clause. Is not that so?

Mr. ADAMS. If the Senator had the list of States in which local certification has been refused, I think he would see that it was not a political action on the part of W. P. A.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, at this time I desire to make a very brief statement about a situation which concerns another bill, but about which I have heretofore made some comments on the floor.

Sensors may recall that I stated on the floor the other day that if it became necessary I should offer as an amendment to the now pending relief bill the substance of what has come to be known as section 9 of Senate bill 1871. I made the statement, I think repeatedly, that such action would be taken if necessary. In doing so, I impute no bad faith against anyone, against any committee of either body of the Congress; but it seemed that Senate bill 1871, having passed the Senate in April, should receive attention in the other branch of the Congress.

Generally, I do not believe in the practice of legislation on an appropriation bill. I dislike and did not want to take that course unless it should be necessary. Since that time—in fact, on yesterday—I conferred with Members of the House Committee on the Judiciary, which is considering Senate bill 1871. Specifically, I conferred with the acting chairman of that committee, Mr. CELLER, and with the Representative from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER]. They spoke not only for themselves but also for Representative HEALEY, of Massachusetts, chairman of the subcommittee which considered the bill. They informed me that on Tuesday of this week the House committee had considered the first five sections of Senate bill 1871, and had passed on those sections of the bill practically without change, except that section 5, in my opinion, was considerably strengthened by the House action. The understanding was that the House committee will act on Senate bill 1871 on Thursday of this week, and report it to the House of Representatives.

In addition to that, the gentlemen whom I have mentioned assure me that they personally will appear before the Rules Committee of the House and request a rule to obtain a vote on this Senate bill. The Representative from my State [Mr. DEMPSEY], a member of the Rules Committee, was also present, and gave me as definite assurance as a man can give under the circumstances that the Rules Committee would provide for a rule to have a vote in the House of Representatives. In addition to that, Mr. WALTER, of Pennsylvania, authorized me to say that the Democratic leadership in the House of Representatives would also request the Rules Committee to grant the rule.

I make this statement deliberately for the RECORD at this time in order that there may be a clear understanding in the Senate and in the House. If I have misunderstood the agreement in any way, I shall be glad to be corrected. I am sure I did not misunderstand it, and that it is just exactly as I have stated it.

In view of the situation that pends on the present relief measure, the fact that time is limited, and perhaps it would not be fair to the Senate or the conferees of the Senate to insist on a controversial matter such as section 9 may be, and further and expressly in view of the representations made to me as I have outlined by the Members of the House of Representatives, I shall not now offer that amendment to the pending joint resolution.

But I wish to state, Mr. President, that I know these understandings are not ironclad; occasionally they go astray; and if, for any reason, the understanding to which I have referred should not be carried out, and if the House of Representatives should not have an opportunity within a reasonable time to vote on Senate bill 1871, I think I would be perfectly justified in asking the Senate to suspend the rule and permit me to offer the amendment to any measure which may be coming over to the Senate and which will require a vote by the House of Representatives, and that is exactly what I propose to do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 22, to strike out lines 14 to 19, inclusive, as follows:

(e) After April 1, 1940, no person eligible to receive benefits provided for by the Social Security Act shall be given employment or continued in employment on any work project prosecuted under the appropriations contained in this title for any period for which there are available sufficient funds to enable the payment of such benefits to him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 20, to strike out "(f)" and insert "(e)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 3, before the word "The", to strike out "(g)" and insert "(f)", and in the same line, before the word "shall", to strike out "Board" and insert "Commissioner", so as to read:

(f) The Commissioner shall cause a periodic investigation to be made of the rolls of relief employees on work projects, and shall eliminate from the rolls those not in actual need, such investigation to be made so that each case is investigated not less frequently than once every 6 months.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 21, after the word "own", to insert a comma and "and if he has first drawn all the benefits of unemployment compensation that shall have accrued to him during his term in private employment", so as to read:

(b) Any person who takes such private employment shall at the expiration thereof be entitled to immediate resumption of his previous employment status with the Work Projects Administration if he is still in need and if he has lost the private employment through no fault of his own, and if he has first drawn all the benefits of unemployment compensation that shall have accrued to him during his term in private employment.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado whether or not he would be willing to accept an amendment to this amendment by adding at the conclusion thereof the words "and which are available to him"? My reason for suggesting the amendment is that, as the committee amendment stands, the mere fact that an individual might have unemployment compensation money accruing to him would make him ineligible for assistance under the act. We know that there are many instances, and as time goes on I think there will be more, of persons being entitled to this money but, because of difficulties of accounting, and so forth, they are not able to get it. All I propose is that a man must actually have the money available as well as accrued.

Mr. ADAMS. Of course, Mr. President, I have no right to accept the amendment; but I will say that, so far as I am individually concerned, and as a member of the committee, I will accept the amendment. I think its purpose is sound.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I move, then, that the amendment of the committee beginning in line 21, page 23, be amended by inserting before the period at the end of the proposed amendment, after the word "employment", the words "and which are available to him."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 19, before the word "No", to insert "(a)"; in line 20, before the word "employment", to strike out "for" and insert "in"; and in line 22, after the word "this", to strike out "title" and insert "joint resolution", so as to read:

SEC. 18 (a) No person shall be employed or retained in employment in any administrative position, or in any supervisory position on any project, under the appropriations in this joint resolution unless such person before engaging in such employment (or prior to August 1, 1939, in the case of any person employed before such date who has not taken an oath of office) subscribes to the following oath:

"I, A B, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office (or employment) on which I am about to enter (or which I now occupy). So help me God."

The head of the agency shall designate administrative and supervisory employees to administer such oath, but no fee shall be charged therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 14, before the word "No", to insert "(b)"; in line 15, before the word "resolution", to insert "joint", and in the same line, after the word "pay", to strike out "the salary of" and insert "any compensation to", so as to read:

(b) No portion of the appropriation made under this joint resolution shall be used to pay any compensation to any person who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States through force or violence.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 19, after the word "expenses", to strike out "(not to exceed $500 for any one agency) of attendance at meetings when specifically authorized" and insert "of attendance at meetings of officials and employees of the agency on official business", so as to read:

SEC. 21. The appropriations in this joint resolution for administrative expenses and such portions of other appropriations in this joint resolution as are available for administrative expenses may be obligated in the amounts which the agency, with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, shall have certified to the Secretary of the Treasury as necessary for personal services, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and for contract stenographic reporting services, supplies and equipment; purchase and exchange of lawbooks, books of reference, directories, and periodicals, newspapers and press clippings; travel expenses, including expenses of attendance at meetings of officials and employees of the agency on official business; rental at the seat of government and elsewhere; purchase, operation, and maintenance of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; printing and binding and such other expenses as may be necessary for the accomplishment of the objectives of this joint resolution.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, an amendment on page 25 has already been agreed to, but my attention has just been attracted to it, and I desire to propound a question to the Senator having the joint resolution in charge, because the amendment concerns me somewhat, not its purpose, for I am in thorough accord with the purpose of the amendment, but how will it be construed by the General Accounting Office? Will the salary of everyone be held up until it is determined whether he has been advocating the overthrow of the Government? It struck me, on reading the amendment yesterday, that that might present some complications in administration. Has the Senator from Colorado any ideas on that subject?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I have assumed that the burden would be the other way around, that those who are on the relief rolls and who draw salaries would be presumed to be loyal citizens, and that the obligation of denying compensation by reason of their advocacy of overthrow of the Government would rest upon the employing agencies.

Mr. HATCH. That interpretation would suit me very well. If I thought the General Accounting Office would adopt the interpretation, there would be no confusion and no harmful results from it. I wonder whether the committee report interprets the language.

Mr. ADAMS. It does not.

Mr. HATCH. I do not know how to get at what I have in mind, but I suggest for the RECORD that the officials of the General Accounting Office read the remarks of the Senator having the joint resolution in charge, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], and adopt the interpretation which the Senator from Colorado has placed on this section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 22, after the word "tenure", to insert a comma and "and, without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, to fix the compensation of any officers and employees so appointed", so as to read:

SEC. 22. (a) The provisions of Executive Order No. 7916, dated June 24, 1938, shall not apply to positions the compensation of which is payable from appropriations contained in this joint resolution, and such appropriations shall not be available for the compensation of the incumbent of any position placed in the competitive classified civil service of the United States after January 10, 1939.

(b) In carrying out the purposes of this joint resolution the agencies receiving appropriations herein or allocations under such appropriations are authorized to accept and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services, appoint, without regard to civil-service laws, such officers and employees, and utilize, with the consent of the head of the Federal agency by which they are employed, such Federal officers and employees, and with the consent of the State such State and local officers and employees at such compensation as shall be determined by the head of the agency involved, as may be necessary, and prescribe their authorities, duties, responsibilities, and tenure, and, without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, to fix the compensation of any officers and employees so appointed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 28, to strike out:

(c) Under the appropriations in this title, no increase in compensation shall be granted to any administrative officer or employee, but this prohibition shall not be applicable in case of a change in office or position which increases the responsibilities or duties, or both, of any such officer or employee.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado the reason for striking out lines 1 to 6, which include salary increases.

Mr. ADAMS. The junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] in the committee, as I recollect, explained that in the Reorganization Act there were provisions which covered this situation, and that this would conflict. I am not clear in my own mind, but the Senator from South Carolina is the expert on reorganization, so I ask him to answer the Senator's question.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, in the Reorganization Act there is a provision to the effect that employees transferred to any other department by reason of any order of the President shall not be transferred to a higher grade. The exact language I cannot recite, but the object was to prevent something which has quite often occurred when there was a merger. When an employee was transferred to a new department he would often be transferred to a higher grade. There was a proviso that nothing contained in the act should be construed to prevent promotions after the end of the fiscal year.

A number of the departments have called my attention to the fact that because the Reorganization Act went into effect on July 1 it froze in the positions they held a number of persons who they think would be entitled to promotions, and it has been said they would be frozen for a whole year.

Of course, I do not cry about that. I think that if for 12 months there were no increases in salaries the world would not come to an end. However, I believe that in such matters we should try to do that which is just and fair to all employees. Therefore I suggested that this language be stricken out, because it would give to W. P. A. employees what was denied to the employees of all other organizations transferred. After the first of the year, immediately afterward, I intend, because of the interest I have taken in the Reorganization Act, to make an investigation to determine whether or not this does work a hardship; and if the Congress has to act on it, I think it should act as to all agencies and not only as to the W. P. A. It may be we will determine that the language should be modified in some way. I am disposed to think so.

Mr. HOLT. The Senator feels, then, that striking out the language in question really will prevent increases in salaries?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes. The provision as it stands would give to the W. P. A. employees immediately after July 1, though they are transferred to the public-works agency, the right to an increase in salary, whereas other employees transferred to the same division would be denied that right. I think all should be treated alike. I think it may be wise to modify the language, but I think that ought to be done after we make an investigation, and it should apply not only to one agency.

Mr. HOLT. The reason I asked the question is that I have made a study of W. P. A. salary increases in the State of West Virginia. It was said that there were 538 administrative employees on W. P. A. in that State. I investigated the salaries paid when they first began to work in W. P. A. and the reason for the increases, and I found that 210 of those individuals had received salary increases varying from $60 to $120 a year.

Mr. BYRNES. I will say to the Senator from West Virginia that one thing that causes me to believe that it is wise to follow the course I have suggested is that I am advised that, because of the provisions in the W. P. A. Act, some employees in the Department anticipate that after July 1 increases in salary could be made, and that prior to July 1 they would be as busy as a one-arm paperhanger.

Mr. HOLT. The sickening thing to me is to see applicants for relief told that they cannot get jobs because there is no money with which to pay them. They are told, "We cannot put you on W. P. A. today because we are out of funds." Then we can look back and see the salary increases which have been given. That process is going on continually. One man in my State was receiving $3,200 per year, which was more than he ever before received in his life, but his salary was increased to $6,000.

I shall not make a long statement, but simply for the information of the Senate I wish to say that I found in the State of West Virginia—and again I say it is a small State—107 individuals who received salary increases of from $60 to $240 a year, 70 who received salary increases of from $300 to $600 a year, 20 who received salary increases of from $660 to $960 a year, and 11 who received salary increases of over a thousand dollars a year. Of the 538 administrative employees the W. P. A. claim they have, I found 210 salary increases. At the same time it is said that there is no money at all to be used for relief.

Mr. President, at this point I ask that the list to which I have referred may be included in the RECORD. It shows the number of persons whose salaries were increased in the State of West Virginia and the amount of the increases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The list referred to is as follows:

One at $2,800; 1 at $1,960; 1 at $1,500; 1 at $1,440; 2 at $1,200; 1 at $1,100; 1 at $1,080; 1 at $1,020; 1 at $1,000; 6 at $900; 1 at $840; 1 at $800; 2 at $780; 1 at $720; 2 at $700; 7 at $660; 12 at $600; 4 at $540; 6 at $480; 6 at $420; 1 at $400; 11 at $360; 20 at $300; 45 at $240; 2 at $200; 22 at $180; 19 at $120; 2 at $100; 17 at $60.

Mr. HOLT. Let me be specific with respect to just five salary increases. I wish to show the Senate that at the same time W. P. A. is telling the relief worker that there is no money for him they are increasing the salaries of some of their personnel. One man on a project received $85 a month. They boosted his salary to $210 a month, or an increase of $1,500 a year. Another man in the same county who was getting $75 a month had his salary boosted to $200 a month, or $1,500 increase per year.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator identify the time when these things happened?

Mr. HOLT. Between 1936 and 1938; in 2 years' time. Another man in the same county who was paid $75 a month received an increase in salary to $200 a month, or $1,500 a year, which is three times more than the project worker would receive if he worked every week in the year in West Virginia.

I find that one man who was getting $85 a month had his salary increased to $225 a month, or an increase of $1,680 a year.

Another man's salary was increased from $95 to $225 a month, or $1,560 a year.

All this occurred in one county in my State.

I found over 25 salary increases there, but every one of the 5 increases in that 1 county to which I have specifically referred amounted to more than $1,500 a year. That represents not total salary but simply the increase. At the same time people are told that there is no money for relief.

In the State and district offices I myself found that salary increases totaled $78,000. My opinion is that the total salary increases in the State of West Virginia will amount to more than $100,000 a year. Yet it is said there is no money with which to employ needy persons.

Mr. President, I feel very strongly that we should not raise salaries in the W. P. A. so long as people are applying for relief. If we have money that can be used to raise salaries, why not take that money and use it to put needy persons to work?

I am glad the amendment was accepted. However, I did wish to call the attention of the Senate to the large salary increases. In my opinion they will amount to millions of dollars throughout the United States.

Mr. President, one reason those in charge get away with it is because they keep the pay roll secret, and feel that people will not find out what has occurred. If we have sufficient money to enable such salaries to be increased, then we have money with which to employ needy people.

Yesterday the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] spoke of "career men." It is not a question of those who are employed on W. P. A. being "career men." It is the bosses who are career men.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, is the information the Senator has just referred to generally available in any form?

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, it is not available, because the W. P. A. officials specifically say it is not. I have before me a letter written last fall by Mr. Aubrey Williams, who at that time was acting for Mr. Harry Hopkins. I wrote to him and asked him for a statement of the pay rolls in West Virginia. He replied:

DEAR SENATOR HOLT: I have your letter of the 19th, requesting a list of the persons on the W. P. A. administrative pay roll in West Virginia. If there is any particular information that you want about any particular person I shall be glad to furnish you with it, but I am not approving the sending of the whole personnel list to you.

In other words, a Member of the Senate cannot find out who is on the administrative pay roll in his own State, according to Mr. Williams. The letter from which I read is dated October 20.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does that represent general practice, or is that merely a personal compliment to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. HOLT. I think it is a general practice, because I notice that a letter was placed in the RECORD in the other House recently, in which the administrative pay-roll list requested was denied a Member of the House.

Mr. VANDENBERG. How did the Senator get his information finally?

Mr. HOLT. I received my information through the General Accounting Office, and not through the W. P. A. The W. P. A. has never given me the pay-roll list of the W. P. A. in the State of West Virginia.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the Senator think the information would be available through the General Accounting Office to any Senator who might apply for it?

Mr. HOLT. I am not sure about that. It takes a great amount of work to obtain the information. I had to delegate some individuals in my office to help the General Accounting Office go through the list of the personnel. I cannot say whether or not the information would be available in the way the Senator mentioned. I know it should be.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I know of no reason on earth why this particular information should not be available to Members of the Senate. As a matter of fact the furnishing of such information should be required.

Mr. HOLT. I intend to offer an amendment to the joint resolution later today which will provide that the Administrator shall be required to submit to the Congress a list of the nonsecurity employees who make more than $1,000 per year, which will allow every Congressman to find out who are on the pay rolls and how much they get, because certainly it is the duty of Congress to know who are on the pay rolls. I hope there will be no objection to such an amendment, for we make all other agencies furnish a list of those on their pay rolls. Why should the W. P. A. keep secret its pay roll?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think if that information were made public in every State, it would have a tremendous impression on the people, and would result in the reduction of overhead expense in connection with relief.

Mr. HOLT. I can assure the Senator that since I made public in West Virginia the information I mentioned there has been a tremendous reduction in the administrative pay roll.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Has it not occurred to the Senator that if information is not available to him when he makes request for it, it can be obtained through the adoption of a Senate resolution requesting such information? I have never known a request for such information to be rejected.

Mr. HOLT. I think that would be a wise procedure, but, on the other hand, I believe such information should be made available with respect to the different States. I may wish to have information concerning West Virginia. The Senator from Massachusetts may wish to have information with respect to Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. There should be separate pay-roll lists containing the names of those who are on relief and the names of those who are nonrelief employees. I think we ought to know how much we are paying to nonrelief persons to take care of people who need relief employment. I understand from what the Senator has been saying there is now no available information of that nature.

Mr. HOLT. Not at all, Mr. President. No one realizes more than I do how difficult it has been to get such information. That is not because of the fact that the General Accounting Office was unwilling to furnish it, but because we had to go over a pay roll containing thousands of names of persons in West Virginia in order to get the information desired.

Mr. WALSH. Is not every person who is employed as a foreman, or superintendent, or whatever job he may have, so employed in order to provide employment for those who are on relief?

Mr. HOLT. He should be.

Mr. WALSH. And is that not the basic principle of the legislation under consideration?

Mr. HOLT. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. Therefore we should know how many persons it is necessary to employ in order to take care of the relief cases. To aid those on relief is our object in appropriating funds and setting up the necessary organizations to accomplish this purpose.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. I wish to ask the Senator if he has by any chance made any comparison between the salaries received by the administrative personnel on W. P. A. in his State with the salaries received by the administrative personnel on P. W. A. in his State?

Mr. HOLT. No, I have not; because I found the P. W. A. to have a very clean record, I may say, in the State of West Virginia, and, of course, its set-up is entirely different. However, I know of men who were working for $45 a month in private employment and who were put on W. P. A. at $225 a month, and they received increases in their salaries of $180 a month thereby. They were also given a Federal job.

Mr. PEPPER. I was very much interested as to what the comparison might show, in case we were to make a comparison between the two groups.

Mr. HOLT. There is a distinct difference between the P. W. A. and the W. P. A. The administrative force of the P. W. A. is decidedly smaller in numbers. One supervisor under the P. W. A. would take the place of perhaps half a dozen under the W. P. A. With regard to West Virginia, I know that the average relief foreman in West Virginia makes between $15 and $20 a month more than a school teacher with a college degree. We pay our school teachers far more than the average received by school teachers in the United States.

It is said that such information is not available and that we cannot obtain it. The only way we can find out the difference between the compensation paid relief and nonrelief workers is to obtain such information. That is the reason why I want it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What is the amendment which the Senator proposes to offer?

Mr. HOLT. The amendment I intend to offer reads:

The Administrator shall submit to Congress a list of all non-certified employees whose wage scale is more than $1,000 annually. This list shall include the names, legal addresses, positions, and salaries of such employees.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not see why any reasonable person should object to such a requirement.

Mr. HOLT. Of course, this is not the time to offer the amendment. I was discussing salary increases and digressed to the other subject. However, it is time Congress knew where the hundreds of millions of dollars it appropriates are going.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 12, before the word "None", to insert "(a)"; in line 13, after the word "be", to strike out "available"; after line 13, to strike out "(a) After June 30, 1939, for the operation of any theater project; or"; in line 16, before the word "for", to strike out "(b) After August 31, 1939" and insert "available after October 31, 1939"; and in line 19, before the word "This", to insert "(b)", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 25. (a) None of the funds made available by this title shall be available after October 31, 1939, for the operation of any project sponsored solely by the Work Projects Administration.

(b) This section shall not prohibit the payment of wages or salaries accrued, or of nonlabor obligations incurred, in connection with any such project if the wages or salaries accrued or the obligation was incurred prior to July 1, 1939, or September 1, 1939, as the case may be.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Colorado if he will not permit consideration of this amendment to go over until we have disposed of the amendment on page 5, to which we are to return later, and which provides for a contribution of 25 percent by a State toward sponsored projects.

Mr. ADAMS. That is agreeable to me.

Mr. WAGNER. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment on page 29, in section 25, will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 24, after the word "The", to strike out "Board" and insert "Commissioner", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 26. The Commissioner and the National Youth Administrator are authorized to consider, ascertain, adjust, determine, and pay from the appropriation in section 1 or section 2 hereof any claim arising out of operations thereunder accruing after the effective date of this joint resolution on account of damage to or loss of privately owned property caused by the negligence of any employee of the Work Projects Administration or the National Youth Administration, as the case may be, while acting within the scope of his employment. No claim shall be considered hereunder which is in excess of $500, or which is not presented in writing within 1 year from the date of accrual thereof. Acceptance by a claimant of the amount allowed on account of his claim shall be deemed to be in full settlement thereof, and the action upon such claim so accepted by the claimant shall be conclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 15, after the word "The", to strike out "Board" and insert "Commissioner", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 27. The Commissioner is authorized to call to the attention of the city, county, and State governments the unemployment situation of that city, county, or State, and to seek the cooperation of the State or any subdivision thereof in meeting the unemployment problem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 16, before the word "not", to insert "and", and in the same line, after the word "other", to strike out "sections" and insert "provisions", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 28. Any person who knowingly and with intent to defraud the United States makes any false statement in connection with any application for any work project, employment, or relief aid under the appropriations in this title, or diverts, or attempts to divert or assists in diverting, for the benefit of any person or persons not entitled thereto, any portion of such appropriations, or any services or real or personal property acquired thereunder, or who knowingly, by means of any fraud, force, threat, intimidation, or boycott, or discrimination on account of race, religion, political affiliations, or membership in a labor organization, deprives any person of any of the benefits to which he may be entitled under any such appropriations, or attempts so to do, or assists in so doing, or who disposes of, or assists in disposing of, except for the account of the United States, any property upon which there exists a lien securing a loan made under the provisions of this title or the Emergency Relief Appropriation Acts of 1935, 1936, 1937, and 1938, shall be deemed guilty of a felony and fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than 2 years, or both. The provisions of this section shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law, or of this title.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 22, after the word "person", to strike out "entitled to or", so as to read:

SEC. 29. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person knowingly to solicit, or knowingly be in any manner concerned in soliciting, any assessment, subscription, or contribution for the campaign expenses of any individual or political party from any person receiving compensation or employment provided for by this title.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 5, before the word "not", to insert "and"; and in line 6, after the word "other", to strike out "section" and insert "provisions", so as to read:

(b) Any person who knowingly violates any provision of this section shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both. The provisions of this section shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law, or of this title.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 14, after the word "election" and the period, to strike out "That no recommendations of any person who shall apply for office or place under the provisions of this act, which may be given by any Senator or Member of the House of Representatives, except as to the character or residence of the applicant, shall be received or considered by any person concerned in making any appointment under this act", so as to read:

SEC. 30. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, to promise any employment, position, work, compensation, or other benefit, provided for or made possible by this title, or any other act of the Congress, to any person as consideration, favor, or reward for any political activity or for the support of or opposition to any candidate or any political party in any election.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 10, before the word "not", to insert "and"; and in line 11, after the word "other", to strike out "sections" and insert "provisions", so as to read:

(c) Any person who knowingly violates any provision of this section shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both. The provisions of this section shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law, or of this title.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 4, before the word "not", to insert "and", and in the same line, after the word "other", to strike out "sections" and insert "provisions", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 31. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person employed in any administrative or supervisory capacity by any agency of the Federal Government, whose compensation or any part thereof is paid from funds authorized or appropriated by this title, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the results thereof. While such persons shall retain the right to vote as they please and to express privately their opinions on all political subjects, they shall take no active part, directly or indirectly, in political management or in political campaigns or in political conventions.

(b) Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by this title shall be used to pay the compensation of such person. The provisions of this section shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law, or of this title.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, after line 2, to strike out the following title:

TITLE II—PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRATION PROJECTS

SEC. 201. (a) In order to increase employment by providing for useful non-Federal public-works projects of the kind and character which the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works has heretofore financed or aided in financing, pursuant to title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936, the Public Works Administration Extension Act of 1937, or the Public Works Administration Appropriation Act of 1938, the sum of $125,000,000 transferred from section 1, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation made under section 201 of such act of 1938, shall be available until June 30, 1941, and may be expended by the Commissioner of Public Works (hereinafter referred to as the "Commissioner"), subject to the approval of the President, for (1) the making of loans or grants, or both, to States, Territories, possessions, political subdivisions, or other public bodies (herein called public agencies), or (2) the construction and leasing of projects, with or without the privilege of purchase, to any such public agencies.

(b) No amount available under this title shall be allotted for any project which, in the determination of the Commissioner, cannot be commenced prior to March 1, 1940, or the completion of which cannot be substantially accomplished prior to July 1, 1941: Provided, That this limitation upon time shall not apply to any project enjoined in any Federal or State court.

(c) Under the funds available in this title, no grant shall be made in excess of $225,000 or in excess of 45 percent of the cost of any project, and no project shall be constructed for lease to any public agency unless the Commissioner shall determine that the nonrecoverable portion of the cost of such project shall not exceed $225,000 and shall not exceed 45 percent of the cost thereof.

(d) No moneys for a non-Federal project shall be paid from the funds made available by this title to any public agency unless such agency will require that at least 25 percent of the labor employed on such project will come from relief rolls if such labor in the opinion of the Commissioner of Public Works is available and qualified, and will not unreasonably interfere with the construction of such project, and unless and until adequate provision has been made, or in the opinion of the Commissioner is assured, for financing such part of the entire cost thereof as is not to be supplied from Federal funds.

(e) Not more than $2,875,000 of the amount available under this title may be used for administrative expenses of the Administration during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, in connection with this title; such amount shall be available for administrative expenses thereof during such fiscal year for the purposes set forth for such Administration in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1940. The Commissioner shall reserve from the amount available under this title an adequate sum for administrative expenses of the Administration in connection with this title for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, subject to authorization hereafter by annual appropriation acts for the utilization thereof.

SEC. 202. Moneys realized from the sale of securities acquired by the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works or the Public Works Administration, or the proceeds of such securities, may be used by the Commissioner for the making of loans in connection with projects under this title, notwithstanding any previous limitation on the total amount of such securities or proceeds thereof that may be used for loan purposes.

SEC. 203. The Public Works Administration is hereby continued to the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, and is hereby authorized to continue to perform all functions which it is authorized to perform on July 1, 1939.

SEC. 204. Section 206 of the Public Works Administration Extension Act of 1937, as amended by the Public Works Administration Appropriation Act of 1938, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 206. No new applications for loans or grants for non-Federal projects shall be received by the Administration after September 30, 1939: Provided, That this section shall not apply to applications amendatory of applications for projects received prior to October 1, 1939, and such amendatory applications shall be confined to projects, which, in the determination of the Commissioner, can be started and completed within the time limits specified in section 201 (b) of the Public Works Administration Appropriation Act of 1939."

SEC. 205. This title may be cited as the "Public Works Administration Appropriation Act of 1939."

MR. HAYDEN. Mr. President, is this the public-works title? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is the public-works title.

MR. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] intends to offer a substitute for title II. I should like to discuss the matter for a moment until he comes into the Chamber and offers his amendment.

As the House passed the joint resolution it provided that $125,000,000 of the amount estimated for the Works Progress Administration should be earmarked for public works. The committee determined that the entire amount asked for by the President for the Works Progress Administration should be allowed, and then declined to provide any money out of the Treasury for a public-works program. It will, therefore, be necessary to adopt a substitute for the stricken title if there is to be any public-works program next year.

The Secretary of the Interior, who is ex officio Public Works Administrator, appeared before our committee and said, first, that he did not believe in the principle of robbing Peter to pay Paul, and therefore that the Works Progress Administration should have the full amount estimated in the Budget. We then questioned him as to the desirability of carrying on some kind of a public-works program during the next fiscal year, and asked him for the status of the present program. He stated that at the previous session of Congress $965,000,000 was appropriated for such a program, of which $200,000,000 was for Federal projects, the remainder being for loans and grants on the basis of a 45-percent grant and a 55-percent contribution by the local community; that that program, translated into terms of work, meant that there was now proceeding in the United States nearly $2,000,000,000 worth of work of all kinds in all sections of the United States; that that program would arrive at its peak in another 60 days; that the amount of employment would then begin to decline and by next winter it would be very substantially reduced, and that by next spring the program would be completed. It was his suggestion that if the Congress, as a matter of policy, determined that there should be a public-works program, its size should be about half the amount of money that we appropriated for the current fiscal year. Carrying out that idea, he suggested a program of $500,000,000, $400,000,000 to be for loans and grants, and $100,000,000 to be for Federal projects.

The proposal which the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] intends to offer would carry out that suggestion. I am in favor of such a program. There is bound to be a period of transition between what we are now doing and what may be undertaken under the new suggestion recently submitted to the Congress by the President. The proposal of the President is that communities desiring to undertake public works of one kind or another, such as sewer systems, electric-light plants, street paving, erection of new buildings, city halls, jails, or whatever they desire, may come to the Federal Government with a proposal that the Federal Government guarantee their bonds at a very low rate of interest. That is what the suggestion amounts to. If the current rate of interest for the commercial use of money were 4 percent and the Federal Government enabled communities to obtain money at 2 percent, it would mean, in effect, a subsidy of the difference in interest they would have to pay if the Government did not guarantee their obligations. It is estimated that the subsidy over the period required would amount to between 12 and 15 percent. The idea is entirely new. It may have much merit. We do not know how it will work out until it is tried. Secretary Ickes testified that he had on hand about $1,000,000,000 worth of projects which had been studied by the finance division and by the legal division and had gone through every process of examination, and that if he had the money he could undertake the work immediately.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I will yield in just a moment.

It has been suggested by those who are advocating the plan of guaranteeing bonds 100 percent that projects which have already been investigated and have gone "through the mill" might be taken up in that way. If there is any merit in the suggestion, I can see no harm in opening up the public-works program to receive new applications between now and next fall, as the House has proposed in the joint resolution; and then if the new scheme works, such projects can be picked up just as well as those that have already been approved.

I think there should be a cushion between the existing program and the new one; and I think the Secretary of the Interior, as Public Works Administrator, was wise in recommending a program of that kind.

I now yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. As I understand, the Administrator does not think that $125,000,000 is sufficient to carry out the program.

Mr. HAYDEN. Oh, no; there is no question about that. He has applications on hand for a much larger sum.

Mr. LUCAS. Yesterday when the debate on the joint resolution was commenced I briefly interrogated the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] relative to the $125,000,000 which was stricken out of the joint resolution as it came from the House. I made the statement at that time that there were certain communities where applications had been made for certain Public Works Administration projects, which applications have been approved by the Administrator.

Mr. HAYDEN. What is true in Illinois is true in every other State in the Union.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to add this further information, which I think may be rather interesting to the Senator. In a certain community in Illinois a waterworks project application has been approved by the P. W. A. It is admitted by those who know that the sanitary conditions in that city are very bad. Realizing the seriousness of the situation, the W. P. A. authorities, so I am informed, agreed to carry through this project providing the city authorities could get the P. W. A. to release jurisdiction over the project. An attempt was made to get P. W. A. to release jurisdiction, but the Administrator refused, and the conditions in that community are the same as they were last October when the application was approved. Certainly something should be done either to complete that project or to obtain the relinquishment of the authority of the Administrator of the P. W. A. and give the people in that community what they have been promised. Mr. President, there is apparently a conflict of authority between P. W. A. and W. P. A. upon that application.

Let me ask the Senator, Why should P. W. A., when there are no funds available for the completion of a project, withhold jurisdiction of the application when the W. P. A. in that community want to complete the project?

Mr. HAYDEN. I was just going to answer the question. Looking at it broadly, taking the country over, while it may work a hardship in some instances, it is a good rule, because if we do not have a rule of that kind, if a community elects to follow one course and then finds out that it cannot get it that way it can follow some other course, we are simply jumping from one agency to the other and having one agency compete against the other as to which will render the service. That situation has arisen in a great many places.

For that reason it is my understanding that the President issued the general order under which if a community elected in the beginning to take a project under W. P. A., then it could not change it over to a project under the Public Works Administration, or, if they elected to take a public-works project and found they could not get their money immediately that way, they could not change over to a W. P. A. project. There is reason in that idea.

There are exceptional circumstances, no doubt, such as the Senator has in mind, when there is a critical situation in the community, and it might be that the Administrator did not exercise the discretion that he had. He can release the project if it is necessary to do so, and perhaps he should have done it in the instance referred to. But will not the Senator concede that we do not need to set up two agencies, one competing against the other for projects?

Mr. LUCAS. I will concede that, providing there is money available to carry on any project from either one of the administrative agencies; but in the instance referred to the application was made last October. P. W. A. accepted that application immediately, but after they accepted the application, as I understand, they advised the community that they had no funds to carry it through. They have withheld it all this time and done nothing because they have no money, but, immediately after that, the W. P. A. came along and said, "If we can get the Administrator to relinquish jurisdiction, we will go ahead with the project."

Mr. HAYDEN. In that case the Senator presents an argument that, to my mind, if I were administrator, would be conclusive.

There is no question at all, so far as the local contribution is concerned, that the local community has to put up less money on a W. P. A. project than it does on a public-works project, on which the contribution is 55 percent. For that reason, taking the country over, the public-works projects have been of a higher standard and of a more substantial character. There is no doubt about that at all. What I am trying to say to the Senator is that we have been traveling these two roads, and we have accomplished great good on both of them. I think it would be a mistake totally and completely to cut off any hope of any kind of public-works projects, to allow no further applications to be received, and end it now, in the absence of some certainty as to how the new plan is to work. For that reason I am inclined to support an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. LUCAS. That is exactly what the committee proposes to do, as I understand, under the joint resolution as reported. Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, we have not finished the consideration of the committee amendments. Is the amendment now offered an amendment to a committee amendment?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the committee amendment.

Mr. MEAD. It is a substitute for the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York offers an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the committee amendment, which the clerk will state.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In lieu of the matter in title II, beginning on page 35, proposed to be stricken out by the committee, it is proposed to insert the following:

TITLE II—PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRATION PROJECTS

SEC. 201. (a) In order to increase employment by providing for useful non-Federal public works projects of the kind and character which the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works has heretofore financed or aided in financing, pursuant to title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936, the Public Works Administration Extension Act of 1937, or the Public Works Administration Appropriation Act of 1938, there is hereby appropriated to the Public Works Administration (herein called the "Administration") in the Federal Works Agency, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $400,000,000, together with the balance of the appropriation made under section 201 of such act of 1938, not reserved for administrative expenses of the Administration and not now or hereafter expended pursuant to allotments heretofore made, which amounts shall be available until June 30, 1941, and may be expended by the Commissioner of Public Works (hereinafter referred to as the "Commissioner"), subject to the approval of the President, for (1) the making of loans or grants, or both, to States, Territories, possessions, political subdivisions, or other public bodies (herein called public agencies), or (2) the construction and leasing of projects, with or without the privilege of purchase, to any such public agencies.

(b) No amount available under this title shall be allotted for any project which, in the determination of the Commissioner, cannot be commenced prior to March 1, 1940, or the completion of which cannot be substantially accomplished prior to July 1, 1941: Provided, That this limitation upon time shall not apply to any project enjoined in any Federal or State court.

(c) Under the funds available in this title, no grant shall be made in excess of 45 percent of the cost of any project.

(d) No moneys for a non-Federal project shall be paid from the funds made available by this title to any public agency unless and until adequate provision has been made, or in the opinion of the Commissioner is assured, for financing such part of the entire cost thereof as is not to be supplied from Federal funds.

(e) Not more than $9,750,000 of the amount available under this title may be used for administrative expenses of the Administration during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, in connection with this title; such amount shall be available for administrative expenses thereof during such fiscal year for the purposes set forth for such Administration in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1940. The Commissioner shall reserve from the amount available under this title an adequate sum for administrative expenses of the Administration in connection with this title for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, subject to authorization hereafter by annual appropriation acts for the utilization thereof.

SEC. 202. Moneys realized from the sale of securities acquired by the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works or the Public Works Administration, or the proceeds of such securities, may be used by the Commissioner for the making of loans in connection with projects under this title, notwithstanding any previous limitation on the total amount of such securities or proceeds thereof that may be used for loan purposes.

SEC. 203. The Public Works Administration is hereby continued to the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, and is hereby authorized to continue to perform all functions which it is authorized to perform on July 1, 1939. On and after the effective date of reorganization plan No. 1 transmitted to the Congress by the President of the United States pursuant to the authority granted by the Reorganization Act of 1939, all laws, Executive orders, and other documents referring to the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works shall be deemed to refer to the Public Works Administration, and all laws, Executive orders, and other documents referring to the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works shall be deemed to refer to the Federal Works Administrator.

SEC. 204. Section 206 of the Public Works Administration Extension Act of 1937, as amended by the Public Works Administration Appropriation Act of 1938, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 206. No new applications for loans or grants for non-Federal projects shall be received by the Administration after September 30, 1939: Provided, That this section shall not apply to applications amendatory of applications for projects received prior to October 1, 1939, and such amendatory applications shall be confined to projects, which, in the determination of the Commissioner, can be started and completed within the time limits specified in section 201 (b) of the Public Works Administration Appropriation Act of 1939. That portion of section 201 (f) of the Public Works Administration Appropriation Act of 1938 which reads 'for the completion (except liquidation) of the activities of such Administration,' is hereby repealed."

SEC. 205. (a) There is hereby appropriated to the Administration, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to remain available until expended, the sum of $100,000,000, to be expended at the direction of the Administrator, for the making of allotments to Federal agencies for the financing of Federal construction projects (including projects for making surveys and maps) in continental United States outside of the District of Columbia, and the acquisition of land for sites therefor, such projects to be selected from (1) projects authorized by law and (2) projects for the enlargement, extension, or remodeling of existing Federal plants, institutions, or facilities.

(b) No Federal construction project, except flood control and water conservation or utilization projects now under actual construction, shall be undertaken or prosecuted with funds made available by this section unless and until moneys sufficient for the completion thereof shall have been irrevocably allocated or appropriated therefor.

SEC. 206. This title may be cited as the "Public Works Administration Appropriation Act of 1939."

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I desire to make an inquiry as to the legislative status.

The committee amendment which is before the Senate is simply an amendment to strike out certain sections of the bill. This is a substitute for the motion to strike out. In other words, it would take the place of it, and apparently would still leave in the bill the subject matter which the committee seeks to strike out, and would add to it other matter which is a duplication of much of that which is proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, certainly a motion to perfect a section would have precedence over one to strike it out entirely; and that is all this motion is.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the committee amendment is merely a motion to strike out. I do not know just how a motion to strike out can be perfected. That is, if a substitute for it is proposed, and the substitute carries, the motion to strike out falls.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is correct.

Mr. ADAMS. And the words which were to be stricken out remain.

Mr. HAYDEN. No; parts of them do.

Mr. ADAMS. They will all remain; and then we shall have added what is practically a duplication, except in the figures. All I want to do is to get the parliamentary situation straight.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado makes a parliamentary inquiry. A motion to strike out and insert has preference over a motion simply to strike out.

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion now submitted, in the opinion of the Chair, is a motion to strike out and insert. If that motion is lost, then the committee amendment to strike out will come up; but, under the rules of the Senate, when a motion is made to strike out, and a second motion is made to strike out and insert, the latter has precedence. If that motion is lost, then the original motion of the committee to strike out is in order.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I desire to make a suggestion to the Senators who are proposing the amendment.

This amendment is the most important amendment we have. There are five or six pages of it, and I think those of us who have just come from the committee ought to have a little time to study the amendment. Therefore, I suggest that we go back to the committee amendments which have been passed over, and dispose of those, which will afford us an opportunity to give some thought to this amendment.

Mr. MEAD. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that that course is agreeable to me.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask, then, that we return to the amendments which were temporarily passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to laying aside temporarily this amendment, and returning to those passed over? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The clerk will state the amendments passed over.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first amendment passed over is on page 1, changing the title of the act.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the first amendment is allied to the amendment that we passed over. I think it should go over until the Senate acts upon the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be again passed over. The clerk will state the next amendment passed over.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment passed over is on page 5, beginning in line 15, to insert the following:

(d) In administering the funds appropriated in this section, not to exceed three-fourths of the total cost of all projects hereafter undertaken within any State, Territory, possession, or the District of Columbia, with respect to which any such funds are used, shall be borne by the United States, and not less than one-fourth of such total cost shall be borne by the State and its political subdivisions, or by the Territory, possession, or the District of Columbia, as the case may be.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, this amendment is the one which makes a requirement of a 25-percent contribution by the sponsors, upon the basis that the sponsors within a State must average a 25-percent contribution.

Members of the Senate who were here in 1937 will remember that that was a subject of great controversy when the relief appropriation was made at that time. My recollection is that at that time the sponsors' contributions, as made during the previous year, amounted to about 15 or 16 percent. As a result of the arguments presented at that time, the Works Progress Administration has made a very definite effort and has achieved a certain amount of success in increasing the amount of the contributions.

For the fiscal year, ending on April 30 of this year, the amount was increased to 18.9 percent. For the 3 months ending April 30—that is, the last 3 months of that fiscal year—it was up to 20 percent. It is my understanding now that the contributions of the various States have amounted to 22.4 percent during the past 3-month period.

I should like, if I may, to insert in the RECORD at this point a statement of the contributions which have been made by the various States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

Expenditures on Works Progress Administration operated work projects, by regions and States and by sources of funds

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, to adopt this amendment and place upon the Commissioner of Work Projects the very arbitrary provision that he must require a 25-percent contribution averaged over the State and place in the hands of the General Accounting Office, as would naturally follow, the amendment which is proposed, the determination as to whether or not that rule had been complied with would make almost impossible the administration of the act.

There are some States in which, in a part of the State, the contribution is very low, and in other parts of the State it is high. It seems to me this amendment, which would simply bind the Commissioner without giving him any discretion, without giving him any right to determine as between the various projects, should be rejected by the Senate.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, when this matter was discussed yesterday, at the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], I stated that it was entirely agreeable to me to amend it so as to provide that the determination of compliance with the section should be left with the Commissioner to avoid the fear that the General Accounting Office might make the section difficult to administer. I therefore ask to have considered at this time an amendment to the committee amendment, which I send to the desk to be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, line 15, it is proposed to strike out "In" and in lieu thereof to insert "On and after November 1, 1939, in."

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, that is a perfecting amendment; and after discussing the matter with the Commissioner I think it is right that this section should not become operative until November 1. At this time the average contributions are 22½ percent. It is the statement of the Commissioner that by December he is convinced that the average contribution will be 25 percent. This amendment, therefore, would only incorporate in the law that which the Commissioner says he expects to be able to comply with by December 1.

The Commissioner, however, was interested in the matter suggested by the Senator from Kentucky.

Before discussing the matter further, I ask for a vote upon my amendment perfecting the committee amendment.

Mr. TAFT and Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina a question.

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. GREEN. In addition to the change suggested by the Senator from South Carolina, should there not be a change in line 17, substituting "thereafter" for "hereafter"?

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Rhode Island is correct. I ask to modify the amendment by changing "hereafter" to "thereafter."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President—

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Ohio if he will not permit me to perfect the amendment and then discuss it.

Mr. TAFT. Yes. I want to suggest, however, that the date be made January 1, 1940, instead of November 1939; and I desire to state my reasons.

Mr. BYRNES. The Commissioner states that in December he will have arrived at the 75-25 basis. I will agree to accept the Senator's amendment, and make the effective date January 1 instead of November 1.

Mr. TAFT. That is all I desire.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina a question regarding the effective date. Does the amendment include projects which have been approved, or projects to be approved after this date?

Mr. BYRNES. "Thereafter," as the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] suggested.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. So that a project approved the day before the effective date, even though it might not be finished, would be included?

Mr. BYRNES. I will say to the Senator that the amendment does not affect individual projects at all. The amendment simply says that the total average contributions from a State after January 1 shall be, under the regulations adopted by the Commissioner, 25 percent—that is all—but not the individual projects.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. What is to be done with all the projects within a State if they do not measure up to that requirement? Are they to be abandoned?

Mr. BYRNES. Oh, no. The amendment merely says that in the case of all projects which are thereafter undertaken there shall be required from the State an amount which will make the average contribution 25 percent.

For instance, the contributions in the State of Colorado now are above 25 percent. This amendment would provide that they must be at least 25 percent; not that the authorities would demand less, but that the total contributions from Colorado should be at least 25 percent. As far back as April the contributions from Colorado were 24.6 percent. It does not mean an individual project. In the case of one project the Administrator can make it 30; in the case of another, 20.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It means all the projects in the State.

Mr. BYRNES. The total; yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. After all the projects in the State have been approved and accepted and are under way on January 1, or the effective date, whenever the amendment goes into effect, they all must be changed, and proceed on a different base altogether.

Mr. BYRNES. No; they would not. After January 1, in administering the fund under rules and regulations—which language is contained in an amendment I wish to offer, and which will be read in a few minutes—the Administrator would make the determination as to the total contributions on all projects in the State undertaken after January 1.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Projects undertaken after that date?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. On projects under way after that date?

Mr. BYRNES. No projects undertaken thereafter.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is the answer to my question.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. In my State, where it is found impossible to make an average sponsoring contribution of 25 percent, what would happen?

Mr. BYRNES. The amendment merely provides that thereafter the State administrator would be instructed to require of the State such contributions on all projects as would make 25 percent. That does not mean money. For the information of the Senator I will state that less than 5 percent of the sponsors' contributions are money. It represents equipment, rental of equipment, the furnishing of supervisory services. After that it would require the total in any State to be 25 percent.

Mr. MURRAY. Is it not true that the Administration has constantly raised the amount of sponsoring contributions throughout the country?

Mr. BYRNES. Not exactly. What has occurred is this: It was up as high as 27 percent, and last year it was down somewhat. Now, as I have stated, it is 22½ percent. It varies in the different States. In Idaho it is about the highest.

Mr. MURRAY. It varies according to the economic conditions in each State?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes. In Ohio it is 11 percent; in Idaho it is about 30 percent; in Mississippi it is 30 percent; in Pennsylvania it is about 10 percent. It depends on conditions. The Administrator does not require States such as Pennsylvania and Ohio to put up as much as States such as Idaho and Mississippi. Instead of having it left to discretion, in the haphazard manner as it is at present, it would be provided for in the law. What would happen would be that the Administrator would be saved much trouble. The Administrator would have the opportunity to say "It is the law, and therefore I must try to secure the required percentage."

Mr. MURRAY. Inasmuch as the communities have advanced their contributions, and raised them up to the figure of 22½ percent, does not the Senator think it would work a great hardship on the country suddenly to advance the figure to 25 percent, especially in view of the continuance of the economic conditions which have been prevailing?

Mr. BYRNES. The best answer, in the first place, is that it is not going to be done suddenly. In the second place, the Commissioner says he is going to have it done by December, and this would not require it before January.

Mr. MURRAY. My information is that in many of the communities it is going to be absolutely impossible for them to make further contributions to the sponsoring funds, that is to say, increase them any further; that they have reached the point where they cannot possibly go any further.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, it comes to this: It depends on the voice of the Administrator and his persuasiveness. In some States, where there are high-powered salesmen with affidavit faces, they can, with tears in their voices, picture conditions so terrible that they can "get by" by putting up 10 percent. When they get to the Senator's State, where they have no man selected for the purpose working on this particular subject, and who does not present the case in so tearful a manner, they make it put up 30 percent.

The Commissioner will now have the advantage of saying, "The policy has been stated, and I think for the State at large you ought to put up this amount." It does not affect every community. If there is a poor community, it can put up 10 percent.

Mr. MURRAY. I am not speaking of my own State. In my State we have constantly increased the sponsoring contribution, and have succeeded in getting it up to a very high figure.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator is speaking of the low-percent-age States, such as Pennsylvania and Ohio.

Mr. MURRAY. Yes; some of the large States, or the conditions reflected in the testimony submitted by the mayors of New York and Cleveland and Boston.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator overlooks entirely the provisions of the amendment, because the condition in one city does not affect the situation. There was a time when New York City did not want to put up more than one-half of 1 percent. Fortunately that time has passed, and, by reason, I think, in great measure, of the action of the Senate committee, it is now putting up more than 25 percent, so that it does not affect New York City at all.

Mr. MURRAY. My information is that the administration of the W. P. A. is going to find it impossible, as the result of this amendment, if it is put into operation, to carry out the program.

Mr. BYRNES. I discussed the matter with the Commissioner this morning, and that is not his view of what would happen if the amendment I am about to submit should be adopted. The amendment reads:

The facts constituting compliance with the requirements of this subsection shall be determined by the Commissioner, and his determination, made in conformity with rules and regulations prescribed by him, shall be final and conclusive.

That is the language used in one or two agricultural acts where the question of fact is to be determined, and to avoid conflicts between the General Accounting Office and the Department. If this amendment shall be adopted—and I hope it will be—the Commissioner says he will have no trouble in administering the act. Without it, he would have.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the Senator knows I am entirely in sympathy with his efforts, which have extended over a long period of time, in an attempt to work out some definite rule. As I listened to the Senator discussing what we know to be a fact—that people come from various towns and States and municipalities, high-powered salesmen, with the affidavit face, as the Senator said—that is true, and that is happening all over the country—I was just wondering whether we might be shifting responsibility within the State to the communities in the State, where the high-powered salesman with the affidavit face in the community able to put up the money does his work, while in a poorer community there is no one to represent them, and they will be imposed on for a higher sponsorship contribution. Has the Senator thought of that?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes, because in every State necessarily there is a different sponsoring contribution. The bill provides that the Commissioner shall endeavor to act equitably as between communities, and the determination in the State must be left, of course, to the State Administrator. There can be no way of avoiding that. The small community, having no one to represent the sponsor, is not as effective as is the representative of a large city. But the best we can do is to provide for the effect as to States. I know it will be a step forward.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the Senator's perfecting amendment to do only with the effective date of the act, or does it affect its provisions?

Mr. BYRNES. Not only that, but it gives to the Commissioner, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, the power to determine compliance, in order to avoid any question which the General Accounting Office might raise.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, following the remarks of the Senator from New Mexico, and in keeping with his inquiry, is it not true that the 25 percent applies to the State?

Mr. BYRNES. That is correct.

Mr. McCARRAN. Following that thought, the Administrator may reduce the percentage of contribution in one community within a State, but that would necessarily entail raising the contribution to other communities, because the general average over the whole State must be 25 percent?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes. Let me show how it would work in the Senator's State. As far back as April they were demanding of Nevada 34 percent.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct.

Mr. BYRNES. For the Nation they were demanding 22 percent. Nevada was asked to pay 12 percent more than the general average, and I think more than any other State in the Union.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct.

Mr. BYRNES. The amendment would not disturb that situation anyway, because in the State of Nevada the Administrator, of course, would have the determination as between the communities in Nevada. It would not affect that situation.

Mr. McCARRAN. It would not reduce the contribution we have been making.

Mr. BYRNES. No.

Mr. McCARRAN. In other words, the minimum must be 25 percent.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; but the law does not say how high it can be made.

Mr. McCARRAN. With reference to the other matter raised by the question of the Senator from New Mexico, suppose, we will say, one community in Nevada, by its persuasiveness, was able to get away with a 10-percent contribution. Then the Administrator could raise the contributions of other communities as they applied for projects so as to make a level of 25 percent at least. Is not that true?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes. Of course, in the State of Nevada it would not affect the matter at all, because the contribution of that State is put so high.

Mr. McCARRAN. It is too high now.

Mr. BYRNES. The highest in the Union. I suppose that is a tribute to the wealth of Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes; and it is a tribute to the patriotism of Nevada. We do not want to drain the Federal Treasury any more than we have to.

Mr. BYRNES. I think that is the best illustration that could be given. It is too high. They ask 34 percent from Nevada, and 10 percent from another State.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am very glad to have the Senator from South Carolina say it is too high, and I hope his statement will be observed.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I have sent to the desk, and which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to insert on page 5, line 23, after the words "may be" and the period, the following:

The facts constituting compliance with the requirements of this subsection shall be determined by the Commissioner and his determination made in conformity with rules and regulations prescribed by him shall be final and conclusive.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I wish to address myself to the pending amendment. It seems to me there will be two or three inevitable effects, even when the amendment is perfected as the Senator from South Carolina proposes to perfect it. In the first place the amendment would make it impossible in the future to have any Federal projects. Every project would have to be a State project, because every State would have to put up at least 25 percent of the cost of the project constructed within the State.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, there was no such intent, and because it has been suggested that such a construction might be placed upon it as the Senator from Florida has placed upon it, I intend to amend by inserting "non-Federal." It was suggested to me to make it specifically "non-Federal." The word "non" should be inserted in the language.

Mr. PEPPER. That would be a very helpful amendment. I am glad the Senator from South Carolina proposes to make that change, so that it will be possible hereafter to continue Federal projects.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the provision would have no effect whatever upon Federal projects.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I will say that the next vice which I think the amendment in any form has is that it lays down a rule of rigidity rather than a flexible rule. Heretofore the Administrator has been working toward a satisfactory relationship between the Federal and the State contributions, and the figures which have just been presented show that he has done a good job, and constantly has been requiring a larger contribution from the States and the sponsors of the several projects. Therefore, I feel that to lay down a rigid requirement—that is to say, that every State must contribute a minimum of 25 percent—would impair the quality of flexibility which I believe a program of this sort must have to be effective.

In my State, in spite of the fact that, according to the figures presented, we paid 25 percent, so that on the face of it we would suffer no detriment by the adoption of the amendment, yet I am told from reliable sources in the administration in my State that four-fifths of our projects, which have already been approved by the President and which are ready for execution, would be handicapped or would be retarded if the provision in question were in effect.

I know that the Senator from South Carolina proposes to change the language so that it will not restrict individual projects; but it restricts the whole State. If four-fifths of the projects are below the 25-percent minimum, the other one-fifth will have to be high enough to bring the whole contribution of the State up to the level of 25 percent.

Mr. BYRNES. If I understood the Senator correctly, he said the provision would apply to projects now under construction. That would not be so, by reason of the change of the word "hereafter" to "thereafter."

Mr. PEPPER. I mean to say that the rule would apply to four-fifths of the projects that have already been approved by the President but upon which construction has not yet begun.

Mr. President, the determination of the amount of a State's contribution should be based on the nature of the project. In my State the State university is getting some very fine dormitories and university buildings under the W. P. A. program. It is a permanent construction, which will be worth something next year, 10 years, and 25 years from now. That kind of construction should be encouraged and not discouraged. On such projects an average of 50 percent has to be put up in my State. Of course, that makes the contribution high. So the effect of the amendment would be to encourage the cheaper projects and the less-permanent projects at the expense of the permanent and the valuable projects which would stand year after year as monuments to the value of the program.

I hope, therefore, that the amendment in any form will not be agreed to, because experience does not show necessity for it.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I should like to read into the Record two telegrams, one from the mayor of Cleveland and another from the mayor of Toledo, regarding the proposed amendment. I read first the telegram from Mayor Burton, of Cleveland:

Understand proposed Senate amendment to W. P. A. appropriation bill provides for 25-percent contribution from local subdivisions to cost of projects. Respectfully submit that provision requiring flat or arbitrary percentage contribution from local governments is extremely unwise because of various types of projects now in operation in different sections of country. No subdivision in Greater Cleveland is able to meet this proposed requirement.

I now read a telegram from the city manager of Toledo:

Regarding 25-percent local contribution W. P. A. projects, inability to raise funds thus required would mean reduction of available man-months work from present 120,000 to 40,000 for Government fiscal year 1940. This would mean lay-off 6,666 men immediately, most of whom would go on relief, for which our funds are entirely inadequate.

Mr. President, it happens that Ohio is one of the States in which the W. P. A. needs are the largest, and in which the State contribution is the smallest on a percentage basis. If Senators will examine the figures submitted by the Senator from Washington, they will see that in Ohio the contribution was 12.3 percent last year, and, instead of improving this year under the Administrator's assistance, it is lower. It is now 11½ percent. That is not because Ohio does not contribute a very substantial sum. I think if Senators will consider the total sum contributed, over twenty-three million, for sponsors' shares of these projects they will find that, in proportion to population, that is as large a percentage as any State puts up, or substantially the same as any State puts up. The difficulty is that the unemployment in Ohio is greater. That is why it seems to me that a 25-percent flat percentage is not a fair percentage to require.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The telegrams read by the Senator indicate that the mayors of those two cities are under the impression that the 25-percent limitation applies to local projects. Of course, it does not. It is the average for the State. A local project may not have more than 10 percent or 15 percent local contribution, but some other project would have to go above 25 percent in order to make the average 25 percent.

Mr. TAFT. How is the State going to apportion the 25 percent to one city and not to another city? How will the authorities determine what the percentage shall be? Or must we call the legislature together before the 1st of January in order to provide a new allotment of State funds to municipalities and counties in Ohio?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is up to the administrator of the W. P. A. in the State, and not up to the legislature. The legislature does not as a rule appropriate moneys to match Federal funds. They are put up largely by local communities.

Mr. TAFT. Our legislature, however, is attempting to work out that problem and contribute some part of the money from the State. Other parts come from localities.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not wish to draw any invidious comparison, because there may be some States whose percentage is lower than that of Ohio. I understand the average in Ohio is about 11 percent.

Mr. TAFT. Eleven and one-half percent.

Mr. BARKLEY. Whereas the average in the whole country is 23 percent.

Mr. TAFT. The only reason I can see why we have a larger percentage of W. P. A. in Ohio is because there is more unemployment in Ohio. The reason the percentage is low is not because the contribution of the State is small, but it is because of the tremendous need for W. P. A. work in the State of Ohio.

Mr. BARKLEY. That would be determined on the basis of the aggregate of the contributions made by the local communities.

Mr. TAFT. I said before the Senator came into the Senate Chamber that Ohio contributed $24,000,000 during the last fiscal year. Compared to Illinois, for instance, which contributed $32,000,000, it is approximately the same on the basis of population. Compared to $44,000,000 contributed by New York it is almost exactly the same percentage.

Our contribution has been approximately as large as that of any other State in the United States. The difficulty is that the unemployment is so great. I do not know why that is. I have not been able to discover why we should be the prize unemployment State, but apparently we are. Apparently the city of Cleveland has the highest percentage of unemployment of any city in the United States.

Mr. President, I can think of no reason why every State should be treated the same, why every State should be required to put up 25 percent. Let one State put up 25 percent and another State put up 10 percent because of different needs. But now there must be a flat 25 percent. What reason is there to suppose that every State is in the same position from the standpoint of unemployment? In addition to W. P. A., the actual money spent on direct relief in Ohio is in percentage as high or higher than in any other State.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator has mentioned the aggregate amount contributed by Illinois and New York. What is the percentage of contribution locally to the projects?

Mr. TAFT. In Illinois it is 17.7 percent and in New York it is about 19 percent. But there are more people on W. P. A. today and more people unemployed in the State of Ohio than in the State of New York or in the State of Illinois or in the State of Pennsylvania, any one of which has a great deal larger population than has the State of Ohio.

Mr. BARKLEY. What is the contribution locally in Pennsylvania?

Mr. TAFT. Fourteen and seven-tenths percent.

Mr. BARKLEY. With States such as Illinois, Ohio, New York, and Pennsylvania contributing from 11 to 19 percent locally, it must be true that many other States are contributing a great deal more than 23 percent in order to make the average for the whole country 23 percent.

Mr. TAFT. That is true. It is also true, as was pointed out by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], that where unemployment is very heavy and there is the necessity of providing people with sufficient money to live on the money must be made to go further. There must be fewer permanent projects and more digging and other work which provides employment for more persons. Consequently, it is undoubtedly true that the type of projects in the States where unemployment is heavy is not so permanent as in States which contribute more money. The more permanent the project, I think, the more reason there is to ask the State to contribute something to the project; but the justification for relief is to prevent starvation. Relief is an absolute necessity. It is not fundamentally a Federal project at all. It is a necessity; and if the necessity is greater in one place than in another, I do not see why we should require any arbitrary percentage.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I think the pending amendments to the amendment are an improvement upon the report of the committee. As I understood the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], he stated that the Administrator had advised him that under the provisions of the committee amendment as amended—in case his pending amendment is adopted—the Administrator could administer these provisions. However, I assume that his statement relates primarily to the question of whether or not it is feasible and practicable from the Administrator's standpoint for him to enforce the requirement. I take it he did not intend by that statement to indicate that the Administrator felt that the provision suggested would be workable so far as the over-all picture of W. P. A. operation is concerned.

Mr. President, I cannot conceive how the 25-percent average sponsor's contribution per State can operate in any way except to impede the program. I think we must bear in mind that the employment of millions of persons is a going operation, scattered all over the United States in practically every community. It is an operation which requires the employment of individuals upon projects if they are to receive the wages which stand between them and destitution.

Mr. President, I am not an expert on the administration of the W. P. A. so far as its technical details are concerned, but it seems to me perfectly clear from the standpoint of a layman that if we lay down an arbitrary requirement of a 25-percent average it will inevitably result in delay in the approval of projects, because the Administration would have to keep a weekly or monthly average—perhaps a daily average—of sponsors' contributions within a State. When a large municipality, for example, puts forward a project and needs that project approved in order that the people who are certified for employment may be transferred to the new project from a project which is coming to completion, it will be necessary, as I see it, for the Administrator to weigh the contribution for the new project as against the State average. Often there may be a situation in which it will be necessary to delay the approval of a project which falls below the 25-percent requirement in order that some community remote from the particular project under consideration may be induced to sponsor a project which will be sufficiently above the 25-percent average so that the project in the first community may be approved and the average maintained.

Furthermore, Mr. President, I think the point made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] is a sound one. We must remember that urban and industrial communities, as well as the Federal Government, have been carrying a very heavy financial burden over the long economic crisis. I know that in my own State there are industrial communities which are reaching the end of their financial ability, either through taxation or by borrowing, to provide sponsorship in any such proportion as 25 percent. The average of my own State in the average table happens to be 19.1, but that does not mean that some industrial communities where unemployment has been a terrific burden ever since 1929 are not below the 19.1 percentage in providing their share of sponsorship.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that from any aspect we consider the amendment in its entirety, if it shall be adopted we shall impose a very difficult administrative problem. We shall be endangering the continuity of employment, which is so essential for those who need work; and all we shall gain, according to the sponsors of the amendment, is an increase of 3 percent in sponsors' contributions over the present national average.

I submit, Mr. President, that under those circumstances, and in view of the varying incidence of unemployment among industrial communities, we should not fix an arbitrary standard of this kind. I think all will agree that the Works Progress Administration has been bringing all possible pressure upon the communities to increase their percentage of sponsorship; and the record will show, if Senators will take the trouble to examine it, that so far as the Nation as a whole is concerned there has been a constant increase in the contributions of sponsors of W. P. A. programs.

In addition, Mr. President, we must take into consideration the fact that so far as the problem of direct relief is concerned the Federal Government has withdrawn any assistance to the localities, counties, and States. So, in addition to what the localities are putting up in the way of sponsor contributions for W. P. A. projects, they are carrying a tremendous financial burden in the way of meeting, without Federal assistance, the staggering burden of direct relief for unemployables and for those employables who have never been taken on by the W. P. A., although many of them have been certified for months and months as being eligible for such employment.

So I plead with the Senate to reject this amendment and not to impose the difficult administrative problem which I venture to predict, if the amendment is adopted, will slow up the approval of projects in large urban communities to the point where the entire functioning of the W. P. A. program may be endangered, with the result that an increasing load will be dumped upon the communities for the local taxpayers to carry largely through property taxes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I feel obligated to read a telegram which was not sent directly to me, but was sent to the majority leader, a copy of which was transmitted to me by Mayor LaGuardia, in reference to the same question which is now under consideration. I read the telegram:

NEW YORK, N. Y., June 27, 1939.

HON. ROBERT F. WAGNER,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

I have sent the following telegram to Senator BARKLEY:

"W. P. A. appropriation bill as reported will practically make all worth-while projects in cities impossible. Many municipalities simply cannot comply with sponsorship requirements as now provided in committee bill. Art and theater projects cannot be locally sponsored for many reasons well known to committee. Purpose of W. P. A. is to provide work. The pending bill will not do it in its present form. I am speaking for all cities. Do not forsake unemployed now."

F. H. LA GUARDIA, Mayor.

The telegram carries out the thought which has been so ably expressed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. I wish to join with those who are urging the rejection of the amendment, because I think the basis of requiring a State to pay an inflexible sum of 25 percent, irrespective of the needs of the particular State, is not in accordance with the philosophy of the W. P. A.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, confirming what the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] says, I have received several similar messages from the mayor of Boston. I find that the general sentiment of officials of the larger cities in the country is that the suggested provision would prove very burdensome. A table which was called to my attention yesterday indicates that the percentage of contributions made in the State of Massachusetts last year was 13 percent. A jump to 25 percent would be extremely burdensome to municipalities which are already overburdened with taxes and which already have a very heavy relief load.

Mr. WAGNER. I will say, Mr. President, that I happened to be present in the Appropriations Committee when the mayor of Boston testified and explained to the committee the difficulties under which he is now laboring. I am not pleading especially for New York, for New York may be able to carry the burden; I do not know; but in some of the other communities such as Boston, in view of the evidence the mayors gave to the committee, how they can possibly contribute 25 percent I do not know. I think that statement will apply to many other communities.

If this inflexible imposition is to be written into the bill, it will be exceedingly burdensome, and will simply mean that many of those now employed will be absolutely uncared for.

I was one of those who were originally associated with the legislation to provide relief, together with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and the late Senator Costigan, of Colorado. That was during the Hoover administration when relief legislation was first proposed. Then we did not divide the money so much for each State and provide that each State should contribute so much. We insisted, as the Congress insisted, that the money should be provided where it was needed.

Now, unfortunately, some States are suffering more than others. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] asserted a few moments ago that his State is suffering from unemployment to a greater extent perhaps according to population than is any other State in the Union. It would be unfortunate if that State, because of the tremendous unemployment there, and the need that exists there, was not able to make the contribution of 25 percent throughout the State. It would simply mean that they could not sponsor projects. What the outcome would be, I cannot foresee, unless they should put all the unemployed upon relief, and that would be a burden the State could not carry, for it is necessary to have the cooperation of the Federal Government.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to sustain what he is saying to the extent of observing that the mayor of Detroit—and I think the mayor of every other industrial city in Michigan—testified precisely as the Senator from New York has stated? I therefore want to join with him in the statement he is making.

Mr. WAGNER. I thank the Senator very much. What I am attempting to urge is that we should not attempt to change the philosophy of the law. It was contemplated that aid should be given according to need. Now it is proposed, irrespective of need, that the States shall be compelled to contribute 25 percent, and if they do not do so they cannot get any aid from the Government at all. I think it would be a very risky proposition, and I hope it will be rejected.

OBLIGATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES AS SECURITY FOR FEDERAL RESERVE NOTES

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to take from the calendar and to have considered at this time a bill reported by the Banking and Currency Committee at the request of the Federal Reserve Board. The bill permits for 2 years longer the use of United States bonds as security for rediscount at the Federal Reserve banks. It has to pass before Friday night; otherwise, the rediscounting of the banks will be greatly retarded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state by title the bill referred to by the Senator from Virginia.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 2618) to extend the period during which direct obligations of the United States may be used as collateral security for Federal Reserve notes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second paragraph of section 16 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is hereby amended by striking therefrom the words "until June 30, 1939," and by inserting in lieu thereof the words "until June 30, 1941."

REGULATION OF COMMERCE IN PETROLEUM AND ITS PRODUCTS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1302) to make permanently effective the act entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes," approved February 22, 1935, as amended, and for other purposes, which were, on page 1, to strike out line 8 and insert:

amended by the act approved June 14, 1937 (50 Stat. 257), is further amended so as to read:

"Sec. 13. This act shall cease to be in effect on June 30, 1942."

On page 2, to strike out lines 1 to 18, inclusive; and to amend the title so as to read: "An act to continue in effect until June 30, 1942, the act entitled 'An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes,' approved February 22, 1935, as amended."

Mr. CONNALLY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 326) making appropriations for work relief, relief, and to increase employment by providing loans and grants for public-works projects, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I will take a moment of the time of the Senate, if I may, to call attention to a possibility that the pending legislation may not be passed in time to have the President sign it before the expiration of the present law. That situation is causing great worry to millions of W. P. A. workers throughout the country. In addition there are some further worries. In the Works Progress Administration there are a great many employees who have accumulated leave, which, technically, will expire and be wiped out if the pending bill shall not be enacted before Friday night.

So, if it is in order, and if it is not out of order, I ask unanimous consent that I may now introduce a joint resolution which, if adopted, would continue the functions of these agencies in the event that the pending measure should not be passed. I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in that connection I will say to the Senator, if he will yield, that I have conferred with the leaders of the other branch of Congress in respect to the matter to which he refers. In the event that it becomes apparent that the pending bill cannot be enacted and signed by the President by Friday night, a joint resolution has already been drawn and is ready to be introduced and passed, if it becomes necessary. However, we are all hoping it will not become necessary, because if we pass a joint resolution continuing these agencies for another month or 2 months or 6 weeks or even 2 weeks, the Senator realizes that then we may relax our efforts to secure the passage of the pending measure. It is not desirable to pass a continuing resolution unless it is absolutely necessary in order that there may be no lapse of time after midnight on Friday. I think the chances are probably 99 to 1 that we will be able to have the pending measure enacted and signed by the President before Friday night.

Mr. MALONEY. I am very hopeful that the majority leader is correct in his view, and I am quite in accord with what he says. My only interest in the matter was in having a resolution before the Appropriations Committee in the event it was necessary. I shall be guided entirely by the suggestion of the majority leader.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry as to legislative procedure? Can the Senate initiate such a resolution or should it not come from the other House?

Mr. MALONEY. I think we can initiate it, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is no question that the Senate can initiate such a resolution if the law in question is not a tax measure, in which event the other House must initiate it.

Mr. ADAMS. Legally, of course, the Senator is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. But customarily the House does originate resolutions of this kind, and I will say to both Senators it is already understood that, if it becomes necessary, a resolution will be thus originated in the other House.

Mr. MALONEY. I should like to ask the majority leader now what he would prefer I do? Does he desire that I withdraw the resolution?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; it is all right. Of course the Senator may introduce it and have it referred to the Committee on Appropriations if he so desires.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the joint resolution will be received and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 162) continuing the functions of the Works Progress Administration and certain other agencies beyond June 30, 1939, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire, in connection with the statement I made a few moments ago, to invite the attention of the Senate to page 26 of the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives on House Joint Resolution 83. A table appears on that page which is designated as table 8, which purports to set forth, by States and by sources of funds, the expenditures on Works Progress Administration operated projects through November 30, 1938.

As I scan through this table, I note that approximately 38 States, 2 or 3 of them being very close to a 25-percent contribution, will have an increase in their contributions, and about 10 States will probably have a reduction.

The contributions made by the States vary from 11, 12, and 13 percent to as high as 30 percent. It would seem to indicate that some of the States will have a very substantial increase in their contributions.

I ask that this table be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I have received telegrams from the mayors of the largest cities in the State of Pennsylvania with reference to the pending amendment. The cities include Philadelphia, Reading, Erie, and Pittsburgh. I desire to read to the Senate a telegram I received this morning from the mayor of the city of Pittsburgh. It is addressed to me, and reads as follows:

PITTSBURGH, PA., June 27, 1939.

HON. JAMES J. DAVIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The new W. P. A. bill as reported by your Senate subcommittee is a great improvement over the House bill, but one feature is included which I hope you will use your best efforts to remove from the final enactment. That is the arbitrary setting up of a 25-percent sponsor's contribution on all projects, which the conference of mayors informs me is provided for in the committee's report. There are a great many very useful W. P. A. projects which require a sponsor's contribution of much less than this amount, particularly grading and drainage jobs on streets and playgrounds which constitute the bulk of the city of Pittsburgh's W. P. A. program. I think I can fairly say that if the 25-percent year-round average is included in the bill, that the city of Pittsburgh will be forced to cut very sharply the number of W. P. A. projects which it sponsors and thus the total number of employees on W. P. A. here will be much reduced.

Our financial condition is such that we cannot afford to spend more than $100,000 a month for the sponsorship of W. P. A. projects. We have averaged, roughly, 10 to 12 percent of Federal W. P. A. expenditures and so it is easy to see that if the figure is moved up to 25 percent that the W. P. A. employment on city-sponsored projects will be cut in half or more.

I sincerely hope that in view of this condition confronting your home city that you will do everything within your power to remove this crippling restriction.

CORNELIUS D. SCULLY,
Mayor, City of Pittsburgh.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the first amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] to the committee amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. As I understand, that is the amendment postponing the time when the provision is to take effect?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's statement is correct. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the second amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 5, line 17, after the word "projects", it is proposed to strike out the word "hereafter" and insert "thereafter."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 5, line 23, after the period, it is also proposed to insert the following new sentence:

The facts constituting compliance with the requirements of this subsection shall be determined by the Commissioner, and his determination, made in conformity with rules and regulations prescribed by him, shall be final and conclusive.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I desire to be sure that I understand this matter. I think perhaps there is a little confusion on the subject in the minds of other Senators also.

On page 16, in section 11, provision is made for the Commissioner to allocate not to exceed $50,000,000 to other Federal agencies for certain purposes there prescribed. That is not dissimilar from the provisions which have been made in all the other relief measures, is it? I address my question to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BYRNES. No; it is practically the same.

Mr. PEPPER. That is the usual provision?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. The next question is, under the existing law it has been possible to have a category of projects to be called Federal projects; that is to say, projects which might be sponsored by the Works Progress Administration alone, without any cosponsor or joint sponsor. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator should amend the amendment he has been discussing and let the 25-percent provision apply only to non-Federal projects, I wish to know whether it would be possible in the future for the W. P. A. to sponsor a project which perhaps would require a cosponsor, but with respect to which the amount to be contributed by the cosponsor should not be prescribed by law or regulation. Would that be possible?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, if I understand what the Senator has in mind, it has reference, of course, to section 25 of the joint resolution.

Mr. PEPPER. That is correct.

Mr. BYRNES. I think the specific prohibition in that section, if it remains, would prevent the operation of any project sponsored solely by the Works Progress Administration.

Mr. PEPPER. But the thing I am interested to know is this: Suppose the W. P. A. says, "We will sponsor an arts program. That is to say, we are willing to sponsor it if there will be a cosponsor with us." May not the two or the three, or whatever number may be involved, sponsor that project without its being subject to the 25-percent provision on the previous page?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I do not think so. I think the art projects the Senator has in mind would be on the same basis as all other projects, and that if such a project were desired by the city of Jacksonville, say, Jacksonville would have to sponsor it. It is true that the representative of the Mayors' Conference apparently does not understand this amendment, and he speaks of the individual contributions. The city of Jacksonville could sponsor an art project, and, if the Administrator approved it, could put up 5 percent, or could put up the equivalent of 5 percent—because, in the history of these things, less than 5 percent is now put up—and as long as the State of Florida was putting up 25 percent, as it is now putting up 25 percent, it could go ahead.

Mr. PEPPER. But there is a difference between the city of Jacksonville, Fla., on the one hand, initiating an arts project or any other kind of a project, enlisting the approval of the W. P. A., getting the W. P. A. contribution to be applied and having the project constructed, and on the other hand, the W. P. A. initiating a program or project of broad application, and, before it can operate in any State, requiring that the State shall cooperate in a certain degree with the program.

Mr. BYRNES. There certainly is; but I submit to the Senator that the only way in which he will remedy the situation to which he refers is by striking out the three lines on page 29. So long as those three lines remain in the joint resolution, providing that no funds are available for any project sponsored by W. P. A., it could not be done.

Mr. PEPPER. I desire to suggest a technical disagreement with the Senator from South Carolina as to that interpretation of the language. If the project were sponsored solely by the Works Progress Administration, without any cosponsor, that would be true; but the language which the joint resolution already carries says that none of these funds shall be available for projects which are sponsored solely by the W. P. A.

Mr. BYRNES. Let us see if the Senator and I cannot agree. If a project is not sponsored solely by the W. P. A., then the funds in this joint resolution are made available—there is not any question about that—regardless of whether the sponsor is the city, the county, or the State. There is no question about that.

Mr. PEPPER. That is my interpretation. I am very much interested in this subject, and I want to be sure that that interpretation is the one which is understood by the Senate when this amendment is adopted, if it is adopted.

Mr. BYRNES. I do not think there is any question about that; but whenever we reach that stage in the consideration of the joint resolution I shall be glad to express my view about the matter. Apparently some Members are opposing the provision who are opposed to any art project or theater project, and some Members are in favor of Federal projects without any contribution or sponsorship at all; and that is a very controversial matter. As I see it, however, it would not be affected by the pending amendment.

Mr. PEPPER. I think if the Senator should perfect his amendment by putting in the words "non-Federal," it would make the matter clear.

Mr. BYRNES. As I have stated heretofore, and stated to the Senator from Florida, that was my interpretation of the amendment, and I thought I asked to modify the amendment some time ago by inserting the word "non-Federal." Certainly I intended to do so.

Mr. PEPPER. On page 5?

Mr. BYRNES. On Page 5, line 16, after the word "all," to insert "non-Federal."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is modified as requested by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. PEPPER. The word "Federal" there is construed to mean a project sponsored solely by the Federal Government?

Mr. BYRNES. That is the way it always has been construed.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, may I ask a question at that point? I am very much interested in this matter, and I should not want to have any confusion afterward. Providing the requirement for a 25-percent contribution remains in the legislation as it now stands, may a project be sponsored by the W. P. A. jointly with some local authority?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; there would be no change in that respect. When the Senator refers to a project being sponsored jointly, I assume that he means in the same manner in which those matters are now conducted.

Mr. WAGNER. There are certain projects which the W. P. A. may itself conduct without any sponsorship from any locality.

Mr. BYRNES. That is correct. That is prohibited by the language on page 25.

Mr. WAGNER. That cannot be done if the joint resolution is passed as it now stands. Is that correct?

Mr. BYRNES. If it is passed with the section on page 25, it could not be done.

Mr. WAGNER. So if a sponsorship should come from a locality, assuming it to be an art project, would it nevertheless be in the classification of non-Federal projects?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; it would have to be.

Mr. WAGNER. I hope the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] is listening to this discussion, because I do not want him to be confused.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Florida, as I understand, is not confused about it. Any project that is sponsored by a State or any subdivision of a State is not a Federal project.

Mr. WAGNER. It is not a Federal project?

Mr. BYRNES. It is a non-Federal project.

Mr. WAGNER. Under this legislation as it now stands, can we have a purely Federal project?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; of the character described in the $50,000,000 section, limited to Federal agencies.

Mr. WAGNER. That is limited to certain Federal agencies?

Mr. BYRNES. That is correct, and that is all.

Mr. WAGNER. That could not include art projects?

Mr. BYRNES. It could not as I interpret it. I talked to the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] about the matter a moment ago. It could not be done unless the President allotted to some agency of the Government some department's money for that purpose.

Mr. WAGNER. Some other agency than W. P. A.?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. So that unless section 25 is amended that would be the construction?

Mr. BYRNES. I do not think there is any doubt at all about it, as long as that specific proposition remains in the joint resolution.

Mr. WAGNER. Then such a project would come within the 25-percent requirement?

Mr. BYRNES. It would be on the same footing as all other projects.

Mr. President, I regret very much that I cannot get some features of this matter over to the Mayors' Conference, and, I fear, to some of my colleagues. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] read a telegram from the mayor of Cleveland which clearly indicates that the mayor has read some newspaper statement misleading in character. He says the provision in question will require a municipality to put up 25 percent of the cost of a project; and from two or three telegrams read by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] from mayors of cities in that State, I am sure there is a misunderstanding. We know how such a misunderstanding occurs. The Mayors' Conference now have offices here, and they have a representative. This is not the first time I have found that the representative sends out a telegram, and the mayor of my town telegraphs me, and the mayor of another Senator's town telegraphs him, and if a mistake appears in one telegram it appears in all. It is just a question of whether the gentleman who now represents the mayors for the purpose of getting money out of the Federal Treasury understands the matter. If he does, all right, well and good. If he does not understand it, then we receive the telegrams, and they are all wrong.

This provision does not apply to the municipality. Insofar as the State of Pennsylvania or any other State is concerned, proceeding as the Administrator now does, he may show to Cleveland, as he has shown to Cleveland ever since these programs have been in effect, the favor of not requiring them to put up as large a contribution as is required of other cities in the State of Ohio and as is required of small communities. That is true of Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and the Carolinas.

Insofar as this provision goes, the Administrator would proceed as he now does. How does he proceed? He has a sewing-machine project, for instance. He requires a contribution of not more than 10 percent. How is that 10 percent provided? By the rental of a building, or at most by material; not by cash, and because he thinks that project should not be required to put up a large contribution, he does not require it.

Then there may be a schoolhouse to be built, and, because of the ability of the school district, having issued bonds, to put up more, the Administrator will require them—as I know he does in my State—to put up 45 or 50 percent. They put up the 45 or 50 percent in material and in supervision of men. They can take one project and require 50 percent; they can take a white-collar project and require 5 percent; but so long as they provide the total from the State of 25 percent, which is going to be required anyway, according to the Administrator, by December, this provision could be administered.

It is said that the Administrator would have trouble in administering the provision. I discussed that matter with the Administrator this morning. I would not want to misquote him, but I am satisfied he would prefer to have no restraint upon the exercise of discretion by him. He would prefer not to have any amendment at all; which is not unusual. I never have seen the official in the executive department who would not prefer that we hand him an appropriation without requiring that he comply with any restraint directed by the Congress. But when I asked him about the administration, he said that if he had had the language which I have added, he would have had no difficulty in administering the law. The only thing he requested was that I make the effective date 3 months from now, and at the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio I extended it even to the first of the year, because I believe it is important to the Administrator, after all, to put this principle into effect.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to commend the Senator for the amendment he has offered, which I think will be most helpful in the administration of the law. I understood the Senator to say yesterday that the average contribution by the States is now 22 percent.

Mr. BYRNES. Twenty-two and a fraction percent.

Mr. WALSH. And that the Administrator says after December it will be 25 or more, under the present law.

Mr. BYRNES. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. But the pending joint resolution fixes the amount of the contribution at 25 percent. In several States would not that be an increase over present contributions?

Mr. BYRNES. I did not understand the Senator's question clearly, but the present contribution is twenty-two and a fraction percent, and the Administrator says that by December he is going to require a contribution of 25 percent.

Mr. WALSH. Can he do that under existing law?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; or he can lower it, or he can require one State to put up 10 percent and require of another State 35 percent or 50 percent. In the case of Nevada he requires 34 percent. In the case of Ohio—and I did not bring this out, but the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Kentucky did—he requires 10 percent. It is only a question whether or not, in order to attain some degree of uniformity, we should require that a State shall put up a minimum of 25 percent. Then the State regulates the contributions within the State, as the State administrator sees fit, in order to secure the 25 percent.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator has clarified the situation by his statement, but I still am convinced that the amendment would mean to many States an increase over the present contribution.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, that it would mean to some States an increase there can be no question, and my contention is that it should mean that. Let us see what occurs. Today we have something we have never had before; we have an organization of mayors. I do not blame the mayors for their activities. The mayor of any municipality knows that he is going to stand for reelection, and when he stands for reelection, the mayor wants to cite his accomplishments. He tells his people something to this effect: "I put up this building, this stadium. I put up this recreation park. Look at the waterworks I put in this city; and, my fellow citizens, I want to tell you that I got it for nothing. Not one dollar did it cost you. It did not come out of your city taxes. I got it without raising your city taxes. I went down to the city of Washington and put up an argument there to the Administrator, and, with the help of the State administrator, I got them to let me put up only 10 percent. How did we put up the 10 percent? By putting some people on the job to exercise supervisory direction, and we charged up the services of the supervisors at so much a day. That did not cost you any money, because you had the supervisors, anyway."

"What else did I do to put up the 10 percent? I provided the use of some of the city's equipment. I took the concrete mixer and got a credit of $50 a day. Over here in the other city, how did they come out? The mayor did not stand in as I did, and he got but $25 a day for their concrete mixer. I put a tractor on the job. Reelect me, and I will go down to Washington and get something for the city."

Now we are confronted with the situation that when they cannot come in person, telegrams pour in, and they are going to be received from my city and from every other city, saying "Don't hamstring me. Still leave me an opportunity to get this money. I don't want to put up any."

Is that right? Consider the case of the P. W. A. today. They submit us a statement that they have a billion and a half dollars of applications from the municipalities of this country, asking for the privilege of putting up money in order to get a billion and a half dollars out of the United States Treasury, and they say, "If you will give it to us today, if you will write into this measure this P. W. A. provision and let us get the money, we will put up 55 percent in order to get a 45-percent grant." Let them get into a taxicab and ride across this town from one Government office to another, and they get poor on the way, and by the time they reach the Administrator's office they are crying that they cannot put up 10 or 15 percent because of the terrible conditions which exist at home. As a result they get a favor from one Department of the Government, when they are crying for the opportunity to put up 55 percent in order to get 45 percent out of the Treasury.

I want the Senate to decide whether or not we shall endeavor to say how little they must put up. Some of them are not willing to put up equipment and are not willing to provide supervision, and today they are not putting up more than 5 percent, and they do not want to do that.

This provision would result in some uniformity, and make the people of this country more satisfied with the P. W. A., which has done and can do much good. We should write some such provision into the law, instead of leaving it to the Administrator to say, "I like the State of Arizona, and because I like the State of Arizona and like the Senator from Arizona, it has to put up but 11 percent. But I do not like this other State, and that State will have to put up 30 percent."

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, does not the Federal money come from the same place where the cities and towns get their money?

Mr. BYRNES. If the Senator could convince the people of that, our difficulties would be greatly lessened, but the people do not believe it. The people believe that when they get money from Washington, it comes from Santa Claus, that they are will never have to do anything about it, and therefore that it is merely a question of saying, "So long as it is going to be spent, I might as well get mine." If I were the mayor of Kalamazoo I would say that I would get more of it, that I knew it was going to be spent, and if I did not get it, the Senator from Massachusetts would be getting it, and therefore I would get as much as the other fellow, or more. No mayor will run for office in a municipality hereafter without bragging about the good bargain he obtained.

In the early days we thought the brake on expenditures was in the Congress of the United States, and that the spending department was in the executive branch. By the high-powered methods now resorted to, that has been changed, so that the only brake to be exercised will be exercised by the executive department, and Congress will be running away with itself to see how much it can give to other people.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I was interested in the Senator's picture of the lobbying mayors. I have been in legislatures, and know something about it myself.

In the case of the city of Cleveland, I do not think his story is a fair statement of what happened. I talked with the mayor of Cleveland this morning for over half an hour, and discussed the whole situation with him. I was familiar all last year with the situation in Cleveland. I know how much they can put up. This is a question of figures, and I say that if we require them today to put up 25 percent, they will have to cut their works projects in half, and that is not because they are not putting up money. The people of the city of Cleveland voted an extra levy of seven mills, which makes their tax rate today the highest in the State of Ohio. The need exists. It is all very well to say that these are general conditions, but I say that here is a specific condition, a condition under which they cannot afford, by any method I can discover today, at least, or the Administrator can discover, so far as that is concerned, to put up 25 percent.

We have introduced a bill on the relief proposition requiring a contribution of one-third. If they have to put up 25 percent on W. P. A. projects, and they pay the whole cost of their relief, which is very considerable, in addition to the W. P. A., they are going to pay nearly half the cost of relief under this plan.

I say that under present conditions of unemployment, under the tremendous expense they are put to in order to take care of unemployment they cannot afford to do it. If we are going to leave it wide open to an administrator to say, "In Cincinnati you have to put up 30 percent and in Cleveland 10 percent," we will have the same conditions existing inside of the States that we are trying to get away from by having uniformity throughout the Nation. The provisions are not carried far enough. If 25 percent is what is wanted, make it 25 percent for everyone.

I think the principle is an unsound one. I think the administrator should go into a case of need and determine what is the actual need in the particular case.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the Senator's question is a long one. First of all I wish to say that the Senator from Ohio has said that the administrator ought to have the right to go into each case. That is what is provided for. I think the Senator still believes that the provision would require the city of Cleveland to put up 25 percent. I have been trying to tell the Senate that the provision applies to the State, and if the administrator of the State of Ohio, who knows more about the condition in the city of Cleveland than anyone in Washington could possibly know, believes its story, then he can permit projects to be undertaken in the city of Cleveland without raising the percentage. If that were done it would lessen the pressure that is brought to bear. Without wishing to say anything about any one city, I will say that that city has been the most active of any that I know of with respect to the general proposal. But the other cities of Ohio make no such complaint, and the other cities of Ohio could pay a little more to make up the 25 percent, pay it in the way I suggest they should pay, by services and by equipment. I know a little about the city of Cleveland. I dislike to go back to

it. The Senator, however, will admit that when they had an election there on the question of changing the constitution so as to permit the city to raise more taxes for relief, the people of Cleveland voted it down.

Mr. TAFT. There is a constitutional limitation, but a city may vote to impose a tax in excess of the constitutional limitation. While we have a 10-mill limitation, Cleveland has voted, and today has a tax rate of 30 mills.

Mr. BYRNES. When was that election?

Mr. TAFT. In 1932, I believe.

Mr. BYRNES. And has not the city of Cleveland voted on it since then and voted against the increase?

Mr. TAFT. Cleveland has nearly always voted for the additional levy. I cannot speak of what has happened since 1932, because I do not know.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. First of all I agree that, through the efforts of the Senator who has the floor, the legislation before us has been considerably liberalized.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes, it has.

Mr. MEAD. I am very much interested in a character of project which would fit into a category which would make it wholly a Federal project. I recognize the fact that the inhibition contained in the joint resolution prevents 100-percent-sponsored P. W. A. projects. But it does not prevent a Federal project if the project can secure Federal sponsorship. For instance, I am speaking of projects on Indian reservations, national parks and reserves, game refuges, emergency airports and projects that have to do with the Army and the Navy. For the RECORD I will say that I recognize the fact that, while we prevent W. P. A. 100-percent-sponsored projects, there is a possibility of some agencies joining in sponsorships, but I am wondering if there are any funds available, and, also for the RECORD, I should like to know how these projects will be prosecuted.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I can only say that the language in the House measure covering the $50,000,000 for Federal projects is the same as has heretofore been used. I think the Senator from New York is interested in the same question about which the Senator from Florida has been interrogating me.

Whether the House language on page 25, which definitely prohibits the projects referred to, or the language now proposed be adopted, I do not see how any part of that $50,000,000 could be appropriated for the arts projects in which the Senator is interested, unless some agency of the Federal Government had the authority to undertake them and could secure approval of the President. That would have to be done, just as it has always been done. There is no change in that respect.

Mr. MEAD. For the RECORD, again I will ask whether the Senator knows of any authorization which would permit an agency of government other than the W. P. A. to sponsor a Federal project?

Mr. BYRNES. I do not believe any such authorization exists. When I was discussing the question with the Senator from Florida this morning I wondered what the effect of the language would be. Even if the President allotted money to the Department, I do not see how the Department could undertake to sponsor the project unless it was authorized by law to do the particular thing.

Mr. MEAD. Would the Senator favor the insertion in the measure of a sum of money earmarked and authorized under specific language for certain Federal projects, limiting it to a reasonable amount?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, that has nothing to do with the amendment I have suggested. I have always opposed the absolute prohibition carried in the House provision. I do not believe that the arts projects could be placed on the same footing with all other projects. That is my position with respect to the matter. I find, as I said a while ago, that some Members of the Senate are in favor of Federal art projects and some are opposed to them. I want the language to be more specific. I think they should be treated as all other projects are treated.

Mr. MEAD. If the Senator will yield further, I will say that section 25 (a) on page 29 states that—

None of the funds made available by this joint resolution shall be available after October 31, 1939, for the operation of any project sponsored solely by the Work Projects Administration.

I have in mind the possible earmarking of a reasonable sum of money that would permit W. P. A. to act as a co-sponsor of certain projects, and I have in mind accepting from the Federal arts projects, as a contributing share, the revenues derived from the operations of such projects or receipts taken in at the box office.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, while discussing the provision on page 5, a number of questions were asked me about the theater project. I wish to say to the Senator that the Senate will have to vote on that question. The interest displayed by the Senate makes certain that a vote will be taken. The Senate will have an opportunity to vote its convictions one way or the other. The Senate can vote to strike it out, and then it will proceed just as it is now proceeding, or it can amend by inserting a provision such as the Senator indicates.

I do not like to make a suggestion about a matter in which the Senator from New York is interested, but it seems to me the thing to do is to meet the issue and have a vote on it. I can advise the Senator that I have been told by Members who object to the language proposed by the Senate committee that they want to restore the House language, with the positive prohibition against any art project of any kind, and that a vote will be had on that question. The Senator from New York, the Senator from Florida, and others are in favor of it, and they will doubtless present their views, and we will have a vote on the question in a short time.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. I recognize the fact that the proposed legislation which has been sponsored by the Senator is far more liberal than the measure that came to the Senate. But I have in mind the jeopardy that not only the Federal art projects will be in but all Federal projects, such as those affecting Indian reservations, national parks, and game refuges.

Mr. BYRNES. No, Mr. President, they are in a different category. I should not want my statement to be misconstrued. The national-park projects are authorized by law. If it is seen fit to appropriate a certain sum out of the Federal $50,000,000 appropriation, to the Interior Department for national parks or anything else, it is made a Federal project. Such projects, I repeat, are authorized by law. If the Senator could find some department which is authorized by law to operate a theater project, it could do so. I do not know of any. The $50,000,000 is available to the departments.

Mr. MEAD. I should like to have that $50,000,000 which is available to the departments, dealt with by language which would make the provision sufficiently liberal to include Federal projects similar to the Federal Arts Project and others in the category that I mentioned, such as emergency airports, which may be covered by existing law.

Mr. BYRNES. Airports are not affected. They are covered by law. I suggest to the Senator from New York that he ought to meet that issue directly. If he wants to meet it, let him offer an amendment to suggest it directly, because I am afraid he will not get at it in any other way. I do not know of any specific law authorizing the other departments to do this thing.

Mr. MEAD. I appreciate the suggestion, and I really believe we ought to meet it as the Senator suggests, and that we ought to appreciate the fact that the Senator from South Carolina has already liberalized existing law, but that we have in mind a further liberalization of the law.

Mr. BYRNES. The provision does not go as far as the views of the Senator from New York.

Mr. MEAD. We ought to have in mind the acceptance of sponsorship by W. P. A., which is now prohibited by law, and that sponsorship might come as the result of receipts which accrue in the prosecution of a project. I think it would cover such a situation as we might find upon investigation that State law or municipal ordinances would not permit sponsorship of the type of project we have in mind. Therefore, to get around that difficulty it occurs to me that we ought to have in the law some validation of that particular type of project.

Mr. BYRNES. We have to do that or knock out the whole of section 25.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I wish to correct the statement of the Senator that the other cities in Ohio are not in the same situation as Cleveland. Akron, Youngstown, and Toledo are in exactly the same situation as is Cleveland. While Cincinnati, Columbus, and Dayton are better off, they are hardly in a position to assume their share of sponsorship.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I have listened with peculiar interest to the colloquy which has been carried on between the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] and the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD]. I believe that what the President and all of us have in mind; that is, permission to the W. P. A. to be cosponsor of projects of greater than local significance, may be preserved by an amendment to the committee amendment on page 5, as amended, adding the following proviso at the end of line 23:

Provided, That the limitations of this subsection shall not apply to projects on which the Works Progress Administration is a cosponsor.

Mr. President, that proviso would make it possible for the Works Progress Administration to sponsor projects which have a significance broader than State lines or any particular locality; but at the same time there would be imposed a limitation upon the authority of the W. P. A. by requiring, as section 25 does, that no project could be sponsored solely by the W. P. A. That is to say, the W. P. A. would have to obtain some competent cosponsor for every project it initiated, but the amount of the contribution to be made by the cosponsor would be determined by the Works Progress Administration.

Mr. President, I believe that all of us recognize that certain projects have a national significance, and that they could with propriety be initiated and sponsored by the Works Progress Administration, the national agency. I am perfectly willing to concede, as the joint resolution indicates, that there should be some limitations upon that authority, and that in every case the W. P. A. should be required to enlist the cooperation and the aid of some other competent sponsor.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I ask the Senator if he will not offer his amendment to section 25, which he could just as well do.

Mr. PEPPER. No, Mr. President. I do not wish to do that, because that would leave the impression that the only thing to which the amendment would be applicable would be the arts program. There are many projects which are truly national in their scope, or certainly regional in their significance, and which as a practical matter could only be initiated with propriety by the W. P. A. I am perfectly willing to agree to any reasonable limitation in amount, if the Senator would care to suggest such a limitation.

Mr. BYRNES. No, Mr. President; I am not interested in it at all.

Mr. PEPPER. We have the safeguard of the President's approval; we have the safeguard of the Administrator's approval, which is required before such projects can be initiated; and we have our past experience to show that the authority to initiate projects has not been abused. Even more important than that, we have the debate which has occurred on the floor of the Senate, which will certainly be a moral admonition, if not a legal suggestion to the Administrator to be limited in the initiation of projects to those which would meet the common approval of the people of the country. Therefore I offer the amendment which I have suggested to the amendment reported by the committee, as amended.

I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the committee amendment, on page 5, beginning in line 15, as amended, was agreed to, be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEWART in the chair). Without objection, the vote by which the committee amendment, on page 5, beginning in line 15, as amended, was agreed to, is reconsidered. The amendment offered by the Senator from Florida to the committee amendment, as amended, will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 5, at the end of line 23, in the committee amendment as amended, it is proposed to add the following proviso:

Provided, That the limitation of this subsection shall not apply to projects on which the Works Progress Administration is a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] to the committee amendment on page 5, beginning in line 15.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I express the hope that the amendment to the amendment will be rejected. The matter of the theater project can be met, and should be met, in the consideration of section 25. It can be considered and determined by the action upon that section. Having the Administrator of the Works Progress Administration pass upon cosponsorship of the Works Progress Administration and some local government would present an entirely new proposal, which really has no relevancy to the committee amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator aid me in the matter of language? Can one be a cosponsor for himself? Can he be a partner of himself? Can he be his own father?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, that is the point that is bothering me. The amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] is not necessary. In a few minutes we shall reach the section under which this thing can be discussed, and Members can vote their convictions on it one way or the other and settle it in a very short time. I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] to the committee amendment, as amended, will not be agreed to. I hope the committee amendment will not be confused by the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida to the committee amendment on page 5, beginning in line 15.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment on page 5, line 17, in the committee amendment, after the word "thereafter" to add the words "approved to be", so that the line would read, "projects thereafter approved to be undertaken within any State, Territory", and so forth.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado to the committee amendment is agreed to.

The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, may we have the committee amendment, as amended, stated in its entirety?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment, as amended, will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The committee amendment, as amended, reads as follows:

(d) On and after January 1, 1940, in administering the funds appropriated in this section not to exceed three-fourths of the total cost of all non-Federal projects thereafter approved to be undertaken within any State, Territory, possession, or the District of Columbia, with respect to which any such funds are used, shall be borne by the United States, and not less than one-fourth of such total cost shall be borne by the State and its political subdivisions, or by the Territory, possession, or the District of Columbia, as the case may be. The facts constituting compliance with the requirements of this subsection shall be determined by the Commissioner, and his determination, made in conformity with rules and regulations prescribed by him, shall be final and conclusive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, we are about to vote on the question whether or not we will agree to the committee amendment as amended. Some Senators who have expressed views about this amendment are absent from the Chamber. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. REED. Mr. President, for the benefit of those who have just come into the Chamber, may we have the amendment as amended stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment as amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, line 15, it is proposed to insert:

On and after January 1, 1940, in administering the funds appropriated in this section, not to exceed three-fourths of the total cost of all non-Federal projects thereafter approved to be undertaken within any State, Territory, possession, or the District of Columbia, with respect to which any such funds are used shall be borne by the United States, and not less than one-fourth of such total cost shall be borne by the State and its political subdivisions, or by the Territory, possession, or the District of Columbia as the case may be. Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from South Carolina if I am correct in interpreting that amendment to mean that if all the projects which are possible under this appropriation should be approved by the 1st day of next January, the 25-percent limitation would not apply?

Mr. BYRNES. It would not apply except as to projects approved after January 1.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that, if the approvals prior to that date represented the entire sum available, this amendment would not apply to any of them.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; assuming the premises to be true.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Question!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended, on which the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

Amendment numbered 96: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 96, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$29,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 102: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 102, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$25,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 110: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "In expending appropriations contained in this Act under the caption 'Public Assistance', not more than the following monthly amounts shall be paid therefrom: Emergency Relief of Residents: Single persons, not more than $24; family of two persons, not more than $30, and for each person in excess of such number under 16 years of age not more than $6; and not to exceed a total of $60 to any one family; Home Care for Dependent Children: Family of two persons, not more than $30, and for each person in excess of such number under 16 years of age not more than $6; and not to exceed a total of $60 to any one family; Assistance Against Old Age Want, and Aid for Needy Blind Persons: Not more than $30 per month shall be paid therefrom to any one person."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 111: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SPONSOR'S CONTRIBUTIONS TO WORK PROJECTS ADMINISTRATION
"For amount required by the District of Columbia as sponsor's contributions toward Work Projects Administration nonconstruction projects for free lunches for necessitous school children, sewing, household service, housekeeping aides, adult education, and recreation, including the purchase of food, supplies, materials, streetcar and bus fares, rent, equipment, rental of equipment, personal services, and other necessary expenses, $177,500, together with not to exceed $12,000 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the same purposes for the fiscal year 1939 contained in the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1938."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 1, 15, 20, 21, 34, 39, 41, 50, 55, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 75, 101, 117, 122, 127, 129, and 133.

FRANCIS CASE,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I ask for the immediate consideration of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Louisiana?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the conference report.

Mr. OVERTON. I move the adoption of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Louisiana what disposition was made in the conference report of the provisions dealing with old-age assistance.

Mr. OVERTON. In the case of old-age assistance the Senate increased the appropriation over the bill as it came from the House, and in conference the Senate receded.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Will the Senator be good enough to describe the two provisions? What was the Senate provision and what was the provision of the House which caused the disagreement?

Mr. OVERTON. There was an increase of the appropriation by the Senate. I do not recall the exact amount. The House refused to yield, and the Senate receded.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is my understanding that the provision insisted upon by the House, and to which the Senate conferees have yielded, is such as to make it impossible for aged persons who receive only $30 per month assistance and have no other income of any kind to derive any benefit from the distribution of foodstuffs by the Surplus Commodities Corporation. Is that correct?

Mr. OVERTON. No; I do not so understand the provision of the conference report. There is a limitation, inserted by the House, of $48 per family; and the agreement reached in conference was that there should be a certain limitation on each one of these appropriations—namely, for old-age assistance, dependent children, and the blind.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Was that limitation a personal limitation or was it a limitation on the total amount?

Mr. OVERTON. It is a personal limitation, beginning with a certain amount set forth in the report, and increasing it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator state what the amounts are?

Mr. OVERTON. I should have to get the conference report to give the Senator that information.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think it is worth while knowing. There are a number of persons on the receiving end of this proposition, and the way it is being administered in the District of Columbia is a national disgrace.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May we have that portion of the conference report read?

Mr. OVERTON. I will give the information to the Senator.

The provision as agreed to in the conference is as follows:

In expending appropriations contained in this act under the caption "Public assistance," not more than the following monthly amounts shall be paid therefrom: Emergency Relief of Residents: Single persons, not more than $24; family of 2 persons, not more than $30; and for each person in excess of such number under 16 years of age, not more than $6; and not to exceed a total of $60 to any one family; Home Care for Dependent Children: Family of 2 persons, not more than $30, and for each person in excess of such number under 16 years of age, not more than $6; and not to exceed a total of $60 to any one family; Assistance Against Old Age Want, and Aid for Needy Blind Persons: Not more than $30 per month shall be paid therefrom to any one person.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, is it not a fact that the provision of law—perhaps in this conference report, I am not sure; perhaps by some other provision—is to the effect that surplus commodity provisions may not be granted to persons who have the sort of assistance now provided by this report?

Mr. OVERTON. That is not my understanding.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then the Senator is of opinion that the conference report does not shut out the beneficiaries of this assistance from the distribution of surplus commodities?

Mr. OVERTON. No; my understanding is that it does not.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Has the Senator before him the provision of the bill itself, as it passed the Senate, which was altered by this arrangement?

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator means as to the limitation?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. What did the bill as passed by the Senate provide?

Mr. OVERTON. The House had provided a limitation of $48 to any one family. The Senate had provided as a ceiling that not to exceed $48 per month in the aggregate should be paid to any one family of five or less persons from appropriations contained in the act under the caption "Public Assistance," and not to exceed $6 per month to each beneficiary in excess of such number. Consequently, the House had a ceiling of $48 on any one family. The Senate amendment provided for a ceiling of $48 on any one family of five persons or less, and not to exceed $6 for each additional person, with a ceiling of $60 in all.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. What is paid to aged persons under the present law?

Mr. OVERTON. Under the present law the average is $26.52 per month.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. What is the maximum? If the average is $26.52, it is probably true that the maximum is more than the $30 which is the maximum limit now provided by the conference report.

Mr. OVERTON. The average is what is usually paid out; but occasionally some of the old persons need a new set of false teeth, and an additional allocation will be made for that purpose, and that brings up the allowance for that particular month or particular time. There are not more than two or three grants in the District of Columbia in excess of $48.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator believe there would be any opportunity of revising the report in this particular if the bill went back to conference?

Mr. OVERTON. We had quite a long discussion about it, and finally we came to the agreement which is now represented in the conference report. We spent some time in discussing it, and this was the best formula we could evolve after thorough consideration.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator believe it would be useless to attempt to send the bill back to conference?

Mr. OVERTON. I think so, on this particular item. There are some items on which I hope we can reach an agreement. There are three main items on which we are still in disagreement.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the conferees are in disagreement on some items, and therefore the bill must go back to conference, why would it not be a good plan also to take this item back to conference?

Mr. OVERTON. Before we finally agreed on the formula to which I have referred, and which I read just a moment ago, we called into consultation some of those in charge of the relief agencies, and also the Commissioners, and it was their view, as I understand, that this formula would work out.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, numerous representations have been made to me with respect to this provision of the conference report, and it is alleged that it will work a hardship on needy, aged persons in the District of Columbia. As the Senator from Wisconsin has said, the administration of public assistance in the District is not a credit to the Federal Government.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I did not wish to be understood as referring to the technical administration. What I meant was that Congress, by fixing these arbitrary ceilings without regard to the size of a family, has produced a situation which, in the Nation's Capital, is a national disgrace.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I understand the Senator to mean exactly that, that the responsibility for lack of proper care lies at the door of Congress and not at the door of those who are charged with the technical administration of the provision.

Inasmuch as it will be necessary to take the bill back to conference, I ask the Senator if he will not agree that this provision shall also be taken back to conference. I should like to make a motion to that effect.

Mr. OVERTON. We had better take all the items on relief back, if we take anything, because this formula applies to all the items with respect to public assistance. We fought very strongly to get an increase. In the Senate we inserted an increase in the bill of $600,000 for relief, and the House would not yield. They are not willing to increase the amount over the $900,000 provided, and we are still in disagreement on that provision.

The Senate undertook to increase the appropriation for old-age relief, and the House would not yield. Finally the Senate conferees yielded on the increase.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is exactly the point. I feel that the Senator did a good day's work.

Mr. OVERTON. Let me interrupt to say that we have worked for many days.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I mean when this provision with respect to old-age assistance was adopted. I am hopeful, therefore, that inasmuch as the whole item in disagreement must go back, the Senator will agree to take back also the provision I have been discussing, particularly in order that some of us who are very much interested in it may have the opportunity of learning exactly what the facts are.

Mr. President, I hope the Senator will agree to my suggestion, and I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. What would be the proper motion to make in order to eliminate this particular item from the motion of the Senator to agree to a portion of the conference report?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised by the Parliamentarian that the conference report cannot be amended; that the only way to correct it would be to disagree to the entire report, which would send it back to conference again.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I move that the whole report be sent back to conference.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I trust the motion will not prevail. We have spent hours and hours and days on the report. There were 137 items in dispute, and we have come to an agreement on the overwhelming majority of them. Only three issues are now in dispute, and I hope the whole report will not be sent back.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised by the Parliamentarian that a motion to recommit would not be in order because the House has already agreed to the report.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Is there any motion which may now be made from the floor of the Senate by which the Senate may insist upon the position it has taken heretofore?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A vote rejecting the report would send it back.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. So the question arises merely upon the report. Those who want the report to go back to conference should vote to reject the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, the amount of the Federal contribution to the District is not involved in the report, is it?

Mr. OVERTON. That is in disagreement.

Mr. MILLER. What is the purpose of the Senator from Louisiana in reference to that? Is he going to ask for a conference?

Mr. OVERTON. I intend to ask for another conference.

Mr. MILLER. Of course submitting the matter to the Senate for a vote as to whether or not we will sustain our former position?

Mr. OVERTON. Yes; that is my purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report submitted by the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for a division.

On a division, the report was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its action on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 5610, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
June 27, 1939.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 20, 21, 34, 50, 57, 58, 117, 129, and 133 to the bill (H. R. 5610) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, and concur therein;

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, and at the end thereof, before the period, insert a colon and "Provided, That the foregoing appropriation shall be for payment in full for all services heretofore or hereafter rendered in connection with the study for the revision of the organization of the District of Columbia."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: Restore the sum stricken out by said amendment, and following such sum insert a colon and "Provided, That the activities provided for under this appropriation shall be operated under the joint control, supervision, and direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the Board of Education."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert a colon and "Provided, That such playgrounds shall be kept open for play purposes in accordance with the schedule heretofore maintained for playgrounds while under the jurisdiction of the playground department."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment, as follows:

At the end of said amendment insert a comma and "and a report of expenditures for such repairs and improvements to other municipal buildings shall be submitted to Congress in the annual Budget."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 75 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert: "That no appointment shall be made during the fiscal year 1940 in the grade of private until 16 vacancies exist in such grade, and 15 of such vacancies shall not be filled during such fiscal year: Provided further, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby directed to cause a survey to be made for the purpose of determining what consolidations of present fire department stations can be effected and as a result thereof what, if any, economies may be made in the cost of operating the fire department, and what additional amount would be needed for new construction, a report of such survey to be made and submitted to Congress on the first day of the next regular session of Congress."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 122 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: Restore the sum stricken out by said amendment and preceding such sum insert "and including an administrative assistant at $4,000 per annum, to be appointed without reference to civil-service requirements."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 127 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment and at the end thereof insert a comma and "except that a permanent type of platform may be constructed from appropriations contained in this act for street improvements when such work is undertaken in connection with roadway paving, repaving or resurfacing, and plans and locations thereof are approved by the Public Utilities Commission and the Director of Vehicles and Traffic: Provided further, That the street railway company shall pay the cost of maintenance, marking, and lighting after construction."

That the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, and 101 to said bill.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 15, 39, 41, 55, 75, 122, and 127.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I now move that the Senate further insist on its amendments numbered 1, 59 to 71, inclusive, and 101, and ask for a further conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

Before the motion is acted upon I wish to say that the amendments in disagreement are, first, the amendment in reference to the Federal payment. The House placed the Federal payment at $5,000,000, the Senate at $7,750,000. The second is the amendment in reference to school-building construction and consolidation. The third amendment is in reference to the public-assistance provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair]. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Louisiana.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. OVERTON, Mr. GLASS, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. BURKE, Mr. KING, Mr. NYE, and Mr. BRIDGES conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3325) to extend the time within which the powers relating to the stabilization fund and alteration of the weight of the dollar may be exercised, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. SOMERS of New York, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. REED of Illinois, Mr. LARRABEE, and Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6577) to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. NICHOLS, Mr. DIRKSEN, Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland, and Mr. BATES of Massachusetts were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5269) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes; that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 32 and 142 to the bill and concurred therein; that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 141 and 158 to the bill and concurred therein, each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; and that the House further insisted upon its amendment to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33 to the bill.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

An act to continue in effect until June 30, 1942, the act entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes," approved February 22, 1935, as amended;

WORK-RELIEF AND RELIEF APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 326) making appropriations for work relief, relief, and to increase employment by providing loans and grants for public-works projects, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, in the matter of the order of procedure, the Senator from Florida has asked that we take up some amendments ahead of those immediately pending. I request that we take up the public-works amendment, which will give time for the Senator to conclude his address.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado that the Senate now recur to the amendment on page 35? The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] to strike out and insert.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is a vote about to be taken?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No. An endeavor is being made to develop a quorum of the Senate.

Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on the amendment offered by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I wish to make only a very short statement with reference to the position of the Senate committee. The President of the United States did not submit to the Congress any Budget estimates for an appropriation for P. W. A. With his knowledge of the unemployment situation and of the possibilities of furnishing additional jobs through making appropriation, after taking the whole situation into consideration, he did not ask of the Congress that it appropriate any money for Public Works Administration. The House of Representatives provided that of the total amount asked for W. P. A. there should be diverted to P. W. A. $125,000,000. The President has opposed that diversion. The Senate committee thought he was right and struck from the joint resolution, first, the provision diverting $125,000,000 to P. W. A. This the President has announced publicly would mean giving jobs to 165,000 more people through the agency of W. P. A.

The pending amendment seeks to add to the Budget estimate $400,000,000 to carry on P. W. A. The money that has heretofore been appropriated for P. W. A. is still available. It was said 2 months ago that the peak of employment under P. W. A. would not be reached until October. Certainly for months thereafter there will be employment furnished as a result of the appropriation last year of $900,000,000.

The question is whether or not the Congress shall, without regard to the Budget, add $400,000,000 additional at this time for the purpose of carrying on the program of P. W. A.

The Senate committee was of the opinion that the time had come for the Congress to say what should be done with reference to P. W. A. By the action taken by the committee the Works Progress Administration will have more money, by the action taken by the Senate on the amendment that I introduced certainly more material will be made available, and when more material is made available by the sponsor, more jobs should be available.

In determining whether or not we should add $400,000,000, I wish the Senate to take into consideration the request of the President submitted within the last 2 weeks. In a letter the President said that he believed the time had come for the Congress and the Government to make loans instead of gifts to the States, counties, and municipalities seeking public improvements. He urged that the Congress authorize the lending of as much as $870,000,000 to the States, counties, and cities for various purposes.

One of the purposes is that a loan made by the Government should be to take care of the projects which have been approved by P. W. A. and which are listed in the document with which Members of the Senate are familiar, including projects amounting in all to one and a half billion dollars. Those projects include all kinds of municipal improvements, such as waterworks, sewerage, incinerators, and every imaginable thing for which municipalities expend money. It is the purpose, if the Congress passes the bill which I understand is to be introduced by the Senator from Kentucky, that the rate of interest should not exceed 2 percent.

The making of a loan at 2 percent or less over a period of years is equivalent to a grant of approximately 12½ to 15 percent. The loans now made by W. P. A. are made on the basis of 4 percent, and the difference in interest over a period of years would mean a grant of from 12 to 15 percent.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The amount of the grant in effect by a reduced rate of interest would depend upon the length of time covered by the loan.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is entirely possible that in many cases it would figure out between 15 and 20 percent.

Mr. BYRNES. It would depend upon the period of the loan. However, there is this great difference, which appeals to me: The question is whether or not we shall say to the people of the country that from this day on we are engaged in a permanent program, and that we shall give 45 percent of the cost of municipal improvements through a P. W. A. program; or, on the other hand, that by lending the credit of the Government we shall lend money to the State of Kansas, or to the State of South Carolina, and say to the States, "When we lend you the money we will accept your securities for its repayment. You will then not be looking for something from the Christmas tree, but will be pledging yourselves to repay to the Government the amount of money borrowed from the Federal Government."

I think that point is all-important. It is the most significant change effected by the committee. The question is whether hereafter we shall indulge in gifts or whether we shall merely lend money and cause the local governments of the country to realize that they must pay back what they borrow.

If $500,000,000, and no more, were loaned to the States, counties, and municipalities by P. W. A. or by the new lending agency, when the securities of the local governments came into the possession of the Government, the head of the lending agency could do what he has heretofore been doing. He could sell those securities and place the money in the Treasury. Only last week or the week before the securities given by the State of California to cover the cost of the Oakland Bridge were disposed of by Mr. Jones at a net profit to the Government. That is a business transaction. The question is whether we shall follow the course suggested by the President or whether we shall determine that from now on we shall continue a gift program which will make every local government look to the Federal Government for one-half the cost of its local improvements.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I infer from what the Senator said that the committee, in making its recommendation, believed it was carrying out the intent and purpose and policy of the President in this matter.

Mr. BYRNES. Absolutely.

Mr. WALSH. How does the Senator explain the Secretary of the Interior taking another position, as he was quoted as having done by one of the Senators on the floor of the Senate earlier in the day?

Mr. BYRNES. I am very glad the Senator asked me that question. The Secretary of the Interior took that position before the President submitted his views to the Congress and to the country. The President believes that we should have a lending program instead of a gift program.

Mr. WALSH. Many other Senators besides myself feel that if the relief program is generally too complicated and involved, and too difficult for individual Senators to know all the ramifications, we should follow the President in his requests and suggestions of the needs of the country and give him considerable latitude in determining how and where the money shall be spent. I wish to ask the Senator again if in his opinion the action of his committee meets with the approval and favor of the President?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I say "yes" as emphatically as I can say it.

Mr. WALSH. The only reason I pressed the question was not that I doubted the answer, but that only this morning a Senator quoted the Secretary of the Interior as though the quotation were a recent expression on the part of the Secretary.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Arizona was absolutely justified. My friend from Arizona never makes a statement which is not justified. The Secretary of the Interior made the statement referred to to the committee several days before the Chief Executive took the position he did. In my experience I have never quoted anything the Chief Executive has said about any matter. However, in this matter he saw fit to express his views in writing. His views were expressed solely because of my request, I having the same desire as has the Senator from Massachusetts to know the attitude of the President as to this program for the future, in view of the fact that no estimate had been submitted by the administration to the Congress asking for any money.

The statement has been publicly made that so far as the administration is concerned it is not asking for funds for a P. W. A. program. That fact, of course, is not controlling. The Congress may do whatever it pleases about the matter, without regard to the views of the Chief Executive.

I submit to the Senate that the time has come for us to determine whether or not we shall permanently embark upon the program of giving 45 percent of the cost of projects to municipalities.

I admit that there is always something to the suggestions of the Senator from Arizona. The thing which impressed him and actuated him in his attitude, as I gathered in the committee, is that he believes there should be a tapering off in public expenditures. I agree. However, in this case the President asked for the total amount for W. P. A. We know that regardless of the views of men as to the administration, W. P. A. does furnish more jobs than P. W. A. to men on the scene of the job. It can take quick action in relieving unemployment. According to the President 165,000 more jobs would be provided by the action of the committee.

On the other hand, it is said that while P. W. A. does not furnish as many jobs on the project, because it involves contract work and more machinery is used, it does furnish jobs back in the factories. That may be true, but there is one difficulty. Any program of that character cannot get under way for more than 5 or 6 months. If we wish to relieve a condition which now exists, we can relieve it by an appropriation for W. P. A. In addition, we know that only a comparatively small percentage of the total amount available under the P. W. A. program has been spent, and from this day on the amount of money actually going out of the Treasury on account of P. W. A. work will increase until October, when it will reach its peak. It will then gradually be reduced. Under W. P. A. we can furnish a sufficient amount of money to take care of unemployment, in the opinion of those who are immediately charged with responsibility for its administration.

I hope the Senate will not, without any Budget estimate, and without any request from those whose responsibility it is in the executive department—not only without any request but with positive opposition to the proposal—add $400,000,000 over and above the Budget by adopting this amendment.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, in the first place I disclaim the statement which was made that my amendment involves a gift program. In reality it is a participation program, in which we ask the Federal Government to put up $400,000,000. We likewise ask the participating governments to match that sum by putting up their share, which would be 45 percent of the cost of each of the projects approved by P. W. A. In other words, Mr. President, we are asking the Federal Government to join in a cooperative effort with all the subdivisions of government in the prosecution of a works program involving $1,000,000,000.

Another matter which I desire to develop, Mr. President, is the fact that the Secretary of the Interior has not changed his views. It is my understanding that he presented his views at the solicitation or invitation of the committee. His views are identical with the recommendations contained in my amendment, which is now before the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. While the Senator was absent from the Chamber a few minutes ago the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] stated, in reply to a direct question from me, that it was his opinion that the views of the Secretary of the Interior to which reference has been made were views entertained by him prior to the message sent to the Congress by the President. The Senator led me, and, I think, others, to believe that the Secretary of the Interior does not now entertain those views.

Mr. BYRNES. If I did that, I would not want to do so. I have not talked to the Secretary of the Interior, but when the Senator asked what was the explanation, I answered specifically that it was a fact that the Secretary of the Interior testified before the President submitted his proposals to the Secretary of the Interior. I wanted it known that he made that statement.

Mr. WALSH. Perhaps I derived an incorrect impression, but what are some of us going to do when we receive from the head of the Nation a recommendation in relation to relief of one character and receive from the head of a department another directly opposite view as to what should be the policy of the Congress? It is confusing.

Mr. BYRNES. If the Senator will permit me, I would say that I have never known the head of a department who was very efficient who was not also very enthusiastic about the particular work entrusted to him. I can understand that situation. But the President of the United States is charged with the duty of considering and appraising the value of all projects, and after considering the views of the Secretary of the Interior, with which certainly he was familiar, he submitted his views as the President to the Congress.

Mr. WALSH. To a degree, a member of the Cabinet is an agent of the Chief Executive, and may have all the enthusiasm in the world for his work and for spending money, but it seems to me it is a primary obligation of loyalty when it comes to spending $400,000,000 that he should follow the judgment of the Chief Executive.

Mr. BYRNES. I am not going to dispute that, but I do not know that the Secretary of the Interior has not now changed his position. I have no information about it. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President—

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. HAYDEN. If I may explain to the Senator from Massachusetts, the situation is that the Committee on Appropriations called the Secretary of the Interior before it and asked him what, in his opinion, should be done. I quote his own words:

I am not speaking for the administration. I think we ought to have $500,000,000, of which $100,000,000 should be for Federal projects.

That statement was made 2 days before the President sent his message to the Congress.

Mr. WALSH. Has he made any statement since that time?

Mr. HAYDEN. The only information I have, while not directly from him, is that he is still of the same opinion.

Mr. WALSH. Of course that statement seems to me to amount to saying, "It is my wish; I can spend this money if you give it to me and it is desirable."

Mr. HAYDEN. Let me point out one other consideration to the Senator which may influence his opinion in this matter; in either provision, the one the President has recommended or the other, after all it depends upon his discretion as to how many projects shall be adopted or whether any projects shall be adopted. That is an executive matter. The amendment offered by the Senator from New York provides exactly the same discretion. Not a single project ever has been approved under the Public Works Administration unless the President himself has approved it. If he desires, we give him a choice. In this case he can follow either rule, but he is not compelled to follow either one of them.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the Senator agree that the policy the President has proposed to the Congress in his recent message is diametrically opposed to the continuation of P. W. A.?

Mr. HAYDEN. On the contrary, I think that the two are entirely supplementary. I argued to the Senate this morning that I thought there should be a cushion between the two, because we do not know when the new program will get under way. The pending amendment would allow something to be assured in the meantime.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator think that any municipality would abandon the opportunity of obtaining a substantial percentage in the way of a gift for a public building for the sake of a loan bearing, say, 2 percent interest?

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator from South Carolina explained very clearly that the applications under any plan we may adopt will always be much greater than the amount of money available. There are today on file, I dare say, applications for a billion dollars' worth of work. If we appropriated half a billion dollars, they could do half of it; if we appropriated less than that, they could do less. The Senator from South Carolina pointed out that where they cannot get it from one source that a new avenue will be opened, and that all the preliminary work, such as investigating projects, will have been done, and they will be in shape to go ahead. I think that is an entirely sound conclusion.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the Senator for the explanation, but the Senator from South Carolina has with emphasis undertaken to state that, in his opinion, the recommendation of the committee is the President's wish and desire.

Mr. HAYDEN. I have no desire to dispute that.

Mr. WALSH. The problem of relief is so involved, I repeat, and so complicated and so extensive, that I and other Senators cannot give the time to study every detail of it and determine how the money should be spent. In the first place, I place the responsibility in the President of the United States above all others. He has the whole picture before him; he has the various relief agencies working under him, and when he asks for relief purposes a certain sum of money, I propose to vote it to him unless there is some sound reason why I should not do so. I do not propose, however, to provide him more than the amount for which he has asked. So if he does not want this money, if he does not desire the money, and prefers another method, I feel obligated to follow that method.

Mr. HAYDEN. Let me suggest, as a matter of history, that twice before the President made no recommendation with respect to public works, and 2 years ago as the bill came over from the other House it contained no provision for public works. The Senate, in considering the problem, established a public-works program without a Budget estimate, without any recommendation of the President, and without any action by the other House.

Mr. WALSH. That is very interesting. Apparently the President was not very strenuous in his objection. I take the position that there is only one human being who can pursue effective leadership in establishing a policy of economy or who can control in the last analysis the expenditures of the Government. In a municipality it is the mayor; in a State it is the Governor; in the Federal Government it is the President of the United States; and whenever he voices—being able to command to an extensive degree the public opinion of the country, to register his veto—any protest against extravagance or waste or excessive appropriations, he will have the support of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator from Massachusetts, having been a great mayor, a great Governor—and some day he may be a great President—I can understand his point of view; but there are legislative bodies in cities, there are legislative bodies in States, and we have a legislative body here that is a part of the Government.

Mr. WALSH. The compliment of the Senator is appreciated, and I would be very happy to accept the nomination, if I had any ambitions to hold that most burdensome office, which commands almost superhuman qualities from its occupant.

Let me say to the Senator that I have been in public life for 25 years, and I know that in my State of Massachusetts the one man who can largely control the finances of the State is the Governor of the State. The legislature may protest now and then, but the Governor has the power of veto; he is the voice of the people, especially the taxpayers, at this time of excessive taxes. We may say all we want about extravagance and waste on the part of Congress, and about Congress spending too much money, but, in the last analysis—and I do not say this in criticism, as I hope my Republican friends will note when they undertake their campaign—the responsibility is on the Chief Executive, and, if not almost unanimously, then to a very large degree, the people will follow him, as I am now following him, on matters of relief expenditures.

I wish to say that in this relief measure I cannot determine for myself what limitations should be put upon the expenditure of relief money. The President has his agents, he has his employees, he has officials in the departments who are studying the relief question, who know the figures, who know the situation in my State, and in Arizona, and in South Carolina, and in California. Relief is such a human factor, and it is so important and essential that one official, elected by the people, namely the Chief Executive, has control of it, that I want, so far as possible, to follow him in his recommendations; and I regret to see any conflict between a Cabinet officer and the President on the subject.

I thank the Senator from New York for indulging me to such an extent.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. It is true, as the Senator from Arizona pointed out, that if the Congress adopted an amendment providing $400,000,000 for grants, after all, the allotments would have to be approved by the President, and he could reject them all. But, Mr. President, I do not think the Congress wants to do that, because, as has been said, there are a billion and a half dollars worth of applications, and I believe the Congress would not care to say, "We are going to approve these projects so that we can say at home, 'The President does not want this plan; he is opposed to it, but we will approve it'; and the projects will be submitted to the President and he can disapprove." Daily the President could be disapproving projects if the Congress wanted to take that position. But our responsibility, first, must be to determine whether or not when the Chief Executive, charged with this responsibility, says the time has come to abandon making gifts of 45 percent for projects, the Congress shall say, "We are going to adopt legislation to force you to make grants; we are going to put it up to you, and, holding the views that you announce in advance, you will have to disapprove each individual project." I do not think the Congress would want to do that.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, of course, I appreciate the very favorable attitude that has been shown in support of the responsibilities, the leadership, and the recommendations of the President. To a very large degree I agree with the philosophy which has just been enunciated on the Senate floor.

Of course, talking about financial leadership and responsibility being placed in the Chief Executive is one thing, and the prerogatives of the legislative body, as indicated in the attitude of the Senate during the last few days with regard to the financial recommendations of the President, is another matter.

The attitude of the Senate with regard to farm parity appropriations is an indication of the assumption of responsibility to a great degree by the legislator. It is true that we look to the President and to the agencies of government under the executive department for guidance in matters of this character; but I do not believe there is a conflict of any major degree between the President of the United States, the suggestions made to the committee by the Secretary of the Interior, and the recommendations contained in the amendment now before the Senate.

The President of the United States, in a letter to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], proposed a new plan whereby the Government intends eventually to take up the slack and make its contribution to the reemployment of our unemployed. Neither the President nor anyone else intimated that that program could be made effective on July 1. Everybody recognizes the fact that the peak of P. W. A.'s activity will be reached this month, and that it will rapidly and progressively be reduced until July of next year, when there will be only $9,000,000 left, and 500,000 tradesmen and mechanics and workers will be laid off. Everybody recognizes the fact that to conform with the recommendations contained in the letter directed by the President to the Senator from South Carolina it will be necessary for these projects to be, to a degree, self-liquidating. Everybody recognizes the fact that no doubt the Secretary of the Interior had that fact in mind, and had in mind the category of projects that would fit in that scheme; and he also had in mind, when he appeared before the committee, the fact that there are 5,000 projects pending now, at this minute, before the Public Works Administration, many of which could not under any circumstances or by any stretch of the imagination come within the purview of the new agency when it is set up. Not only are 5,000 projects pending, but projects to the extent of $1,600,000,000 are already perfected and awaiting action by the Public Works Administration. The Secretary of the Interior, recognizing the fact that this great reservoir of projects could not be considered under the restrictions and limitations of the new program outlined by the President to the Senator from South Carolina, in order that we might continue this program and select projects that could not conform, in his statement to the committee said that at least $400,000,000 could be allocated at this time for projects in which the Government has a right to participate under the terms of the present P. W. A. program.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New York whether or not the situation in his State is in any way similar to the situation in my State. Last fall, after the appropriation of last year was made, representatives from the Public Works Administration visited various communities in the State, met with committees in those communities, outlined to them the program of the Public Works Administration, and discussed with them possible projects which might be presented by the communities. They actually induced the communities to expend money in the form of engineering expense, architectural expense, or, in many instances, in the form of calling special elections in order to make it possible to issue bonds for the other 55 percent. A very large percentage of those approved projects, which were really instigated by the Public Works Administration, on which considerable sums of money were spent by the communities, are now standing, and the communities simply have spent the money, and so far as the communities are concerned that money is wasted.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I am very glad my distinguished colleague from Washington has developed that point, because, to my knowledge, a great number of the projects contained in this vast list rest in the category he has just described. There are a great many projects which are not only urgent and needed and pressing, but projects which we are to a degree morally, if not legally, bound to consider. There are projects all over the United States in which bond elections have already been held, engineering expenses and costs have already been paid, and in a number of cases contracts contingent upon further action by the Federal Government have already been let. These projects, I believe, come within the category outlined by my distinguished colleague. No doubt the Secretary of the Interior had in mind that minimum program when he appeared before the committee only a few days ago and told them that we were at least in a position to make progress on 25 percent of the vast reservoir of projects, and to leave the other 75 percent for the development of the new agency outlined by the President.

Mr. President, I do not believe it is proper or fitting, or economically justifiable, for the Senate abruptly to end this program at this time. I recognize the fact that it will take time and legislative effort on our part to perfect the new program outlined by the President of the United States. I believe in that program. In my judgment, it is economically sound, and there are many good reasons why it ought to be expedited. I can see, however, how wise and prudent it will be for the Senate of the United States, recognizing the fact that we have this large volume of projects, and appreciating the fact that municipalities have already gone so far as to let contracts and to adjust their budgets, to agree with the suggestion advanced by the Secretary that it is a minimum program that will allow for a continuation of this vast and most successful venture of the Government to the perfection of a privately constructed works program, and that it will avoid, prevent, and obviate the set-back and the peril that will result if the Senate shall immediately discard this program. It is the continuity of the program that this amendment will permit, so that we shall advance from the present status to the new status outlined by the President in proposing his new agency.

Therefore, recognizing the fact that every city in the United States, that every county in America almost without exception, that surely every State in the Union has projects in this advanced and preferential category, in view of the fact that it is only a small effort in comparison with the large number of projects available, and in view also of the fact that it will permit a logical, reasonable transition from the system now in vogue to that outlined by the President, it occurs to me that the Senate would be legislating in a proper and sensible manner, recognizing the condition the country is in and the need for these projects, and the fact that it is not a gift program but is a participation program, if it should adopt the amendment which is at the desk.

Mr. President, what is the situation?

The House, as we all know, earmarked for P. W. A. projects a sum of W. P. A. money amounting to $125,000,000. The Secretary of the Interior very properly explained to the Senate committee that this money ought to be turned back to the W. P. A., and the President of the United States indicated that the Senate ought to take action of that character; and, very wisely, the Senate committee returned the amount of money earmarked by the House for the prosecution of the W. P. A. program.

My amendment will not take any of the moneys allocated to the W. P. A. It leaves the W. P. A. the amount of money allocated to it by the Senate committee, requested for it by the President. It merely sets up a minimum W. P. A. program authorizing the expenditure of $400,000,000 for public-sponsored projects and $100,000,000 for wholly Federal projects. It permits of the continuity of the Public Works program until it can fittingly be absorbed in the new program that was recommended by the President of the United States.

Mr. President, it is not only an aid to the municipalities but it will not increase the taxes of the country in the aggregate. Where it levies a burden upon the Federal Government, it relieves a local government of the full amount of that burden.

It creates work opportunities for labor, gives to contractors and professional men an opportunity to participate in the fruits of the program, and enriches the country by the building of permanent, enduring, wealth-producing projects. It will allow the local taxpayers to enjoy a reduction in taxes by reason of the participation of the Federal Government with the local government in this particular program.

At this point I desire to present the following letter favoring my amendment from Mr. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 27, 1939.

HON. JAMES M. MEAD,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am writing to express the approval of the American Federation of Labor of the amendments which you offered to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 326) making appropriations for work relief and to increase employment by providing loans and grants for public-works projects for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940.

In my opinion, the adoption of the amendments you proposed is urgently necessary in order to meet the economic and social needs of the Nation. The Public Works Administration has rendered excellent service and has provided employment for thousands of building-trades workers and others. Its services should be continued. Such an amount of money as you have provided for in your amendments ought to be made available for the use of the Public Works Administration.

I appeal to the Members of Congress, through you, to give a full measure of support to House Joint Resolution 326, which you have offered.

Sincerely yours,

WM. GREEN,

President, American Federation of Labor.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. Does the Senator's amendment make provision for funds to be used to give employment to those on the relief rolls?

Mr. MEAD. Obviously the effect of the operation of my amendment would be to reduce the relief rolls.

Mr. President, I stated a moment ago that elections have been held—bond elections—in support of these programs. Engineering costs have already been appropriated and expended, contracts have been let, and many of these projects are in a classification which would prevent them from participating in the new program which will be launched eventually, and which, when it is launched, will give ample reason to the Senate for a further curtailment, if not for the elimination entirely, of the P. W. A. program.

The P. W. A. program is 6 years old, and for the fifth continuous year building construction, according to Dodge reports, are on the upgrade. This particular industry, shocked as the result of the destructive influences of the depression, is on the way back. That is another reason why this is not the time to suspend this program and to await the coming and development of a program which is not ready at this moment.

Mr. President, the program represented in the amendment which I have at the desk, covering only 25 percent of the entire P. W. A. program, will permit of the orderly development of the new program. It will prevent a drastic let-down in the construction industry; it will continue the upturn, the favorable condition which exists now as a result of P. W. A. in the durable-goods industry.

For these reasons I hope this amendment, which will permit of the development of projects which make contributions to the health, the education, and the safety of our country, will be agreed to and the Administration permitted to carry on until such time as it will no longer be necessary for us to make appropriations in this manner.

Mr. President, it would be inappropriate for the Senate of the United States to turn its back now on the communities of the United States that, with the advice and consent of Federal agencies, perfected and developed and submitted for the approval of the Federal Government this vast program, which now depends upon the action taken by the Senate in connection with the amendment which I have sent to the desk.

The President of the United States and the Secretary of the Interior have under no circumstances which recommend themselves to me taken issue one with the other. The Secretary of the Interior, recognizing the fact that he was called upon by a Senate committee for information based upon his experience and his knowledge of conditions, recommended this amendment as the minimum effort to be taken by the Senate at this time.

The President of the United States outlined in a communication to the Senator from South Carolina the plan of action which will be taken, perfected, and refined by the Senate of the United States at a later date, which, when in operation, will permit of the drastic reduction of appropriations of this character.

Mr. President, I am opposed to the reduction of the appropriation recommended for the Works Progress Administration. I congratulate the Senate committee, that very wisely restored the $125,000,000 taken from the W. P. A. by the action of the other body.

I feel that all that is necessary now to make the joint resolution all inclusive, to give opportunity to every agency of the Federal Government which has joined with us in this struggle against unemployment, and opportunity to continue this work, is approval of the amendment I have at the desk.

Subsequent efforts on the part of the Senate and on the part of the Congress in the approval of legislation outlined by the President of the United States may, and I hope will, enable us at some future date to reduce drastically the appropriations contained in the pending joint resolution for all the existing agencies of government; but until that time has come, and in recognition of the comfortable progress we are making, and in consideration of those who are being fully employed on this program, and for the further reason that there are still millions of our people who are looking for work, let us not stop this program in its tracks; let us continue it in this modest, moderate manner, so that we will not deny to the municipalities, to the communities, to the counties, and to the States, which are looking to us for positive action today, that justice which their cooperation in the past in the perfection of these projects, it seems to me is their just due. Let us not make the mistake of throwing out of work some 500,000 tradesmen and artisans now gainfully employed in the prosecution of this program. Let us not bring about hardship to the contractors, the materialmen, the technicians, and the professional men who have found opportunity for employment as the result of this venture of the Government into this most successful private construction program.

Mr. President, I say that in consideration of all the facts and all the circumstances this amendment should receive Senate approval at this time.

Mr. President, I ask unanimously consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point an article by myself entitled "The P. W. A. in New York State."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

THE P. W. A. IN NEW YORK STATE
(By Senator JAMES M. MEAD, of New York)

There are now pending before the Public Works Administration applications from municipalities in the State of New York for 429 projects with an estimated total cost of slightly more than $257,000,000. Cities and towns in almost every county in the State have drawn up plans for permanent and useful public works, and are only awaiting P. W. A. assistance before undertaking this necessary construction.

I am not saying that every single one of these projects is imminently essential to the welfare of the people of my State. There are a few that could possibly be undertaken with funds other than those of P. W. A.; there are a few others that could possibly wait over a year or 2 years; but, after eliminating all these, about 85 percent of all the pending applications are in need of immediate aid if these worth-while works are to be undertaken at all and if thousands of families whose heads work in the construction trades are to remain off the relief rolls.

On the basis of a $125,000,000 appropriation the State of New York could hope to undertake the construction of no more than 5 percent of the projects for which it has applications pending. While this amount would be very helpful, by no means could it be considered sufficient to take care of even a decent proportion of the great need. To take up any reasonable amount of the slack in employment that will be created when the public works now under construction begin to taper off, the Congress must provide a minimum of $400,000,000 to take care of the most worth while of the non-Federal applications pending. Unless such a provision is made there will be under construction on July 1 of next year only $9,000,000 worth of public-works projects. About one-half million men now engaged in the construction of public works financed by P. W. A. will have to look elsewhere for their sustenance. We can provide for them through normal employment on P. W. A. projects or add them to the relief rolls—that is our choice.

P. W. A. projects have the endorsement of communities in almost every county in the United States. In the last P. W. A. program more than 6,000 projects were submitted to voters who were asked to pass on bond issues. About 82 percent of these propositions were approved.

Let me point out the nature of these works for which communities in my State of New York have applied to P. W. A. Applications for school projects lead the list. There are 129 of them. New York State has made great strides in the last several years in modernizing its school curriculum and in bringing its educational facilities up to date. Centralization of school districts and consolidation of schools has been undertaken on a vast scale, not only because such methods bring the children better and fuller opportunities for broader education but also because the method is economical. This is especially true in the rural districts of up-State New York. And this economical and worth-while advance in the educational system of my State has been made largely in the last few years as a result of P. W. A. aid.

Take the case of the school at Corfu, in Genesee County, just to select one out of the great number of P. W. A. school projects. The old school up there had been in use since about 1880. It was dilapidated, obsolete, and terribly overcrowded. It was staggering under a load of 180 pupils. Many more would have gone to school but there was no room. Many more would have gone to school but there were no laboratories, agricultural shops, or other facilities for vocational training and for modern studies. Finally, the school district made application for a P. W. A. allotment for a school to accommodate 300 pupils to take care of future needs. Here was a worth-while—a socially desirable and useful project of permanent value. P. W. A. made the allotment. The school was completed in December 1936. I have been informed that the very next school term the school was filled to capacity. A lot of children who had been on the streets were attracted by the school and enrolled. School districts in neighboring communities shut down their own schools and permitted the children to go to the new school at Corfu. The enrollment jumped to 400. Centralization of the school districts in the area was carried out, and the new consolidated school district applied to P. W. A. for aid in enlarging the Corfu school, and in addition asked for a new school. The new school is now under construction, and the Corfu school is being remodeled—two wings are being added—to bring the total capacity up to 600.

Other school districts would like to do the same. Overcrowding of schools simply compels the construction of new schools and additions and improvements to many of those that are already serving to capacity.

About 75 of New York's pending applications before P. W. A. are for waterworks projects. To protect the health of their citizens, to serve and attract industrial establishments, and to provide a necessary service for the public, communities in every section of my State need to build storage tanks, filtration plants, or extend their water mains. An adequate supply of good water is obviously so essential to life and welfare that there is no need for me to point out the necessity for such projects. Delay in some instances may actually be dangerous. In other cases it may merely serve to retard local economic prosperity.

Take the case of Webster, N. Y. Webster, in Monroe County, is in the midst of a highly developed agricultural and industrial area. The canning industry is one of the backbones of business life in the farming centers. But a lack of water hampered Webster for years. The town outgrew the well-and-bucket system back in 1910, when some springs were found and developed. But the population outgrew the supply, and the situation often became critical, especially in the summers when the springs dried up. For 10 years water had to be brought in by truck from nearby towns, and in some summers trucking the water cost as high as $15,000.

Webster had about given up hope, when an application was sent to P. W. A. for assistance, and was acted upon favorably.

The project was undertaken and the new waterworks system was completed in 1937. Shortly thereafter a nationally known packing plant took option on property and began the construction of a packing plant. That meant more pay rolls for the people of Webster. In addition, other plants have become interested, and neighboring towns have connected mains with Webster's water supply, bringing in additional revenue to the town's treasury.

P. W. A. has already assisted communities in New York in the construction of 92 waterworks projects. Many communities unable to partake in the earlier programs are now asking for an opportunity to cooperate with the Federal Government in bringing an adequate supply of good water to their citizens. No one will deny the value or necessity of such projects, all of which give a high degree of employment and nearly all of which cannot be undertaken without Federal aid.

No less important are the sewerage projects, for which many cities in my State are applying. I notice on the list of pending applications one for North Tonawanda. This seems to be one of the many vital projects that can be undertaken. The application is for a sewage-disposal plant. Cities on both sides of this town have already built such plants in an endeavor to abate stream pollution in the Niagara River. The value of millions of dollars' worth of work already undertaken is jeopardized if this one town which is polluting a stream is permitted to continue dumping its sewage untreated in the river. Funds which aid this town would help a whole area.

I could go on and point out community after community which is making an ardent and sincere effort to take care of its sewage problems in accordance with the recommendations of the State department of health, but which is hampered in its efforts by a lack of funds. P. W. A. assistance is vital to protect the health and welfare of the people.

There are also applications pending for hospitals, homes for the aged, fire departments, jails, libraries, and various other public structures which are important to the people of my State, and which during construction will provide millions of man-hours of work not only at the sites of construction alone but also in factories and mills which make the materials, and on truck lines and railroads which transport the supplies.

Most of the projects which have been applied for are to be built in up-State New York, in cities and towns that are anxious to provide decent employment at decent wages for their citizens. A number of the projects are in New York City. Out of the 10 projects for which the city itself has applied, 8 are school projects, while of the remaining 2, one is for a tunnel and the other for a major highway improvement. Overcrowding in the secondary schools of New York City has created a tremendous problem for the board of education. Only through the construction of adequate school facilities can the city meet its obligations to the young people—the future citizens.

In Bronx County five projects are on the pending list, four of which are for public works in New York City. In Kings County five projects are on the pending list, all of which are in New York City and Brooklyn. In Queens County four projects, of which three are in New York City. In Richmond County four are pending, all of which are in New York City. In New York County 12 projects are pending, all of which are in New York City.

All in all, the need for public-works assistance is so great that an appropriation of less than $400,000,000 for non-Federal projects throughout the Nation would leave many of those now employed on P. W. A. projects jobless, and leave undone the many vital improvements which cities, towns, and counties everywhere need.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I regret to find myself in disagreement on this proposal with my good friend the Senator from New York.

Heretofore those of us who have been interested in relief and in work programs have labored under the necessity of fighting to get Congress to appropriate as much money as the President asked. Now, by a strange set of circumstances, we are compelled to fight to keep Congress from giving the President more than he asks, for that is what is really involved.

I say without hesitation that the President of the United States is in possession of as much information concerning the details of unemployment and relief, and the need for relief, as is any other man in the United States, and in that statement I am not even willing to except those who are actually in charge of relief work. The President has an amazing amount of detailed information, not only as to the general situation throughout the country, but as to the situation in any State or in any county that is of any consequence where there is unemployment.

I do not believe anyone can gainsay the statement that no man in this country in the last 6 years has displayed a greater interest in the question of unemployment and relief than has the President of the United States, and when he comes forward with a recommendation as to what he wants in the way of money, and what he intends to do with it, and how he thinks it ought to be expended, I think the burden of proof is on those who dispute his figures and his philosophy, to prove that he is wrong about them, and that he does not know what he is talking about.

The President has not asked for the appropriation now proposed. Not only has he not asked for it but he has said that he does not want it.

I grant that in the letter to the Senator from South Carolina he was talking primarily and specifically about the allocation of $125,000,000 in the measure as it passed the House for P. W. A., to be taken out of the appropriation for W. P. A. But the President did not satisfy himself with simply saying that he was opposed to that transfer. He went on in detail to outline an entirely new program, not only comprehending non-Federal building projects but comprehending an extension of activities by the Federal Government in many other lines looking toward the resumption of employment among the unemployed of the United States.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I ask this question for information. I have heard it said that the grant of 45 percent, which is given under the P. W. A. program, is in substance the lending of money to those who initiate the projects without interest for the ordinary loan period. Is that about correct?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I would not say it was. I think the 45 percent is an outright grant.

Mr. PEPPER. No; I mean is the 45 percent, with interest on the 55 percent which is made in the form of a loan, about the same as the Government lending the whole amount to the applicant without any interest whatever?

Mr. BARKLEY. It probably might figure out that way approximately. But as a matter of fact the lending of the entire amount necessary to construct a building, at a rate of interest not to exceed 2 percent, depending somewhat on the length of the loan and the amount of interest that would accrue during that length of time, would equal approximately a 15- to 20-percent grant.

Mr. PEPPER. That is, on the basis of a 2-percent interest rate?

Mr. BARKLEY. On the basis of a 2-percent interest rate on the entire amount.

Mr. PEPPER. With a 5-percent interest rate, say, or 4-percent interest rate, it would be equivalent to a grant of about 45 percent?

Mr. BARKLEY. Very likely that approximates the comparison as nearly as it can be made.

Mr. President, the Secretary of the Interior has been mentioned, and his testimony before the Senate committee has been referred to. I have the greatest respect and admiration for the Secretary of the Interior. I have confidence in his integrity and his ability. I think he has done a fine job in the administration of the P. W. A. There has never been a suspicion of any sort with which I am familiar that in any way connects the administration of the P. W. A. with any impropriety or with any politics or anything else except sound business administration of the Public Works Administration. I think that is the universal opinion not only in the Senate but outside the Senate Chamber.

The Secretary of the Interior will not be in charge of this work after next Friday. He goes out of business as the Administrator of P. W. A. The President, by his reorganization plan No. 1, has concentrated all public work agencies under a new authority, and he has appointed Mr. John M. Carmody, who has likewise done a fine job as the head of the Rural Electrification Administration, as the Commissioner or Administrator for the consolidated building programs and agencies which are combined by the President.

I do not know what the new Administrator's attitude would be toward $500,000,000 for P. W. A. I think I know, but I am not authorized to quote him. Neither am I authorized to say what the Secretary of the Interior, who testified before the President recommended his new program, would have said had he testified subsequent to it, or what modifications he would have made in his recommendations had he testified subsequent to it, or whether he would have made any modifications at all. It may be that he still entertains the view that he entertained on the day he testified.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I think I am safe in saying to the Senate that the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ickes, has not changed his opinion. I can also state to the Senate that Mr. Carmody believes it would be a tragedy for the new administration, of which he becomes the head, to be killed on the 30th day of June.

Mr. BARKLEY. No one wants the new administration of which he is to be the head killed on the 30th day of June. But, inasmuch as the Senator from Arizona has taken the liberty to say how Mr. Carmody feels about it, I will say that I heard Mr. Carmody say that he believed that more money than is provided for even in the amendment of the Senator from New York could be loaned upon self-liquidating projects without any grant whatever. I think he was absolutely sincere about it. He referred to what has happened in the case of self-liquidating projects without any grants whatever. He referred to what had happened in the Rural Electrification Administration, where communities in the rural sections of our country, without a dollar's worth of grants, have borrowed for a long period of time 100 percent of the amount required to install the plants, and are paying rates of interest even higher than the 2 percent required in the present program.

Mr. HAYDEN. I think Mr. Carmody looked at it as I do. Both plans are excellent. It is merely a question of when the new program can be placed in operation. There is no essential conflict between the two.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I appreciate what the Senator from Arizona says. We always appreciate in every thing and in all ways the sincerity of the Senator from Arizona. I do not believe there is a Member of this body who enjoys more deeply the confidence, as well as the affection, of his colleagues than does the Senator from Arizona. I know I have entertained that feeling, as he has known, for a quarter of a century, and there is no one upon whose judgment I would rely more firmly than on his in nearly everything, and under equal circumstances even in this matter. But I think we are confronted with a different situation than that which we have been confronted with heretofore.

The President in his letter to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], which I have before me, does not satisfy himself simply with opposing the transfer of $125,000,000 from the W. P. A. to P. W. A., with which Secretary Ickes agreed, and with which the committee agreed, and with which I agreed. If we are to give the P. W. A. $125,000,000, or any other amount, it ought not to be taken out of W. P. A. funds, because, as the President said, it involves the employment of 165,000 American citizens who are on relief or who are certified for relief.

The P. W. A. does not employ relief labor. Senators may say whatever they please about it, but the testimony of all the State directors is that, so far as relief labor is concerned, so far as the 750,000 or 850,000 unemployed men who are now on the list and already certified, an appropriation of $400,000,000 or $500,000,000 for P. W. A. would not employ them all, or any considerable number of them. It has been shown that even when we undertake to require contractors to employ relief labor, they employ some of it for awhile, and then find some excuse for discharging the relief labor and going back to their regular employees whom they employed in their community.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Is it not true, though, that to the extent that the Public Works Administration provides employment there is a reduction in the reservoir of the unemployed who are on the rolls of the Works Progress Administration, thus relieving the load the Works Progress Administration has to carry?

Mr. BARKLEY. It may relieve the situation slightly, but nothing like the extent to which it should be done. I think it is true, by and large throughout the country, that the mere fact that a man goes to a certifying agent and becomes certified as being in need raises the presumption that he is more in need of work than someone who does not go to a certifying agent to be certified for employment. It may be, and I think it is, a matter of pride in some instances. Many men do not like to appear before a certifying agent and admit their need. That is probably more true of skilled workers than of unskilled laborers. It may be that they remain off the lists as long as possible. However, in spite of that fact I think that when there are 100 men in a community, and we may assume all of them to be out of work, if 50 of them go to the certifying agent and present their need for employment and 50 do not, we have the right to assume that the 50 who go are in greater need than the 50 who remain away. So far as unemployment is concerned, I am not so certain that if we were to increase the appropriation it would not be wiser to add $400,000,000 or $500,000,000 to the W. P. A. than to put four or five hundred million dollars at the disposal of the P. W. A. If the $125,000,000 which was transferred in the House provision from the W. P. A. to the P. W. A. involves the employment of 165,000 men who are on the unemployment lists and rolls, then $500,000,000 would employ approximately four times that many, or nearly 700,000 men; and the employment of 700,000 more men who are on the unemployment rolls and have already been certified would almost entirely absorb the 750,000 or 800,000 who are on the waiting list.

So far as the employment of men who are in dire need is concerned, and whose need is presumed to be greater than that of those who have not been certified, giving $400,000,000 or $500,000,000 to the W. P. A. rather than to the P. W. A. would result in greater employment among the needy unemployed. I would not vote for such a proposal, because I think the President, in surveying the situation and taking into account the probabilities of needs during the next fiscal year, has asked for all the money he thinks is necessary. I certainly do not wish to assume that I am wiser than the President by forcing upon him money he does not want and does not think he needs.

It is said that the program outlined by the President is tentative and speculative and may not be adopted. That depends upon Congress. The program involved in the President's recommendation in his letter to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] is a long-term program. There are some items in it which may arouse controversy. Already some controversy has been aroused over the proposal to make loans involving the export of our products to foreign countries, conveniently referred to as loans to foreign governments, which is not at all accurate. There may be some controversy as to the practicability of the toll-road and bridge program suggested by the President; but I dare say nobody will seriously oppose the 2-year program of construction of non-Federal buildings and projects with the $350,000,000 which the President proposes to spend over a 2-year period for the very type of projects involved in the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. DOWNEY. Will the Senator inform us when a bill embodying the suggested plan will probably be introduced in the Senate?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think I can assure the Senator that it will be introduced this week. The Senator will recognize the fact that the President made the suggestion only last Wednesday or Thursday. On Friday there was a conference on the matter among various Government officials, including Members of the Senate and House. The bill is now being drafted. If it had not been for the almost continuous obligation to be on the floor of the Senate during the past few days during the consideration of the stabilization bill and of the pending bill, that bill would already have been introduced in the Senate and House.

If I may amplify my reply to the Senator from California, I will say that if it had not been for the exigencies which required us to be in almost continuous session during the whole day and into the night since last Friday, that bill would already have been introduced. I hope it will be introduced not later than Friday. I hope it will be introduced tomorrow. Every effort is being made to get it into shape and to make it as simple as possible, with as few complications as possible, so that it will not involve long delay and discussion.

However, regardless of what anybody may think of any of the rest of the program, that is, the $100,000,000 for farm tenancy, the $100,000,000 for rural electrification, and all the other items in the President's recommendation, I have heard no opposition whatever to the proposal to use $350,000,000 over a period of 2 years for self-liquidating loans to municipalities, counties, and States to carry on the very program outlined in this amendment, at a low rate of interest, so attractive as to induce States, counties, and municipalities to borrow the money and pay it back to the Government of the United States.

In this connection, in all fairness I think we must take into consideration the problem of how long we shall continue to make 45 percent grants or any other grants as gifts to communities, rather than making the proposal sufficiently attractive to induce them to borrow money from the Government, which they can borrow from no other source, placing upon them the obligation of repaying that money to the Treasury and relieving them of the theory that all they have to do is to run to Washington and obtain a gift; that if they can afford to put up, either in bonds or cash, 55 percent, they can obtain from Uncle Sam a gift of the other 45 percent.

We have had to follow such a program. I think our country has made a valuable investment in all the communities where P. W. A. projects have been carried out; but I think the time has come when we must seriously consider putting the facilities of the United States at their disposal in the matter of credit, but not in the matter of grants and gifts. I believe that every dollar we put at the disposal of the President to carry out the program of long-term loans at a low rate of interest will be taken by the municipalities, counties, and even States. As I stated a while ago, the low rate of interest over a period of years amounts to a gift of 15 or 20 percent. However, the loan would carry with it the obligation to repay the money. The plan does not involve any deficit. It does not involve any appropriation. It involves the use of revolving funds and the credit of the Government to take over local obligations under a form of guarantee which will make it unnecessary for Congress to appropriate any money in order to carry out almost the identical program involved in the amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it the Senator's opinion that many of the P. W. A. projects now pending, some of which would be approved and the money for which would be allocated if this appropriation were to be made, would be built anyway under the lending program rather than the 45-55 percent program?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am absolutely certain of it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, the Senator has no figures; but, in his opinion, what percentage of the projects now pending would be built under the lending program rather than the old P. W. A. program?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, that depends on the amount. It may also depend upon the extent to which any city or county can go in issuing bonds if it has already reached its limitation. That restriction would apply even under this amendment, because it would apply to the part which the local government would have to raise locally as well as to the grant. For example, if the 2-year program of the President were carried out, calling for $350,000,000 for this purpose, of course, it would not be sufficient to do $1,000,000,000 worth of work unless the localities, in addition to the amount they borrowed from the Government, put up additional funds, which they could do, and in many cases would do.

Mr. TYDINGS. The reason why I asked the Senator that question is that it has been said—I do not know whether or not the statement is accurate—that there are about one and a half billion dollars' worth of projects pending. Certainly if $300,000,000 were made available, it strikes me that at least 20 percent of the projects would be built anyway, which would consume the $300,000,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true.

Mr. TYDINGS. It seems to me that is a pretty fair deduction.

Mr. BARKLEY. Undoubtedly the Senator is correct about that. If the local communities, in addition to borrowing the amount available for the project, desired to add to it by local taxation or by the expenditure of money from current funds, or in any other way, the total amount available would be enlarged, and might even approximate the $1,000,000,000 which has been mentioned as the probable amount of approved projects for which there has been no money.

Mr. TYDINGS. In any event, 20 percent of the pending projects, it seems to me, would be financed by municipalities and the units forming them, out of the total loans provision, because a great many of them represent pressing needs.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt, what would happen to the other 80 percent?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, they would not be constructed.

Mr. TYDINGS. In time they might come in and be constructed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; they might come in, anyway. But if there were a billion dollars for a new program, and they could borrow $350,000,000, that would be 35 percent to start with; and if they could raise additional funds, the percentage might go from 35 percent to 75 percent. Under the amendment as offered, they could only construct, probably, through grants and loans, 50 percent of the projects that are said to have been approved.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President—

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield further to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I was going to say we cannot furnish money to build every project, anyway.

Mr. BARKLEY. No.

Mr. TYDINGS. The point is that $400,000,000 under one proposition and $300,000,000 under the other would more or less level off with the expansion that would come, anyway.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not only that, but with reference to the billion dollars, or whatever the amount may be, of projects that have been approved and await action, there will always be a time when there will be a billion dollars or so of such projects, because so long as the door is held open for loans and grants, there is a sort of psychology that takes possession of a community that "while the Government of the United States is granting 45 percent, we will hurry and get ours, get in on the list and have our project approved, and if Congress should thereafter appropriate more money we stand a chance to get our share." So long as we keep P. W. A. open to such applications ready for the time when a billion dollars may be available, approved projects awaiting action on the part of Congress or the Administrator will continue to pile up.

There was a time when the Secretary of the Interior, head of the administration of the P. W. A., told me that he had on his desk $2,000,000,000 worth of projects that had been approved and had come up to him through all the grades—financial, economic, and engineering—and had been sufficiently investigated. He had on his desk $2,000,000,000 worth of projects which could have been undertaken if he had had the money with which to carry them out. Of course, it is not to be assumed that he would have approved all those projects involving $2,000,000,000.

In his letter to the Senator from South Carolina the President goes on to say not only that he does not want $125,000,000, but he thinks there is a better way to deal with the entire non-Federal work program than doing it through the P. W. A. He gives his reasons for his position. I am not going to read them. The letter is in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I presume it has been read by every Member of the Senate.

It seems to me the part of wisdom and of good business to adopt the suggestion of the President with respect to this new program. There will not be any hiatus to speak of between July 1 and the adoption of the new program, unless the Congress is to blame for it. If there should be any delay in the enactment of that legislation, it will be the fault of the Congress. The President has submitted it to us; it is now under consideration; it is being drafted, and will be introduced in a day or two and referred to the appropriate committee. If there shall be any delay after that, it will be the fault of the Congress. I do not believe there will be any appreciable delay. I expect that by the time the program under the amendment of the Senator from New York could get under way, the proposed legislation will be enacted, and it will certainly, in my judgment, set a new and sound program and one the President recommends as a permanent program. Of course, his suggestions carry over a period of 7 years, but this particular work program is only a 2-year program involving $350,000,000. I think we can trust the President in this matter; I think we can trust his wisdom, trust his good faith, and trust his interest in the unemployed men and women in this country. It certainly is entitled to a trial. I, therefore, hope the amendment of the Senator from New York will not be adopted, but that the amendment of the Senate committee eliminating the transfer of the $125,000,000 from W. P. A. to P. W. A. will be agreed to.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, one time there was a visiting preacher who preached in a church of which he was not a member, as he did not live in the community where the church was located. He relied for his pay upon the collection which was taken up. The collection plate came around and he put in a quarter. His little boy was with him. After the service when all the members had gone home, the preacher came out by the vestibule and looked into the collection plate. There was his quarter and nothing else. He picked it up and put it in his pocket. His little boy said, "Daddy, if you had put more in you would have gotten more out." [Laughter.] That is the position we are in relative to this program today. We get out just what we put in.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Had the preacher put more in the collection plate, it would still have been his money; it would not have been added to by anything anybody else put in.

Mr. LEE. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. It would not have been "self-liquidating."

Mr. LEE. That is correct; that is true. No matter whether we vote $350,000,000 or $350,000,000 plus $500,000,000, we do so for the purpose of getting money into the hands of the people who do not have money, for the purpose of setting up Government force pumps that will pump money out into the forks of the creek and out to the grass roots, so that money can go to town in the form of purchasing power and start the wheels of industry and head us back toward real permanent prosperity.

The best evidence concerning any document is the document itself. Discussion has taken place here today which would lead us to believe that the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Interior are at loggerheads as to relief appropriations. Since the discussion started I obtained a copy of the letter of the President to the Senator from South Carolina and read it. I do not find any such suggestion in it; I do not find any such opposition; I do not find any such disagreement of opinion at all in respect to it. I desire to read a part of that letter to support my belief that the President is not opposed to the Mead amendment. The President is opposed to taking any money from the W. P. A., and that is what he says in the letter. The amendment of the Senator from New York would not take any money from the total of the joint resolution; it would add $500,000,000 to it; the $1,735,600,000 would still remain, but if we should adopt the amendment of the Senator from New York, there would be added $500,000,000, which would make the total $2,235,600,000. What the President says in this letter is that he objects to taking $125,000,000 from the W. P. A.

I desire to read merely a portion of the letter which refers to P. W. A. provisions of the House joint resolution. The President says in this letter:

DEAR SENATOR BYRNES: I have your letter of the 19th in which you ask my position as to the provision of the Work Relief and Public Works Appropriation Act of 1939, as passed by the House of Representatives (H. Res. 326), which would allot $125,000,000 to the Public Works Administration for loans and grants for non-Federal public works.

I am opposed to this provision. It means simply that 165,000 men who are badly in need of work will have to be dropped from the Works Progress Administration rolls.

Then he goes on to describe these men and how they depend upon W. P. A. employment, how they have no other means of support.

That indicates to me that the President's only concern was that money which is so badly needed would not be taken from the W. P. A. I cannot see any force in the view expressed by the Senator from Kentucky when he suggested that if we pass this we will be forcing upon the President $500,000,000 that he does not want. He is in this position—

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I will yield in a moment. He must, of course, cut down to the bone. In my opinion, that is what he has done in his recommendation in the first instance; and now if we would be courageous enough to take upon our shoulders some of the responsibility of the relief load in this country and add the sum provided in this amendment I think the President would be very happy over it. I now yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the President was answering specifically the inquiry of the Senator from South Carolina concerning the $125,000,000 transfer, but if that is all the President had in his mind he could have stopped at the end of the second paragraph of his letter. However, he goes on in the letter, not to recommend any additional fund in this measure for P. W. A. but to suggest that all these projects under his suggestion should be "self-liquidating"—the entire amount of them "self-liquidating"—at a lower rate of interest, and he says that various agencies of the Government have been making a survey of projects of that sort which could be carried on and made "self-liquidating" under the plan of loaning at low rates of interest. There is not a syllable or a sentiment or a suggestion or an intimation in the President's letter that he favors a P. W. A. appropriation, because the whole tenor of the letter is to advocate the new plan.

I can certainly say to the Senator from Oklahoma that if he is undertaking to convince himself that the President does not oppose the Mead amendment, he can find out in very short order by conferring directly with the President on the subject.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I have no means of knowing the President's attitude on this particular matter except from this letter, added to the President's general attitude on relief. When I put those two together, I do not find any evidence that the President would be opposed to this amendment appropriating $500,000,000 additional for the purpose of taking care of unemployment in this country and stimulating business. Simply because the President has not asked for this money does not mean that he does not want it; it only means that he did not want to ask for it.

The Senator from Kentucky has just said that there is no evidence in this letter, not one line or syllable, showing that the President favors any P. W. A. proposal. I will state the matter in the negative: Neither is there a single line or paragraph which indicates that the President is opposed to the Mead amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator's argument and logic remind me of the preacher who preached a long sermon one night at a church and at the conclusion asked, "Does this congregation want me to preach here next Sunday night?" Nobody said anything, and the preacher said, "Silence gives consent. I will preach here next Sunday night." [Laughter.]

Mr. LEE. That is sometimes a very powerful argument. Silence may thunder; and in this case, so far as I am concerned, it seems to do so, because how do I know that the President is opposed to the amendment? I never heard of a P. W. A. program until the President himself launched one. I have not had any word from the President to the effect that he does not seek a continuation of the P. W. A. program. We voted for P. W. A. money. We have had a P. W. A. program; and all at once I am told here by the majority leader that the President is opposed to a continuation of this program, which is intended simply to fill in a gap.

As the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] has well argued, this is simply a supplementary program; and the President even asked for a supplementary program in this letter. I will read that sentence. Over toward the end of the letter he says:

To give effect to the program outlined above, some supplementary legislation will be necessary.

And this is the cushion that fills in between the expenditure of the funds now available to P. W. A. and the establishment of the new program which is outlined in the President's letter.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suppose the noun for "facetious" would be "facetiosity." [Laughter.] I admire the facetiosity, as well as the speciosity, which the Senator employs in undertaking to convince us that the President, in that sentence, referred to this particular amendment and this particular fund.

The President was talking about supplementary legislation; not a supplementary appropriation, but supplementary legislation authorizing him to do what he outlined and suggested in this program, not only with respect to non-Federal buildings but with respect to the entire program which he submitted to the Senate, and to the Congress through this letter.

Mr. LEE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I wonder if the Senator would object to adding to the Mead amendment a provision to the effect that no alien may be employed out of any of the moneys appropriated.

Mr. LEE. I refer the Senator to the author of the amendment.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Does not the Senator consider the fact that this $500,000,000 appropriation was omitted from the Budget an indication by the President that he is not in favor of our appropriating it?

Mr. LEE. No; I could not take that as conclusive evidence. The President is under hammer and tongs all the time to reduce, reduce, reduce; and he knows at the same time that we have unemployment in the country. I think he would appreciate our sharing that responsibility by voting a program big enough to carry out the ideas that we have advanced; namely, that if employment is given to all of the unemployed, we will have prosperity.

Mr. TAFT. When the Senate adopted the farm-parity payments in excess of the Budget, does the Senator remember that the President immediately criticized the Congress for such action? Is there anything different about this particular appropriation?

Mr. LEE. Well, that is a matter of guess. I did not see that the President criticized the Senate for that action. I did see where he said that we should have courage enough to provide taxes that would raise the funds appropriated in that bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator think the President is sufficiently diffident that he is not willing to share the responsibility of asking Congress for what he wants? Has the President, during the past 6 years, shown any hesitation in that regard? Has he all at once become so modest that he is not willing to ask us for what he wants, hoping that we shall force it on him anyway?

Mr. LEE. To all of those questions I answer that I do not know.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. DOWNEY. Did the Senator read the newspapers of this morning before making that statement?

Mr. LEE. I do not know what the Senator has in mind.

Mr. DOWNEY. The Senator from Kentucky asked the Senator from Oklahoma if the President generally expressed his opinion on what he wanted. I ask the Senator from Oklahoma if he read the newspapers this morning?

Mr. LEE. Yes; I read them. The President has not been very faint-hearted about expressing his opinion or taking responsibility, nor has he been lacking in courage in launching this program; but that does not relieve us from any part of our responsibility in this matter.

How much did we appropriate last year for the P. W. A. program? We appropriated nine-hundred-and-sixty-odd million dollars. We have spent, or we will have spent when the time ends, nine-hundred-and-sixty-odd million dollars. If we adopt the Mead amendment, and then pass the program which the President recommends, we will then have only $850,000,000 for P. W. A., and that is over one hundred million less than we appropriated last year for P. W. A., if we have both of them.

Therefore, I cannot agree with those who believe that it is the intent of the President to shut down all of this program. Of course, if we could start this work right away, we could take up the immediate slack; but, as was pointed out by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYRINGS], if all of the $350,000,000 were subscribed for it might take care of only 20 percent of the projects already approved that have been applied for. Then what would the other 80 percent of them do? Nothing. They would not be built. The labor would not be employed. The material would not be purchased.

Therefore I cannot see why we should not support this year a program almost as large as that of last year; and even if this amendment is adopted we still will not have appropriated as much for this type of work as we did last year.

Now, let us see, what is the difference? The difference in that one proposal is to appropriate $500,000,000 and lend 55 percent of it at 4 percent, and the other proposal is to appropriate $350,000,000 and lend it at 2 percent. In the long run, in my humble opinion, the cost to the Government is not going to be greatly different. There is not going to be a great deal of difference, because, figuring it out over a long period of years, with the 55-percent loan at 4 percent we are not in a greatly different position than if we lend all of the money at 2 percent. There is a slight subsidy in each case.

I have always favored P. W. A. over W. P. A. I grant that P. W. A. does not put to work on the ground so many men visibly, and perhaps not at all, but it puts more men to work farther upstream. We get for the money more in return. We get more permanent improvements. P. W. A. has the approval of the public. The laborers are employed by contract, and the man who hires them can fire them. There is no soldiering on the job, there is no gold-bricking, and there is no unsavory criticism as to the work done by this agency of the Government. As the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] said today, in his State P. W. A. has a clean record. That is true in most of the cases. Therefore, I do not see why we cannot support the Mead amendment, which will leave our total for P. W. A. still less than it was last year, and at the same time support the program which the President outlines in this letter, which is to come later.

I cannot see any conflict at all. It looks to me like a supplementary program. It looks to me like a method of getting into operation the very program the President has outlined here, one of self-liquidating projects. Under P. W. A. in our State we are building a self-liquidating project, the largest project in the State, and that is a power dam. The cost of the dam will be liquidated over a period of years, or at least partially liquidated, by the returns for electricity. P. W. A. is already building many of these self-liquidating and 'semi-self-liquidating programs. That is something I have always advocated. I think it is sound; and I see no conflict whatever between the Mead amendment and the proposal offered by the President. I see no conflict between the Secretary of the Interior and the President of the United States in this respect. It simply means, if we add this appropriation, that we share to some extent the President's responsibility in voting enough money to make a real program.

We never have had, since this administration has been in power, enough courage to go far enough to prove our own theory of ending this depression, which is that if all the unemployed are put to work we will have prosperity. If we get buying power in the hands of all the people, prosperity is the result. We have been afraid to go far enough each time; and there has scarcely been a given time, I suppose, when we have not had from 7,000,000 to 10,000,000 persons unemployed in this country.

I was very much in accord when I read in the newspaper the letter that the President wrote to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], in which he outlined a program that looked to me as though it was big enough at least to approach the proposition of taking care of the unemployed in this country. I applauded that program when it came out, and I see no conflict between it and this program or the Mead amendment.

I shall vote for the Mead amendment.

Mr. PEPPER obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I make an effort to facilitate the consideration of this joint resolution? I wonder if we cannot enter into some agreement about a limitation of debate on this amendment. I do not want to cut off any Senator, but it is apparent that we shall have to make more progress than we have made up to this time if we are to get through with the joint resolution tonight. I wonder if the Senator from Florida would be willing to consider a limitation of debate on the amendment.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I have nothing to do with it, except in my own case, and I expect to speak for only about 10 minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes on the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I offer for the RECORD and ask to have printed page 1 of Senate Document No. 25, which itemizes the projects which have already been approved by the P. W. A. in the several States of the country, and indicates the amount of the loan and the grant which would be required for each State if those projects were approved and actually put under construction.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PENDING NON-FEDERAL PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRATION PROJECTS

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I am quite conscious of the fact that I can add nothing of particular note to what has already been said by the able Senators from New York and Oklahoma, except to corroborate the sentiments they have indicated very strongly in favor of the appropriation asked, and in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

I sometimes wonder whether the opponents of the works program are consistent in their attitude. If it is proposed that we have a W. P. A. program, they say that the W. P. A. is an irresponsible agency, that it has had an unsatisfactory record, and that making appropriations to that agency is not the proper way to speed up recovery in this country. Then, if there is proposed a P. W. A. program they have some other excuse for not favoring the proposal. If a loan program is offered, a program based entirely upon the self-liquidating principle, they have some different objection, and probably come back eventually to the conclusion that they actually feel in their hearts that none of those programs should be the policy of the Federal Government.

The only reason why I venture to detain the Senate for even this short length of time is because, in fulfillment of the obligation I owe to my individual conscience, I am never going to miss an opportunity on this floor to offer my humble sentiment to my colleagues that we face frankly, honestly, and candidly the admission of the ugly fact that we are never going to be able to put to work the people of this country who are able to work and want to work, through private enterprise alone in any administration, Democratic, Republican, or anything else.

Within the week an article appeared in the New York Times, written by Mr. Lyon, of the Brookings Institution, and in that article he set out that inevitably, under the organization of our modern-day economy, we have to have work that implements the work which comes from the turning of the wheels of private enterprise. So in one form or another I accept the premise that we have to create work to implement the work that is available in our private economy.

Mr. President, if that premise be admitted, the only thing we have to do is to determine the kind of implemented work, the kind of made jobs, that will be to the public interest.

I do not quarrel with anyone because he prefers W. P. A. over P. W. A., or P. W. A. over W. P. A., or a lending program that is based upon the self-liquidating principle over some other program. I quarrel only with a man who will neither admit the obvious premise nor propose any solution for this challenging problem.

It seems to me, therefore, that the P. W. A. program is perhaps one of those which might meet the rigid conditions of almost anyone who was willing to make new jobs for the people who do not have a chance to work. It has been in operation for several years. Everyone admits that it has been honestly operated. It has been efficiently operated, even in the opinion of its critics, or the critics of the general program.

I have here a list of about a billion dollars' worth of projects which have been subjected to every possible scrutiny of three various examining divisions, and all of them have said these are deserving and meritorious projects. Not only that, but the local people who are the sponsors of those projects are putting up 55 percent of the construction cost and the Federal Government is putting up only 45 percent. That is equivalent in principle to lending them the whole cost of construction of the project, and giving them the interest on it without any charge whatever. So, instead of the lending program to which the Senator from Kentucky referred a few moments ago requiring 2-percent interest, and perhaps giving the recipients some interest, we merely give them all the interest, in substance, upon the money required for the construction program.

I say that it is not an unreasonable thing for the Federal Government to say to any community, "Whatever is for your benefit is for my benefit; whatever is a community asset is a national asset. Therefore, I will match dollar for dollar the money you spend in the construction of useful public works."

The idea that we save money by keeping the obligations of the Federal Government down and pulling the obligations of the local governments up is an obvious fallacy. We have had the experience or proof of it in my own State of Florida. In the real-estate boom days of 1925 and 1926 the various political subdivisions of the State got themselves head over heels in debt. They were very heavily burdened with debt, a higher debt than they could pay. Yet the State government, under constitutional provision, had no debt at all. Were we better off? I say that no State in this Union has as good a taxing system as has the Federal Government, or as adequate a capacity for taxing in a fair way.

Some of the States have principally and primarily the ad valorem tax, which is not a fair method of taxation. That is not a fair measure of ability to pay. Some other States have the sales tax. Nor is that a fair measure of ability to pay. But in those States they sometimes vie with one another to attract residents and to attract capital and attract enterprise. The Federal Government does not have to make a taxation system on that principle. Therefore, I can see no fairer agency that can tax to support a public-works program than the Federal Government.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. LEE. If the Government lends all of the money at 2 percent it takes 50 years to have the principal paid back. If the Government lends 55 percent of the money at 4 percent it takes 25 years for the principal to be paid back, and at the end of 50 years, under a 4-percent loan, provided the principal were reloaned after it was paid back at the end of the first 25 years, the Government would have back 110 percent of the original amount of the project which lends 55 percent. Therefore, if we are figuring cost over a long period of years the amount of money returned to the Government would be greater under the P. W. A. than under the lending program outlined in the President's letter. The President stated in his letter that he favored a revolving fund. Therefore, the money which comes in under this proposal would be put in the revolving fund and put out at interest again, no doubt.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator is absolutely correct. If this policy actually were an absolute experiment, I could understand how there would be a difference of opinion about it, but my colleagues know very well the familiar story of how our economy has reflected the stimulus of a works program and aid by the Federal Government.

I have here an article which appeared in the June 27 issue of the Washington Star this year, and it shows the curve of industrial production in this country, beginning at the bottom at about 58, in July 1932, going up to the top, about 121, in December 1936; then going down to the low mark of 76 in May 1938; then going back up to a little over a hundred in about midsummer 1938, and declining down to 92 in May 1939.

Nearly every one of these rises has been associated with a new spending program of the Federal Government. Nearly every one of the declines has been the inevitable consequence of a program restricting spending by the Federal Government.

Mr. President, the least we can do is to give a man in this country a chance to work. There is no possible excuse for any government or any economy where there are able-bodied men and women who need work and who want work; there is no excuse that can be given by a civilized State to such men and women when they cannot find work to do.

I will say to my colleagues on this side of the Chamber that just as certainly as we do not measurably solve the problem of unemployment, we not only will but we ought to be deprived of the instrumentalities of national power. Whether the other party will exhibit leadership to the Nation by solving that problem will, if it gets in power, determine whether it will continue to hold that power. People are not going to perish in a civilized day due to a specialized economy that has outgrown the way of life which makes it possible for private enterprise to give all of them jobs.

I will say to my colleagues that the one way to avoid regimentation, the one way to avoid Nazi and Fascist principles, is through Federal aid to provide private jobs and to provide work, without having to restrict production on the farm or in the factory. If someone prefers the restriction process, let him do so. I am against it. I believe we should have an economy of plenty, as the able Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has so often and so eloquently urged upon the Senate floor. The only way to get that is to provide purchasing power, and the only thing that offers any hope of that being supplied is this program of the Federal Government.

So, Mr. President, we know that people are unemployed. We know they are going to remain unemployed unless we make it possible for them to get jobs. Get away from the W. P. A. if you want to. I should like to see it all abolished and I should like to see such subsidies given to private enterprise that there would be jobs for all under the operations of private industry. But unless such a plan is proposed, and until it is proposed, I shall keep on voting for W. P. A.

I should like to see an adequate lending program, so that every project in America which could be built upon the self-liquidating principle would be able to get capital and the Southwest and the impoverished South would be able to get the capital with which to develop their neglected resources. It ought to be provided, and some day it will be provided, and I shall have the pleasure, I hope, of voting for it when it is offered. But until it is offered and becomes a reality I shall take W. P. A., I shall take P. W. A.; I will take any other alternative.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Florida has expired.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I should state again the view of the committee in its report. The committee was not seeking to pass judgment upon the worth of public-works projects. The committee was reporting a relief measure. The committee was confronted, as the Senate is confronted, with the fact that unless relief measures are passed and signed by midnight on Friday of this week two and a half million people will go out on the streets, off relief, and the W. P. A. will go out of existence.

No such a situation confronts the public-works program. There is no necessity for speed or for including a public-works program in this measure. We can pass a public-works program next week or week after that or later than that. We do not have the emergent relief situation, and I do not think, and the committee, with few exceptions, did not think that the two matters should be confused.

The committee increased the relief expenditures up to the amount the President requested, by taking out the allocation of $125,000,000 to public-works projects. The committee has followed very closely the recommendation of the President in amount and in purposes. The committee has followed Colonel Harrington's suggestion along that line. I do not believe the Senate should at this time add to the pending measure a public-works section, regardless of the merits of public-works projects. It seems to me that there are a number of things which might be said on the public-works phase of the question. I shall not take time to do so.

Mr. President, I cannot refrain, however, making a comment with respect to one thing that my good friend, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], said, because I am one of his admiring and close-listening auditors. He said that if the President would have the courage to spend this much money we ought to have the courage to shoulder the burden and spend another billion dollars. Mr. President, it takes a great deal of courage to spend great sums of money.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, the Senator is correct. He is an auditor; he audits my books as well as listens to me.

Mr. ADAMS. While I am auditing the Senator's books I will call attention to some statistics. The Senator from Oklahoma said that if the Government were to loan money at 2 percent it would be paid back in 50 years. If it were to loan the money at 4 percent it would be paid back in 25 years. The only fly in that ointment is that 2 percent in 50 years would pay back the principal or the interest, but it would not pay back both the principal and the interest.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator from Colorado is criticizing someone else for making a poor argument; he himself is making a poor argument.

Mr. ADAMS. I will admit I am making a poor argument. The Senator does not have to point out that fact.

Mr. FRAZIER. In the measure passed by the House there is a public-works program. The joint resolution will have to go to conference anyway. So it would not entail any additional work. We have in practically every State in the Union projects which have been O. K'd by the Department and they are waiting for the money. The States have been promised the projects, and they are expecting them. I believe they are entitled to them.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, let me say on that point that the Senator from New York made a similar statement—that there was a moral or a legal obligation to those communities that had projects in mind. When the P. W. A. addition was made to the relief measure a year ago—and I was one of those who helped to do it; it was not put on in the House—we provided definitely the amount of money; we provided the dates when the projects could be approved; we made a definite provision in all ways; and no man, no community, no group has a right to claim a promise. That money was all consumed, and they had fair notice and fair warning that if their project, though approved, was not within the amount appropriated, it could not be included. So there is no obligation beyond that.

Mr. President, I know it is important to vote, and I shall discuss this question no further, except to make one additional statement. I made inquiry of the Secretary of the Interior as to the amount of direct labor on the P. W. A. projects on the ground. The direct labor on the P. W. A. projects is 25 percent on the site, and that is not relief labor. What I am thinking of is the man who is hungry, the man who is cold, the man whose family is in distress. I do not believe that at this time we were making advancement by adding the public works to this relief measure. I am hopeful that it may be kept as a relief measure. Let us meet the public-works program at another time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] to the committee amendment. [Putting the question.]

Mr. PEPPER. I ask for a division.

Mr. TAFT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Ellender	King	Reynolds
Andrews	Frazier	La Follette	Russell
Ashurst	George	Lee	Schwellenbach
Austin	Gerry	Lodge	Shipstead
Bailey	Gibson	Lucas	Slattery

Danaher	Hughes	Pittman
Donahey	Johnson, Calif.	Radcliffe
Downey	Johnson, Colo.	Reed

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] to the committee amendment.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I should like to have a word to say about the pending amendment.

It seems to me we are bent upon spending many more millions of dollars. Before the present Congress shall have expired, we probably shall have voted to spend another billion dollars. It is evident to my mind that we have the money to spend; and so long as we have the money to spend we shall continue to spend it.

So long as we have the money to spend, and in view of the fact that we are going to continue to spend money, I am in favor of spending the money in the United States, for the benefit of the 130,000,000 people of the United States and the more than 11,000,000 people who are out of employment at this time.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wonder where the Senator got the idea that we have the money to spend?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Evidently we have it. I obtained the idea through the columns of the press. I learned therefrom that our administration is considering lending $500,000,000 to the countries to the south of us in South America.

If we have $500,000,000 to lend to the dictators in South America or Central America, I say let us take the $500,000,000 and spend it for the benefit of the American laboring men who are out of employment.

For that reason I shall support the Mead amendment, because if we have $500,000,000 to spend, let us grab the $500,000,000 and give it to the people of the United States instead of to the dictators to the south.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] to the committee amendment.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRIDGES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. I am advised that if he were present and voting, he would vote as I shall vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY]. Being advised that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. HOLT (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am informed that if he were present and voting he would vote "nay." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. O'MAHOONEY. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SCHWARTZ] because of illness. On this question he has a special pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. I am informed that if the junior Senator from Wyoming were present and voting, he would vote "yea," and that the Senator from Maryland would vote "nay."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is detained from the Senate because of illness. I am advised that if present and voting, he would vote "nay."

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is absent because of illness in his family.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] are necessarily detained.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN] are unavoidably detained. I am advised that those Senators, if present and voting, would vote "yea."

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] are detained in important committee meetings.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on important public business. These Senators, I am advised, if present and voting, would vote "nay."

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN] is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD]. If present and voting, the Senator from Minnesota would vote "yea" and the Senator from Texas would vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE. I have a general pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD]. I am advised that he would vote as I intend to vote on this amendment, and I, therefore, feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following pair:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN]. If present and voting I am informed the Senator from New Jersey would vote "nay," and that the Senator from Michigan would vote "yea."

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] is necessarily absent on departmental business. He has a general pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN].

Mr. ADAMS. I announce that the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] has been called out of the city on important matters. I am advised that if present and voting he would vote "nay."

So Mr. MEAD's amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I intend to offer an amendment to the pending joint resolution which I assure the Senate in all substantial particulars is the same as the Mead amendment upon which we have just voted, except that the amount of money is cut in half; that is to say, on page 2 of the amendment the amount for loans and grants is reduced from $400,000,000 to $200,000,000. The amount for administrative expenses is cut in half. The amount for Federal projects is cut from $100,000,000 to $50,000,000. In addition to that, my amendment provides that the grant shall be 30 percent instead of 45 percent.

Senators will remember that in the original public-works program the grant was 30 percent, and the loan was 70 percent. The proposal I am now making is a 50-percent cut all along the line. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] has stated today that under the new program the grant will amount to between 15 and 20 percent. It is now 45 percent. I am proposing, for this interim program, to make the grant 30 percent.

I offer the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona desire to have the amendment read?

Mr. HAYDEN. I assure the Senate that it is the same in all substantial particulars as the Mead amendment, except that in all cases the amount of money is one-half that provided by the Mead amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as having been read, and will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HAYDEN's amendment was, in lieu of the matter in title II, beginning on page 35, proposed to be stricken out by the committee, to insert the following:

TITLE II—PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRATION PROJECTS

SECTION 201. (a) In order to increase employment by providing for useful non-Federal public works projects of the kind and character which the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works has heretofore financed or aided in financing, pursuant to title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936, the Public Works Administration Extension Act of 1937, or the Public Works Administration Appropriation Act of 1938, there is hereby appropriated to the Public Works Administration (herein called the "Administration") in the Federal Works Agency, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $200,000,000, together with the balance of the appropriation made under section 201 of such act of 1938, not reserved for administrative expenses of the Administration and not now or hereafter expended pursuant to allotments heretofore made, which amounts shall be available until June 30, 1941, and may be expended by the Commissioner of Public Works (hereinafter referred to as the "Commissioner"), subject to the approval of the President, for (1) the making of loans or grants, or both, to States, Territories, possessions, political subdivisions, or other public bodies (herein called "public agencies"), or (2) the construction and leasing of projects, with or without the privilege of purchase, to any such public agencies.

(b) No amount available under this title shall be allotted for any project which, in the determination of the Commissioner, cannot be commenced prior to March 1, 1940, or the completion of which cannot be substantially accomplished prior to July 1, 1941: Provided, That this limitation upon time shall not apply to any project involved in litigation in any Federal or State court.

(c) Under the funds available in this title, no grant shall be made in excess of 30 percent of the cost of any project, and no project shall be constructed for lease to any public agency unless the Commissioner shall determine that the nonrecoverable portion of the cost of such project shall not exceed 30 percent of the cost thereof.

(d) No moneys for a non-Federal project shall be paid from the funds made available by this title to any public agency unless and until adequate provision has been made, or in the opinion of the Commissioner is assured, for financing such part of the entire cost thereof as is not to be supplied from Federal funds.

(e) Not more than $4,875,000 of the amount available under this title may be used for administrative expenses of the Administration during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, in connection with this title; such amount shall be available for administrative expenses thereof during such fiscal year for the purposes set forth for such Administration in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1940. The Commissioner shall reserve from the amount available under this title an adequate sum for administrative expenses of the Administration in connection with this title for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, subject to authorization hereafter by annual appropriation acts for the utilization thereof.

SEC. 202. Moneys realized from the sale of securities acquired by the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works or the Public Works Administration, or the proceeds of such securities, may be used by the Commissioner for the making of loans in connection with projects under this title, notwithstanding any previous limitation on the total amount of such securities or proceeds thereof that may be used for loan purposes.

SEC. 203. The Public Works Administration is hereby continued to the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, and is hereby authorized to continue to perform all functions which it is authorized to perform on July 1, 1939. On and after the effective date of reorganization plan numbered I transmitted to the Congress by the President of the United States pursuant to the authority granted by the Reorganization Act of 1939, all laws, Executive orders, and other documents referring to the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works shall be deemed to refer to the Public Works Administration, and all laws, Executive orders, and other documents referring to the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works shall be deemed to refer to the Commissioner of Public Works.

SEC. 204. Section 206 of the Public Works Administration Extension Act of 1937, as amended by the Public Works Administration Appropriation Act of 1938, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 206. No new applications for loans or grants for non-Federal projects shall be received by the Administration after September 30, 1939: Provided, That this section shall not apply to applications amendatory of applications for projects received prior to October 1, 1939, and such amendatory applications shall be confined to projects which, in the determination of the Commissioner, can be started and completed within the time limits specified in section 201 (b) of the Public Works Administration Appropriation Act of 1939."

That portion of section 201 (f) of the Public Works Administration Appropriation Act of 1938 which reads "for the completion (except liquidation) of the activities of such Administration," is hereby repealed.

SEC. 205. (a) There is hereby appropriated to the Administration, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to remain available until June 30, 1941, the sum of $50,000,000, to be expended at the direction of the Commissioner, for the making of allotments to Federal agencies for the financing of Federal construction projects (including projects for making surveys and maps) in continental United States outside of the District of Columbia, and the acquisition of land for sites therefor, such projects to be selected from (1) projects authorized by law and (2) projects for the enlargement, extension, or remodeling of existing Federal plants, institutions, or facilities.

(b) No Federal construction project, except flood control and water conservation or utilization projects now under actual construction, shall be undertaken or prosecuted with funds made available by this section unless and until moneys sufficient for the completion thereof shall have been irrevocably allocated or appropriated therefor.

SEC. 206. This title may be cited as the "Public Works Administration Appropriation Act of 1939."

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Arizona if I correctly understand that under the amendment as he has now presented it the proportion of public-works cost to be borne by the municipalities, cities, and other public bodies will be 70 percent instead of 55 percent, as under the present plan?

Mr. HAYDEN. I am returning to the original public-works program which we adopted in 1933, when the grant was 30 percent and the loan feature was 70 percent.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Do I correctly understand that under the terms of this amendment it would also be perfectly possible for the Public Works Administration to undertake public works without any grant at all?

Mr. HAYDEN. Without any grant at all?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes; just by loaning the money necessary for the project.

Mr. HAYDEN. In each case the amount has been a maximum. That is, the law first provided that the grant should not be more than 30 percent. Then the law was amended so as to provide that it should not be more than 45 percent.

The grant might be anywhere from those figures down, of course.

I offer this amendment because the original proposal made by the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] was submitted in the Committee on Appropriations. It did not prevail. This proposal also was submitted, and it received much more substantial support in the committee, as I hope it will in the Senate.

I think the proposal is thoroughly understood.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. BAILEY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, I do not wish to take the time of the Senate except to say that this is the same proposition on which we have just voted, except as to the change in the amounts and the relationship between grant and loan.

Personally, I do not see that there is any advantage in the proposal of the Senator from Arizona over the program which we have been talking about today, and which we all hope to have inaugurated within a very short time. So it seems to me there is no advantage to the communities in voting this amendment up, whereas under the program which has been projected and which we have discussed there would be a loan of 15 to 20 percent, but it would be at a lower rate of interest, and all of it would be returned to the Government of the United States, and no grant at all would be involved.

Mr. HAYDEN. Let me point out one advantage to the communities. Under the terms of the House bill, new projects may be considered until next October. The gate is closed now. That will allow the Public Works Agency to consider all these projects; and, as the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] so ably pointed out earlier in the day, that is a positive advantage in connection with the new plan which the President proposes, because the projects are worked out, and if the money cannot be obtained in one way it can be obtained in another.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it has been demonstrated here beyond cavil that more than a billion dollars' worth of projects are already worked up, and are now ready for action.

Mr. HAYDEN. If they can get 45 percent.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, may I ask a question of the Senator from Arizona? If we do not adopt this amendment and appropriate more money, the P. W. A. will fold up. Is not that true?

Mr. HAYDEN. Oh, yes; it definitely expires 1 year from now. No new projects will be considered, and none could be considered since last October.

Mr. LEE. This $200,000,000 would not be taken from the W. P. A. appropriation; would it?

Mr. HAYDEN. Not at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator I suggest that if the amendment is not adopted, the P. W. A. does not fold up. It still goes on for another year, but it is a new program. The proposal that has been made, if adopted, will constitute practically a permanent law whenever the exigencies require the advance of credit by the Government of the United States to the local communities. So not only would the P. W. A. not fold up, but it would be indefinitely extended.

Mr. LEE. The new program contemplates loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, no!

Mr. LEE. The Public Works Administration is wiped out.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is the new Work Administration or Authority which is set up in Plan No. I of the President. Its name is changed, but that is all. It still goes on.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Arizona one other question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is going to recognize the Senator from Oklahoma, in order that some Senator may have the floor. To whom does he yield?

Mr. LEE. I am about to yield to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN]. I wish to ask just one other question. If we should adopt the amendment which the Senator has offered, and should also adopt the new proposed program, we should then have appropriated for W. P. A. only approximately half the amount that we appropriated last year. Is not that true?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is a correct statement.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I think it ought to be made perfectly clear in the Record that the answer made by the Senator from Arizona to the Senator from Oklahoma may be very misleading. So far as concerns its being true that if this amendment is voted down the P. W. A. will fold up, the records of the Appropriations Committee show that the peak of the P. W. A. work will not be reached until some time in October of this year, and it will not be folding up at all. Those projects are just getting under way; and, as already brought out, at least half of the amount contained in the very large appropriation we made last year is still unexpended. It has been allocated; the work has been started on some of it; but we shall not reach the peak for some months in the future. New projects, however, will not be undertaken.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is what I referred to.

Mr. BURKE. Of course, that is what the Senator from Arizona meant.

Mr. HAYDEN. I do not see how what I said could be construed in any other way.

Mr. BURKE. I wanted it to be clear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] to the amendment reported by the committee. On that question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. HOLT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRIDGES. I have a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. I understand that if he were present he would vote "nay" on this question. Therefore, I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am informed that if present he would vote "nay." If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea." I withhold my vote.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SCHWARTZ] because of illness. He has, however, a special pair on this question with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea," and the Senator from Maryland would vote "nay."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is detained from the Senate because of illness. I am advised that if present and voting, he would vote "nay."

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is absent because of illness in his family.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] are necessarily detained.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN] are unavoidably detained. I am advised that those Senators if present and voting would vote "yea."

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] are detained in important committee meetings.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on important public business. These Senators, I am advised, if present and voting would vote "nay."

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN] is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD]. If present and voting, the Senator from Minnesota would vote "yea," and the Senator from Texas would vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE. I have a general pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD]. I am advised that he would vote as I intend to vote on this amendment, and I, therefore, feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the pair on this question of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN]. If present, the Senator from New Jersey would vote "nay," and the Senator from Michigan would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 38, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
June 28, 1939.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 32 and 142 to the bill (H. R. 5269) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, and concur therein;

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 141 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"Emergency erosion control, Everglades region, Florida: For research and demonstration work in soil-conservation control measures, including research and demonstration work in fire-control and irrigation-construction work to eliminate fire hazards, in the Everglades region of Florida, $75,000: Provided, That no expenditures shall be made for these purposes until a sum at least equal to such expenditures shall have been made available by the State of Florida for the same purposes."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 158 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter inserted by said amendment insert a period and "Notwithstanding any such determination by the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, this provision shall not be construed to prevent any criminal process against any person who was a party to or had guilty knowledge of such fraud or misrepresentation."

That the House further insists upon its amendment to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33 to said bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, to what bill does this action of the House relate?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have just submitted the second conference report on the agricultural appropriation bill. This concludes legislative action on the bill, if the Senate will agree to the motion I am about to make.

I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 33, 141, and 158.

The motion was agreed to.

WORK-RELIEF AND RELIEF APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 326) making appropriations for work relief, relief, and to increase employment by providing loans and grants for public-works projects, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, last evening the amendment on page 21, beginning in line 14, was passed over in order that I might prepare an amendment to it. I have prepared it and will submit it to the Senator from Colorado, and I think he will accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 21, at the end of line 19, it is proposed to insert

Provided, however, That such preference need not apply when it results in undue hardship.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the proviso merely softens somewhat the provision of the committee amendment, which makes it automatically necessary to discharge one who has been employed 18 months if someone who has been on the roll 3 months applies for employment. It seems to me there ought to be some discretion in the Commissioner, that if such a contingency should arise which would result in undue hardship, the Commissioner should not be compelled to discharge a man under those circumstances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, we could not hear what the amendment was.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, under the amendment offered by the Senate committee, on page 21, those who have been employed on projects for 18 months must give way to any on the certified list for 3 months who have not been able to secure positions with the W. P. A. I interpret this provision to be almost mandatory, in the event some one on the certified list for as much as 3 months applies for a position held by someone else who has been on the job for 18 months.

My amendment merely provides that when the discharge of the man employed would result in undue hardship, the Commissioner shall not be compelled to give preference to the new man who is seeking the position.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment passed over is at the top of page 6, and will be reported by the clerk for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed on page 6, line 1, after the word "exceed", to strike out "in the aggregate the sum of $45,000,000 during the fiscal year 1940, of which sum the amounts so to be obligated for the following respective purposes shall not exceed these sums: Salaries, $40,000,000; communication service, $600,000; travel, $4,200,000; and printing and binding $500,000", and to insert "4 percent of the total amount made available in this section to such Administration."

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, it was because of an amendment I desire to submit that I asked the Senator from Colorado to have the amendment passed over. I understand that there may be some question of administration.

The amendment I am about to submit to the Senate reads as follows:

The Administrator shall furnish upon request to any Member of Congress the names, addresses, positions, and salaries of all employees of the Works Progress Administration whose wage or pay is a thousand or more dollars annually.

Mr. President, let us find out where the money is going, and what they consider to be "administration." I believe they are hiding over a hundred million dollars under the term "project supervision," which is actually administration, and they say that it is none of our business to know how it is spent. I read one letter this morning. Let me read another letter from the W. P. A. Administrator in reply to my request for the pay roll. He said:

We have not made it a practice to give out information concerning the individual salaries and addresses of employees except those in a position to formulate policy or direct major portions of the operations. We have felt that the public could have no legitimate interest in such information and that its release would very possibly result in these persons being subjected to solicitation from salesmen and the gossip of neighbors.

This is the only pay roll of a Government department that is not open to public inspection. City pay rolls are open, county pay rolls are open, State pay rolls are open, all Federal pay rolls are open except the W. P. A. pay rolls, and they are not open even to a Member of the Senate, who must pass upon the appropriations. For this reason I feel that Congress should put this amendment into the law, so that the W. P. A. cannot get around it, so that it will be stated as the actual legislative policy that the Administrator shall be required to give the information to Congress when it desires to have it.

Mr. ADAMS and Mr. REED addressed the chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. HOLT. I yield first to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. If I heard the amendment correctly, it would enable any Member of Congress to get the complete list of employees drawing more than a certain sum throughout the United States. It is not limited to the District of a Representative or the State of a Senator, as I understood it.

Mr. HOLT. I am perfectly willing to limit it.

Mr. ADAMS. There are 38,000 employees, roughly, and I am thinking of the clerical work which might be involved.

Mr. HOLT. I can appreciate that, and I shall be glad to confine it to the names, positions, addresses and salaries of all employees of the Works Progress Administration in the State of the Congressman.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. HOLT. I yield first to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I heartily agree with the Senator from West Virginia. I merely wanted to inquire the date of the letter he read.

Mr. HOLT. I do not have the exact date of the one I just read. The last one was dated October 20, 1938. I read it in reply to the Senator from Michigan this morning.

Mr. REED. Who signed that letter?

Mr. HOLT. The one I read relating to gossiping neighbors was signed by Mr. Hopkins. The other was signed by Mr. Williams. Both of them refused the information.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator very much. I heartily agree with the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia, if he will confine it perhaps so as to make the administration simpler, according to the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. HOLT. I think the suggestion is wise.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am perfectly in sympathy with the idea that these records should be available, but it seems to me a little unusual that the entire pay rolls should be available upon the request of any Member of Congress. Why not have a mandatory provision in the law that a report should be made to Congress periodically, every month, let us say, or at any convenient time, so that the information will be available to Members of Congress? It is a little unusual to provide that individual Members of Congress may call upon any department for a list of its employees, so that they could get them for their own individual benefit. The information ought to be reported to Congress, it seems to me, and we could make such use of it as we saw fit.

I make the suggestion to the Senator because I think it is an unusual precedent to provide that any Member of Congress can, upon writing a letter, get a list of all the employees in any department of the Government drawing more than $1,000 a year. Would the Senator be willing to modify his amendment accordingly?

Mr. HOLT. The reason why I do not think that answers the problem is that the W. P. A. has taken an unusual attitude toward this matter. It is the only department of the Government that refuses the pay roll. I hope so, at least.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know about that. I am not so certain that I could write a letter to the Interior Department, or to any other department, and get a list of the employees drawing a certain salary. I have never attempted it, and I am not certain that I would not get the same sort of reply the Senator received. Regardless of all that, however, it seems to me unusual to put such a list at the disposal of any individual Member of Congress. We might as well say that any Member of Congress could write to the Secretary of the Treasury and get a list of all those who pay income taxes over a certain amount. Those lists are available to Congress.

Mr. HOLT. That is entirely different, because that is a private record, but this is information as to an expenditure of public money.

Mr. BARKLEY. The income-tax record is a private record, but it is a private record with reference to a public matter, that is, the payment of taxes. There is an analogy between the two. I am just suggesting this to the Senator in the interest of good, orderly legislation, because I think, after all, it is going quite far. I am not going to oppose the amendment in its present form, if it is voted on in this form, but I do think it would be better to provide a mandatory provision that the reports should be sent to Congress. Then any Congressman could obtain them for any use.

Mr. HOLT. That would entail decidedly more work on the W. P. A., because some Senators might not want the information.

Mr. BARKLEY. Suppose all of them did want it, and they wrote separate letters; the W. P. A. would have to make 96 separate replies.

Mr. HOLT. It certainly would not hurt them to make reports on the expenditure of money.

Mr. BARKLEY. They might have to employ more W. P. A. workers to get the reports out, if we made the request.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield?

Mr. HOLT. With pleasure.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to suggest to the Senator from West Virginia, and also to the Senator from Kentucky, that it seems to me either one of the proposals is too broad and that to carry either proposal into effect would be too expensive. To carry out the suggestion of the Senator from West Virginia would take a great deal of time; it would consume the time probably of one or more clerks in each division, wherever there was a large number, and under the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky there would be someone making reports regularly right along every 2 weeks or every month, and that would consume much time.

There is another objection, however, which it seems to me is more important than what I have suggested. I believe these lists ought to be public, that anyone ought to be able to have access to a public record. If we leave it as the Senator from West Virginia has it, we will subject Members of Congress to very serious criticism. It will be claimed at once, it seems to me, that they are building up a fence around themselves, and that access inside will be denied to the public. Conceive the result. It seems to me that hundreds of times, in very election where a Member of Congress will be running for reelection and someone is opposing him who is not a Member of Congress, there will be available a list of names, a list of voters, in the State or in the district where the election is held. That list will be worth something. It will be accessible to the Member of Congress and not accessible to his opponent, and there will be criticism, which it seems to me will be justified.

We cannot afford to pass a law providing that there shall be furnished to us a list of names of voters which we do not permit our opponents to have. Why could not the Senator modify his amendment so as to provide that the list shall be made public, so as to give access to the list to anyone interested in getting the names? I think the Senator's idea is a good one. I am in favor of his proposal. However, I do not wish to surround it with what seems to me to be a dangerous limitation, in that we would have available a list of names which our opponents could not obtain.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I feel that every individual should have a right to know how every penny of relief money is spent, but I do not know of any way the information can be made public except in the manner suggested. Other agencies publish such information, but the emergency agencies do not.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, it would be easy to provide by law that these records shall be public records.

Mr. NORRIS. That is all that has to be done.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is really all that is necessary, and then anyone who is interested could go and look at them.

In addition to what the Senator from Nebraska has said, we heard in connection with the tax bill the other day about a sort of a racket. It was called to our attention by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER]. Someone was selling at so much per page or per list the names of those who made over $15,000 a year as salaries in private industry. We adopted an amendment to the measure which prohibited the publication of any such information.

I am afraid that someone who may want to sell a list of W. P. A. workers could get hold of it and sell it to someone who wants to advertise or to write letters to those on the list, or even use the list for political or other purposes. They might be in a position to impose upon the very men and women who are employed. They might even obtain such a list, and then send out an advertisement asking, "How much will you pay me for it?" We know that lists of voters are obtained from the registration books in every courthouse in the United States by those interested in getting them, and then are sold for some purpose, either to mail-order houses or to somebody running for office or someone else.

Mr. President, I certainly would not want to see W. P. A. workers harassed and imposed upon in such a manner.

Mr. HOLT. The W. P. A. workers will not come under the provisions of the amendment. It refers to those who are above the security wage.

Mr. BARKLEY. I know it refers to those making above a thousand dollars. However, they are on W. P. A., and if they are on W. P. A. they would be working for that particular branch of Government. However great the value of the information may be, however much we may be entitled to it and the public may be entitled to it, I do not want to see an amendment put into the measure which would make W. P. A. workers victims of men who might wish to harass them simply because they could get a list of their names.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not know whether or not I heard the Senator from Kentucky correctly. I merely wish to be sure. Did the Senator say that he was afraid that the W. P. A. and W. P. A. workers might be used for political purposes?

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, no; I did not say that; because I am satisfied that probably some of them have already been used in the way of voting. I do not know of any rule which would deny a man running for office the right to electioneer with a W. P. A. worker who is a voter. What I said was that I did not want a list created in such a manner as to give to some advertising company or some mail-order house or somebody running for office an exclusive right to have such a list or obtain it and harass W. P. A. workers.

Mr. BAILEY. I merely want to say that I very much regret that I did not hear the Senator say that he had become afraid that the W. P. A. might be used for political purposes. I was hoping that he was becoming a little fearful on that subject.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not catch the Senator's remark. He was hoping what?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia has the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator said that he was hoping something. I did not catch the word.

Mr. BAILEY. I was hoping the Senator was becoming a little fearful that the W. P. A. might be used for political purposes. I regret that the Senator did not say it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know just what implication the Senator has in his mind when he says he hopes I was beginning to become fearful. From the time the W. P. A. was established by Congress, I have here and elsewhere advocated openly and aboveboard that the W. P. A. should not be used for political purposes, and that no man who works for it should be harassed or intimidated or coerced or in any way dealt with by reason of the fact that he had such employment. I have never approved of or in any way sanctioned such practices.

Mr. BAILEY. I had reference to the Senator's impassioned appeal to us just as we were about to adjourn last year on the subject of allowing those on W. P. A. the same freedom that was enjoyed by those who worked for the road commission or the highway commission in his State.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no apology for the statement I then made, and I do not retract what I then said—that a man working for the W. P. A. or any other branch of the Government ought to be as free in the exercise of his political rights as any other man working for anyone else in the United States.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; and that the Congress ought not to pass a measure, as we then intended to do and were about to pass, known as the Hatch measure. I wish to say that the statement made by the Senator that an annual report made about the matter that the Senator from West Virginia has in mind will not cover the point.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not say annual report only. I said we can compel them to make it as often as we want to.

Mr. BAILEY. We have very many temporary projects. It would not do us any good at the end of the year to know that on certain temporary projects more persons had been employed than were necessary. Mr. President, we are responsible for the administration of the work projects.

I am not disposed to bring up matters of this kind, but I happen to know of a small project in my State. I think its cost was $85,000. A friend in the city who had been working on the project filed with me a letter giving the names of 12 different persons serving on that project in the capacity of supervisors and in other positions. There were 12 of them supervising one small project. It happened to be on the eve of a local election. I filed a letter with the Administrator. I do not know what happened. He said he would investigate. I have never heard anything more about it. But that is happening in America. When a little project to provide work for people who are destitute is undertaken local politicians as well as Members of Congress and other men who undertake to manage this thing politically step right in and get one man appointed at $1,200 a year and another one at $1,400 a year; one is a timekeeper, the other is a supervisor, the other is an overseer. One looks after the ditching; the other looks after the banking; and the other looks after the woodwork. Senators will find that the W. P. A. has been loaded down from the beginning with that sort of thing.

The Senator from West Virginia is now simply asking that we adopt an amendment which will enable the Members of the Congress, who are responsible for the appropriation of this money, and ought to be responsible for its wise expenditure, to obtain the necessary information when they want it. A great furor is raised about this and that in order to prevent that being done. I am in favor of the amendment. I am in favor of the reformers standing for reform. They are on the inside now, but they should not cover up.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. REED. I am a new Member of this body, Mr. President, and the first discussion in which I participated had to do with the confirmation of a former Administrator of the W. P. A. There was available the report of the committee of this body, which investigated the W. P. A. last year, the chairman of which committee was the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD]. That report divulged a great deal of mismanagement and corruption in the W. P. A. From that day to this every additional disclosure has shown more waste, more extravagance, more corruption.

The distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] stood on the Senate floor and said it was the fault of Congress, and that the W. P. A. Administrator, who is now Secretary of Commerce, should not be held responsible, because the Congress had failed in its duty to prevent corruption in the administration of W. P. A.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate—and I beg the pardon of the Senator from West Virginia for taking up his time—

Mr. HOLT. Go right ahead, Senator.

Mr. REED. I call attention to the language on page 31, section 29, in the measure we are now considering, where it is provided:

(a) It shall be unlawful for any person knowingly to solicit, or knowingly be in any manner concerned in soliciting, any assessment, subscription, or contribution for the campaign expenses of any individual or political party from any person receiving compensation or employment provided for by this joint resolution.

On page 32 in section 30 is some additional language dealing with that phase.

I say to the Senate that here is its opportunity to put a final stop to this extravagance and waste of W. P. A. funds appropriated by the Congress. The amendment possibly may not be in the most perfect shape that could be conceived, but if the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia should be adopted, and any Member of Congress could obtain this information at any time, it is my belief, Mr. President, that it would be made public quickly enough, and be available for public purposes, and would put a stop to these abuses. If the Senate is fair with itself and fair with the public it will adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I should like to point out to the Senator with reference to the comment made by the senior Senator from Kentucky that the provision which was adopted the other day by way of amendment to the tax bill, provided that there was to be no sale of the information contained in the list in question. It did not prohibit publication by newspapers or magazines or any other legitimate or proper sources, for the dissemination of public information. I thought that perhaps should be recalled to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. HOLT. I thank the Senator. I wish to make a further statement about this matter. The Senator from Kentucky said that certain persons will procure the lists and sell them to others. I have always felt that the expenditure of public money is a public business, and whenever any person starts to hide public business we had better watch that individual, regardless of who he may be or where he may be employed. My amendment does not seek to have divulged the names of individuals on relief. All it seeks to do is to make available the names of individuals who make over $1,000 a year out of the relief funds. If the amendment should be adopted, Congress would save the taxpayers of the United States millions of dollars because that is where they are hiding the waste in the W. P. A., and getting away with it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, I wish to express my approval of the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia. I am reminded of the expression used by President Woodrow Wilson. He said, "Let light into the dark places." That is what this amendment would do.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] that this matter be taken to conference. Perhaps it can be worked out so that the language would be more scientific. I see no harm in taking it to conference and trying to work it out.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I wish to point out further that we can limit the sale of this information.

Mr. HOLT. I do not think there has been any question about the use of the information. The information has been limited to only a few. It has not been available to the public. If one is on the inside, he can obtain it. I know it has been done just that way. Nevertheless, I wish to have the Senate go on record in a roll-call vote on this question, so that there will be no excuse for the conferees to say, "We accepted it as a matter of course. We do not care about it."

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senator that the clerks did not get his amendment as he read it. If the Senator will send it to the desk, it will be very helpful.

Mr. HOLT. I shall be glad to send my amendment to the desk.

Now, Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, may the amendment be stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the proper place, it is proposed to insert:

The Administrator shall furnish upon request to any Member of Congress the names, addresses, positions, and salaries of all employees of the Works Progress Administration whose wage or pay is $1,000 or more annually.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. KING addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator from West Virginia, who has thought about the matter, would modify his amendment, I believe a serious objection to it could be met. I am in favor of publicity. I should like to have not only the salaries of $1,000 and more but all salaries made public records, which anybody could obtain if he were interested enough to inquire. We talk about publicity and the great good it does. Here we have an amendment which does not give publicity. I admit that the Senator from West Virginia and other Senators in good faith have taken the view that it does provide publicity. However, such an amendment would place a handicap upon Members of Congress. If such an amendment were adopted, we should see flaming headlines announcing that Members of Congress have shielded themselves; that they are able to obtain information which is denied to the public. Technically that objection applies to the amendment.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, would the Senator be willing to permit me to modify my amendment so as to provide that such salary lists shall be matters of public record?

Mr. NORRIS. Absolutely.

Mr. HOLT. Then I shall add that provision to the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator does not need to do that.

Mr. HOLT. I should like to have the amendment specific and then add the provision that such lists shall be matters of public record.

Mr. NORRIS. That would greatly help.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, does the Senator mean that if I write to the W. P. A. to obtain these lists and they are sent to me in a letter, then they become public records? How are we going to make them public records unless we provide by law that they shall be public records?

Mr. NORRIS. If we had the right kind of an amendment that would be the law.

Mr. BARKLEY. The information ought not to have to be sent to me as an individual Senator in order to be a public record. That is the point I am trying to impress upon the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that is a valid objection. The amendment ought to provide that the lists shall be public records, accessible to all persons at any reasonable hour. Everybody would not want to obtain them; but persons who were interested could obtain them. If I were running for Congress in a certain district, perhaps I would want the lists. I could obtain them. The Administrator would have to send them to me. However, my opponent could not obtain them. What would the public say to that? What would any honest man say to that?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I should simply say that the lists shall be available to any citizen of the United States at any reasonable hour.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; as all public records are. These lists are not any different from any other public records. It seems to me that would not only be fair to everybody but it would shield Members of Congress themselves from the charge which would be made if we should provide by law that we shall be entitled to such lists, but nobody else shall be.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I agree entirely with the Senator from Nebraska. About a year ago complaint was made to me about the large number of persons in the Works Progress Administration who were receiving large salaries. I went to the Administrator. Of course, he knew the names of all those individuals and the salaries they were paid. I suggested to the Administrator that he ought to have in his office a list of such persons, available to any person who desired to inquire. I think the Administrator in every State or every district ought to make available to any person the list of those who are on the W. P. A.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I accept the modifications suggested by the Senator, that such information shall also be available to any citizen of the United States during office hours at the Works Progress Administration headquarters.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think that provision ought to be in the amendment. I do not believe the Administrator should be required to send such lists to Members of Congress.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, would the Senator be willing to accept a substitute in the following language:

The names, addresses, positions, and salaries of all employees of the Works Progress Administration whose wage, salary, or pay is $1,000 or more annually, shall be public records and available to any citizen of the United States.

Mr. HOLT. That is satisfactory. I want it to be understood that that information is not hidden.

Mr. BARKLEY. It would be a public record and available to any citizen. It could not be hidden.

Mr. HOLT. I think that language would be satisfactory.

Mr. President, I accept the modification, and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the yeas and nays have been ordered upon the amendment first tendered by the Senator from West Virginia. The rules of the Senate require unanimous consent in order to modify it thereafter. Is there objection to the modification of the amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I wish to make a suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from West Virginia. He can obtain a writ of non exeat facendum, or a writ of some other sort and compel the disclosure to him of those names, under the language used by the Senator from Kentucky. If the Senator wishes to accomplish the result he seeks, he should keep his amendment in the form in which it was in the beginning, and go ahead and fight it out.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I suppose I still have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not yielded the floor to any other Senator. However, no one has paid any attention to me or the fact that I have the floor. Since I have the floor, I should like to say just one word in reply.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is not the only one.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I did not know the Senator had the floor. I thought the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Holt] had the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not complaining about that. However, Mr. President, I am complaining about Senators who intimate or suggest that anyone is trying to cover something up. I do not think that it is in the mind of any Senator. The Senator from West Virginia has opened up a question which I think is important. I believe his ideas are correct about it.

All I care for is that the amendment should be broad enough so as not to injure anybody, and so that the charge may not be made that we are trying to cover up our own tracks. I think that charge would lie against the amendment as originally framed. If we said to any department of the Government, "You must give us a list whenever we write for it, and nobody else may obtain it," we would be open to such a charge. In a campaign for the House of Representatives or the Senate, lists are very important. They are used by all candidates and all parties for all kinds of purposes. The purposes may be honorable or dishonorable. But if the lists are public records, whatever the purpose may be, any citizen is entitled to obtain them. I do not wish to cover up these lists. Any insinuation that because we want a modification of the amendment we are trying to cover up something or we are not trying to do our duty is unjustified and uncalled for, so far as I am able to see.

The Senator from West Virginia has offered an amendment on a very important subject. It is an important amendment. He is entitled to credit for offering it, and he is entitled to credit for the manly way in which he has received any constructive suggestions to improve it. It seems to me there is no need for us to do anything but to get the amendment in proper shape so that it will apply to everybody and give no one an advantage.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky read the amendment as he feels it should be?

Mr. BARKLEY. I have reduced it to writing. Let me see if it does not satisfy the situation:

The names, addresses, positions, and compensation of all employees of the Works Progress Administration whose compensation is $1,000 per annum or more shall be public records and available to any citizen of the United States, and shall be reported on the 1st of each month to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HOLT. I think that is satisfactory.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion? I suggest that the Senator strike out the words "$1,000 or more" so that it would apply to everybody.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very well.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the opinion of the author of the amendment, whoever is the author. If the words "$1,000 or more" were stricken out, would not a person on work relief be considered an employee within the meaning of the amendment? Is that the desire of the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator repeat his question.

Mr. HATCH. It was suggested that the words "$1,000 or more" be stricken.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that if we include everybody—

Mr. NORRIS. That may be going too far.

Mr. BARKLEY. It means the name of every laboring man in a ditch somewhere digging a trench to lay a pipe; and it means everybody who works as much as a week. I think what the Senator from West Virginia is trying to get at is the salary lists of those who receive $1,000 or more from the W. P. A.

Mr. HOLT. The bosses.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, that would include the bosses. I am sure they draw more than $1,000 a year. I think the amendment ought to be limited to $1,000, because otherwise it would include every man who works for a day or a week on some project.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia has the floor.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. May I inquire from the Senator from Kentucky whether or not the amendment, in the shape he now has it, would require waiting until the end of the year to determine whether or not a man had received $1,000 or more? If the Senator from West Virginia is going to change the original form of his amendment and adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky, should not the language be "at the rate of $1,000 or more annually"?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, it might be; but if the words "at the rate of" are used, that means that if a man is working for a dollar and a half a day—of course, it would be impossible for that to amount to a thousand dollars a year—but if he is working only for a day for $5 a day, or $2.50 a day, whatever the rate is, if he works only a day or a week he is working at the rate of something a year in case he works all the year at that rate; so we do not get away from the difficulty to which I called attention.

I do not think it is worth while to be too technical over this matter. What the Senator from West Virginia is trying to do, and what we are all trying to do, is to get a list that is public property of those who are getting $1,000 a year or more. It seems to me that is sufficient.

Mr. HOLT. I think the Senator is wise in that suggestion, because after the adoption of the amendment we should have to wait for a year to determine the compensation. I think "at the rate of" would specifically give us a list at the end of July; and I think the amendment should be modified to that effect.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will modify the amendment by putting in the words "at the rate of $1,000 per annum or more," so that it can be worked out. I have no objection to that modification. I think, though, it probably would require a report on a man who worked a month and never worked any more.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, it seems to me that would be all right. The authorities might conceivably put on the employees just before election and work them for a month. I think the expression should be "at the rate of."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD and Mr. REED addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HOLT. I yield first to the Senator from Minnesota. Then I will yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Has the Senator accepted an amendment striking out the words "one thousand"?

Mr. HOLT. No; I did not do that, because I do not want it said that I am trying to get the names of relief clients. I do not care about the names of relief clients. I want to know who the bosses are.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

Mr. HOLT. I now yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. I do think it is advisable, if the Senator from Kentucky will permit me, to insert in the amendment the words "at the rate of."

Mr. BARKLEY. I have done it, and I am hoping we may vote.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, let the clerk read the amendment so that we may have a ye-a-and-nay vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the modification of the amendment?

Mr. BARKLEY. I may modify my own amendment, of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in order that the RECORD may show the substitute which I am offering, and which I understand the Senator from West Virginia accepts, I will read it and let the Official Reporter take it:

The names, addresses, positions, and compensation of all employees of the Work Projects Administration whose compensation is at the rate of $1,000 per annum or more, shall be public records, and shall be available to any citizen of the United States on request, and shall be reported on the first of each month to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the modified amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] in the nature of a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] to the amendment reported by the committee. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, it seems to me it ought to be made plain that the amendment is not meant to include those on the relief rolls. As a matter of fact, at the present time there are on the relief rolls persons who are paid at the rate of more than $1,000 a year.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I understand that the amendment is a modification of my amendment. Is that correct?

Mr. BARKLEY. It is a substitute for it.

Mr. HOLT. I should like to accept it as a modification of my amendment, if the Senator from Kentucky does not object.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, no. Does the Senator desire to have it as a modification of his amendment?

Mr. HOLT. I do.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Kentucky if the language of his substitute provides for furnishing information about the amount of the compensation?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; it provides for furnishing the names, addresses, positions, and compensation of all such employees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment having been accepted by the Senator from West Virginia, the question is on agreeing to the modified amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] to the amendment reported by the committee. On that question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRIDGES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. I understand that if that Senator were present he would vote as I am about to vote. Therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. O'MAHONEY (when Mr. SCHWARTZ's name was called). My colleague [Mr. SCHWARTZ] is detained because of illness.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am informed that if that Senator were present he would vote as I shall vote, so I am free to vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HARRISON. Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ] are detained from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is absent because of illness in his family.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN] are necessarily detained.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are detained in important committee meetings.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHAY], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are absent on important public business.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], if present, would vote "yea" on this question.

The result was announced—yeas 66, nays 3, as follows:

So Mr. HOLT's modified amendment to the amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I desire to ascertain if we cannot enter into an agreement for the limitation of debate. There are only two or three more committee amendments, and I think they are not of a major character.

I ask unanimous consent that during the remainder of the consideration of the joint resolution no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes on the joint resolution or more than once or longer than 10 minutes on any amendment.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 13, after the words "shall be", to strike out:

available—

(a) After June 30, 1939, for the operation of any theater project; or

(b) After August 31, 1939.

And insert "available after October 31, 1939," so as to read:

SEC. 25. None of the funds made available by this title shall be available after October 31, 1939, for the operation of any project sponsored solely by the Works Project Administration.

And so forth.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I have a textual amendment, merely changing a date to conform to changes which have been made in the text, which I should like to submit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 29, lines 22 and 23, it is proposed to strike out "July 1, 1939, or September 1, 1939, as the case may be," and to insert in lieu thereof "November 1, 1939."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be received, since it relates to the House text; and, without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment on behalf of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] and the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY]. The amendment simply provides that not more than 1 percent of the entire amount may be set aside to be available for projects exclusively sponsored by the Works Progress Administration. I have conferred with the Senator in charge of the bill, and, while he has not stated that he favors the amendment, he has no objection to its going to conference.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the amendment relates to theaters, does it?

Mr. WAGNER. It does. It is purely discretionary.

Mr. BARKLEY. It would relate also to musical and art projects.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; or any other project which cannot possibly be locally sponsored. The amount is very small.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be considered to be in order, since it amends certain portions of the House text.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I understand the amendment calls for an expenditure of not more than 1 percent of the entire amount to be appropriated for the benefit of W. P. A. I should like to inquire as to what that 1 percent of the entire amount would be?

Mr. WAGNER. About $14,000,000.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I should like at this time to call to the attention of my colleagues in the Senate one phase of the relief bill we now have under consideration about which many have perhaps forgotten, that is, the W. P. A. theater project, which the Senator from New York just mentioned, and how it is being used by clever Communists to spread throughout the land their doctrine of destruction of American institutions.

It is with regret that I express my opposition to the theater project, particularly because some really worth-while things have been done in that activity. But they are far overshadowed by the damage done and the danger to America from the "red" propaganda being broadcast by the majority of the plays and the presentations of the theater project.

Among the worth-while accomplishments is the dramatization of events in America's glorious history, such as that of the Lost Colony of Roanoke Island, which has been put on several years past in my State of North Carolina, a very excellent picturization of American history. I wish every man here might see that presentation. The President of the United States was in North Carolina several years ago, at which time he was provided an opportunity of seeing that play. I am sure there must be a few others as meritorious as this project, but I very seriously doubt it.

By and large, however, the control of the W. P. A. theater project and most of its plays is in the hands of Communists, spreading the doctrine of communism at the expense of the American taxpayer. If the American taxpayers are desirous of paying for the spreading of communistic propaganda and literature all over this country, that is their business, but I am sure that the Members of this body know enough about the sentiments of their constituents to have already ascertained as to whether or not they are desirous of voting funds to continue to spread the communistic propaganda at the expense of the American taxpayers.

Mr. President, this fact alone should compel us to condemn the W. P. A. theater project to the ashcan of oblivion. Its sins far outweigh its good deeds.

We are now asked to dip deeper into every American taxpayer's pocket so that the Government can continue in the show business, losing millions upon millions of dollars, and paying the bills for the dissemination of the revolution made in Russia by the hundreds of radicals who have chiseled into the control of the project at the expense of the Treasury.

According to the amendment just offered, the author of which is the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], he is asking us to vote $14,000,000 of the taxpayers' money to those in this country who are spreading the doctrines of communism and who are bent upon either changing our form of government or overthrowing the present Government of the United States.

Mr. McCARRAN and Mr. PEPPER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. I take it that the Senator does not mean to imply that everyone engaged in the theater business is a Communist?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Not at all.

Mr. McCARRAN. I take it that the Senator realizes that there are many splendid citizens of America who are engaged in that line of business.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Unquestionably, absolutely.

Mr. McCARRAN. If, perchance, there may be on the relief rolls men or women who are inclined to favor communism, but who are American citizens, nevertheless, should we deny relief to unemployed and starving Americans simply because here and there there may arise something which savors of communism?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Not at all.

Mr. McCARRAN. My thought, following my question, is that the more we bring communism out into the open, the more America understands it, the more it will know what it is condemning.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Quite so.

Mr. McCARRAN. America should condemn communism, but it should know what it is condemning before it condemns. Therefore if, perchance, there might be a play put on somewhere which had a communistic trend, would the Senator thereby condemn every actor?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly not.

Mr. McCARRAN. Or every musician?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly not.

Mr. McCARRAN. Every artist; everyone of those who might benefit by the 1 percent of this appropriation?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Not at all.

Mr. McCARRAN. If the Senator agrees with me, then I say that we cannot condemn the whole project because there may be some within it who are wrong.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am quite in accord with the Senator, but I wish to say to the Senator at this juncture that I oppose the expenditure of $14,000,000 of the money of the taxpayers of this country for the purpose of spreading doctrines which are un-American.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think the American people do not need to be taught, through the theater or through any other instrumentality, what communism is. We know what it is. We know its evil propensities, we know its objectives, and if any of the theaters which are being subsidized are engaged in propaganda in favor of communism, I think we ought not to go into the Treasury of the United States and aid them in their communistic activities.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator. Now, in reference to the statement made by the Senator from Nevada, permit me to say that at the outset this evening I spoke of the lost colony at Manteo, Roanoke Island, N. C. There is nothing with reference to the play picturing that incident which pertains to communism, and I am absolutely confident and positive that no one with communistic leanings is now, ever has been, or ever will be connected with that project, and I should dislike very much indeed to see that project interfered with as a result of what I now present for the attention of Senators.

But I will say to the Senator that if the project has to be hampered as a result of lack of appropriations it would be best to hamper it rather than to permit projects all over the United States to continue as they have been going, under the direction of those who are spreading communistic propaganda. I say that the time has come when the representatives of the American people should say to them whether they are for those who are supposed to represent our form of government or whether they are for the Communists. The American people are demanding that we let them know where we stand, and I am trying now to let them know where I stand.

Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. McCARRAN, and Mr. PEPPER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to the fact that I am standing in the rear of the Chamber; and when it is convenient for him to look back this way, I should like to have him consider me.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I should be very happy to consider the Senator from Florida, but at the time he arose my attention was attracted by the junior Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, I am very much in sympathy with the contentions of the Senator from North Carolina, but I call his attention to page 25 of the committee print, paragraph (b) of section 18, which I supported in the committee. It is as follows:

No portion of the appropriation made under this joint resolution shall be used to pay any compensation to any person who advocates * * * the overthrow of the Government of the United States through force or violence.

It may be that that protects the appropriation along the line where the Senator is looking for protection.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator very much for his contribution, and I will say to him that I am in high hopes that that portion of the paragraph he read will provide protection for those who are engaged in projects if they are continued. That is for the protection of American citizens who are not preaching the doctrine of communism.

Now I am glad to yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the very fine utterance of the Senator from North Carolina is concurred in by me, but the Senator from North Carolina cannot brand me, and I do not believe he can brand other Members of the Senate, as being in sympathy with communism because we may vote to feed some hungry people who practice a particular art or follow a particular vocation. We deprecate and we despise anything which would tear down American institutions. I do not belong to a class which ever yielded on that subject. We fought for and we will die for American institutions. But because there might be here or there someone who might express himself as he saw fit does not justify branding a great class of hungry people who have given themselves to a particular art as being all communistic. So that I am not ready to say that those who are hungry and out of employment but, nevertheless, belong to the theater class or the musician class, are all Communists. I am going to vote for the amendment, because I want the hungry fed, not because I want to encourage communism.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Of course, the Senator knows that it was furthest from my thought to infer that anyone here was in sympathy with the Communists. I know that there is no one in this body who is in sympathy with them. As for feeding the hungry, I have voted for every appropriation for the W. P. A., to help the unfortunate men and women who are out of employment, to provide them with food and shelter and clothing, and the only time I have failed to vote for appropriations was when recently we were asked to appropriate $150,000,000, and appropriated only $100,000,000.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President—

Mr. REYNOLDS. I wish to say that I am going to continue to vote for appropriations from the Treasury of the United States so long as there is a hungry man or so long as there is a hungry woman in the United States. We can get money to do other things, and we can get money to do that. I am directing my remarks toward those workers of the Federal theater project who are allied and associated with and are members of the Communist Party. I know, as others know, that there are thousands of fine men and women in the W. P. A. project who are bitterly opposed to the Communists who are associated therein with them, and many Communists have charge of the W. P. A. projects.

I gladly yield now to my distinguished colleague the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, is the Senator from North Carolina aware of the fact that beginning on page 24 of the joint resolution there appears the following provision?—

Sec. 18. (a) No person shall be employed or retained in employment in any administrative position, or in any supervisory position on any project, under the appropriations in this joint resolution unless such person before engaging in such employment (or prior to August 1, 1939, in the case of any person employed before such date who has not taken an oath of office) subscribes to the following oath:

"I, A. B., do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office (or employment) on which I am about to enter (or which I now occupy). So help me God."

Is the Senator aware of that?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am familiar with it. In addition to that, I think the measure requires that every person securing work on W. P. A. must of necessity have made an affidavit to the effect that he is a citizen of the United States of America.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Is the Senator also aware that immediately succeeding that provision there is the following subsection (b) on page 25:

(b) No portion of the appropriation made under this joint resolution shall be used to pay any compensation to any person who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States through force or violence.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, is not the Senator satisfied that those two provisions contain an adequate safeguard against Communists, as the Senator describes them, being the recipients of the appropriations provided for in this measure?

Mr. REYNOLDS. A safeguard to a certain extent, quite true. In addition to providing certain safeguards, I will state to the Senator that I have prepared an amendment to the section on page 22 which will require every person to state in an affidavit his place of birth—if not born in the United States, then in his native country—the date of birth and place of entry into the United States.

The point I make is this: According to the amendment the Senator proposes, that we make expenditure of not more than 1 percent of the entire amount, which, I have been informed by the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], will amount to about $14,000,000. I am opposed to making an expenditure of $14,000,000 for something from which the American people will not benefit, and I say that the American people have received less from their expenditures on W. P. A. as the result of the Federal theater project than anything else, and I do not see why we should be called upon to spend millions of dollars for a project merely for the purpose of protecting perhaps a minority element in this project, as mentioned by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN].

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Is the Senator from North Carolina aware that there are approximately 7,000 persons now engaged in the theater project, and that that kind of work is the normal means of those people for making a livelihood, and if they are diverted into some other kind of work it is taking them out of the work they are fitted to do?

Mr. REYNOLDS. But the difficulty about the theater project is that real actors are not employed. Most of them are "hams." They play to empty houses. The receipts from the Federal theater projects will evidence to the minds of all who have read the hearings that the greater number of them, according to my recollection, are not real actors.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield once more?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Is the Senator aware of the fact that the other day when hearings were in progress before the subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee some of the most eminent actors and producers in this country upon the legitimate stage came here at their own expense, and they took a day to ask the Appropriations Committee, and through the Appropriations Committee the Senate, not to destroy the arts program that was being presented to the American people through the theater project?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am aware of that, but I am also aware of the fact that those gentlemen and ladies who testified are not working for the W. P. A. theater project.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Is the Senator also aware that some of the most eminent actors in Hollywood, who are not working for the W. P. A., but such persons as Tallulah Bankhead and other eminent actors and actresses who came down here, do appreciate the contribution that this arts program is making to the American people? Is the Senator also aware of the fact that all these eminent artists who derive no personal benefit from the project, but who ought to know something of the legitimate stage, came here to testify about its worth to the American people, and not one of them receives any money from it?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes; I read in the newspapers that they were here to testify in regard to the matter, but I did not read their testimony before the committee. I base my opinion upon certain pages of testimony that I have here from the record, which I will read in a moment.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. I will say that I have a break-down of the affiliation of the personnel of the Federal theater project in my home State. While I agree with the Senator in his desire to rid this and other projects and the country, so far as that is concerned, of the so-called "red" menace, I know the Senator will appreciate the affiliation of the personnel and recognize in it a bulwark against communism.

A break-down of the 3,222 people employed on the New York City Federal theater project as of the month of May 1939 reveals two things: That the vast majority belong to old-line and officially accredited union groups and that the belief that they are not professionally qualified theater people is untrue.

From this total of 3,222, let me cite a few figures: One thousand one hundred and fifty actors, 85 percent of whom belong to one or another theatrical union of long standing and the majority of them to Actors' Equity, an affiliate of the A. F. of L.; 417 stage hands, who are 100 percent members of the I. A. T. S. E., also an affiliate of the A. F. of L.; 300 musicians, all of them members of Local 302, American Federation of Musicians, an A. F. of L. affiliate; 200 shop employees, divided among 9 unions which, with the exception of the unaffiliated Public Address System Operators Union, are all A. F. of L. organizations; 23 box-office cashiers, all of them members of the Theatrical Managers, Agents, and Treasurers Union, affiliated with the A. F. of L.

The remainder, or 1,132, belonging to such groups as technicians, designers, promotion workers, and so forth, are to a large degree not affiliated with any professional union.

It is apparent that employees of the Federal theater project owe their allegiance to regular and professional A. F. of L. theatrical unions. The A. F. of L. unions in the theater can be accused neither of subversive actions nor of unprofessionalism.

The sponsorship would further indicate the removal of this project from alien or communistic influence. The co-sponsors in my State include public and parochial schools, Seamen's Home, Salvation Army, Ingleside Home, Twentieth Century Club, St. Giles Home, St. John's Church, Westminster House, American Legion, Adult Education Centers, Wheel-Chair Home, Mount St. Joseph's Normal School.

I know the Senator, in his lofty desire to put down communism, will agree at once that the sponsorship in the union affiliation, so far as my State is concerned, indicates that it squares with the high ideals of Americanism that the Senator is trying to bring out, and is bringing out, in the debate today. They want the Senator's help in order that they may vindicate rather than vitiate the high and lofty ideals for which they are fighting. The only way that can be brought about by such limiting and restricting amendments as the Senator from Florida has read to us, is by way of acquiescence in the suggestion of the Senator that the matter may go to conference, and in order that Americanism, which I know is uppermost in the Senator's mind, may prove itself by the help and the assistance we shall give, by the adoption of the amendment, to the right-minded people, who outnumber all the others, as the Senator from Nevada well said, and who are included in this relief measure, and who need our succor, and our support.

I hope the Senator from North Carolina will continue his fight, and at the same time allow the amendment of the senior Senator from my State [Mr. WAGNER] to go to conference so that the Senator's program may be developed.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I am very much obliged to the junior Senator from the State of New York for his fine contribution. I was particularly happy to have him read the names of those excellent organizations a moment ago, and I was vividly impressed by the mention of the American Federation of Labor and the American Legion, for the reason that I know, as most of us know, that the American Federation of Labor will not permit a Communist in its ranks, and the American Federation of Labor is fighting communism, as are the junior Senator from New York and the senior Senator from New York and all other Senators.

I recall with much pride that the junior Senator from New York has but recently returned from my State of North Carolina, where he delivered a marvelous address before the members of the American Legion at Raleigh, our State capital, at the convention of the American Legion, and I know and the Senator from New York knows that the American Legion is another one of those outstanding organizations of America which is constantly fighting communism.

I have been told and I have read and I have learned from some of the reports that the Workers Alliance, a subsidiary of the Communist Party in this country, is directing the activities of the theater projects; and I have received information in regard to this matter relative to activities of the Communists in our Government, under Government control, and that is the thing I am fighting.

Mr. President, I wish to make it plain that I want to help the actors and the writers and others of similar professions who are unfortunate and are not able to find work, and in that respect are like plumbers and carpenters and bricklayers. A writer, however, cannot go out with a pick and shovel, as can those who have been accustomed to such work. My only idea and the only thing I have in mind is that which is uppermost in the minds of the junior Senator from New York, that if there is any part of this Government in which we find Communists actively engaged we want to get rid of that activity on the part of the Government.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I may say to the able Senator from North Carolina, because he has the floor, that I should like to express my views. America has nothing to fear from the standpoint of communism. The democracy that was born in this country was born to endure by reason of a knowledge of democracy. What we in America have to fear is fear itself produced by someone who forever and always talks about the bugbear of communism. If we will only bring communism out in the open, take it by the two ears and look into the eyes of the thing we shall have nothing to fear.

Communism is a protoplasm that lives in a media of fear, and nothing else, and so long as we have fear, so long will communism prevail, but so soon as we disperse fear and communism comes out into the open, then American democracy in all its grandeur, which has put communism down since the day it first arose, will put communism down again. The trouble is that there are those who forever use the bugbear of communism to scare someone in order that they themselves may rise up and thus be held up as the champions against the so-called danger of communism.

I wish more of communism could be brought into the open, so that the boys of America might learn to despise the thing from the cradle up. If we could only bring it out or forget our fear of it, and damn it, and crush it, it would go out of existence so fast that the able Senator from North Carolina would not have to put forth the splendid energy he has displayed today.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I wish to say to the Senator, in partial answer to what he has said, that I was very happy a moment ago that the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] brought to the attention of the Members of this body an amendment to the joint resolution which provides that one who is opposed to the Government in thought or activity shall not be given any sort of employment under the appropriation we are about to make. I wish to say to the Senator that I am in perfect accord with what he has to say. I do not believe communism will ever reach the point in this country where Communists will take charge of the Government, as they have in Russia. They will never be able to make the progress in this country that they did in Spain. There was a tremendous tussle in old historic Spain; and during the trials and tribulations of that internal revolution, which lasted from July 1936 until only a few months ago, more than 2,000,000 people were slaughtered. I hope that communism will never gain the foothold in this country that it did in Spain, where it brought about the murder of hundreds of thousands of Christian people. I say that communism will never gain a foothold in this country to the extent of taking charge of the Government for the reason that Communists do not believe in God. Communists believe in the destruction of places of worship, and the American people will never be brought around to that viewpoint.

Mr. HOLT and Mr. HUGHES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DANAHY in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator from West Virginia has been endeavoring to obtain the floor for some purpose. I yield first to him, and then I shall be glad to yield to the able Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HOLT. Speaking of communism, the statement has been made that it appears only here and there in the theater project. In April 1936 the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the work of Mrs. Flanagan, who is in charge of theater projects, according to the Senator from Pennsylvania. Mrs. Flanagan wrote the play in which the leading character was a Communist by the name of Wardell. I read from the play. This is Wardell speaking:

Don't you see, Rose, it ain't Purcell that's wrong. It's the plan we live under; it's the whole system. Listen! Maybe I think, like you, that there'll come a time when there'll be shootin'. But today ain't the time. Maybe there'll come a time when we can stand on our feet like free men, instead of crawlin' on our bellies askin' for help. But that time ain't come yet. Some of us believe in a time comin' when everybody will have to work, and there'll be enough work for everybody. Some of us believe that the land and the crops and the cattle and the factories belong to the men that work 'em. But we ain't strong enough yet to take 'em. And that's why some of us think it's more important to work for that time than to shoot up a few rich guys now.

That is from the head of the theater project, according to the Senator from Pennsylvania; and he quotes his authority in Mrs. Flanagan's own words.

Mr. REYNOLDS. What was the name of the play? Was that the one called Barking for Your Supper?

Mr. HOLT. No; according to the Senator from Pennsylvania, the name of the play is Can You Hear Their Voices? I did not hear them.

Mr. REYNOLDS. To which Senator from Pennsylvania does the Senator refer?

Mr. HOLT. I refer to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] who put the material into the RECORD.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I see the senior Senator from Pennsylvania in the Chamber.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be glad to yield. Has the Senator from West Virginia finished?

Mr. HOLT. Yes. I merely wanted to call attention to the head of the project, who says the plan is all wrong. "It is not yet time to kill them. We will kill them later, when we have enough strength." That is the theory of the head of the theater project.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, on April 20, 1936, I placed in the RECORD the material which was read by the junior Senator from West Virginia. I was thoroughly convinced at that particular time that those who were of the extreme radical type had practical control of the theater in New York. Since that time, and since we have begun to talk about this communistic group in the theater, a change has come about, and I believe it is a change for the better. The joint resolution now provides that W. P. A. administrators must take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States. I think we are just now on the eve of taking these theatrical projects from the extremists. There have been, and there are now, some very fine people working in the W. P. A. theatrical projects.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Absolutely.

Mr. DAVIS. They are the finest people in the theatrical world. I was more or less connected with the show business in my younger day; and today I see the men of my age in that field unable to find work anywhere. If we did not provide for them under this project they would be out looking for a place with a pick and shovel, or some other kind of work, which would take away work from those accustomed to manual labor. I wish to read a letter which came to me under date of June 20:

I am writing to you to urge you to do what you can on behalf of the Federal theater W. P. A. project. I agree that this project has heretofore been manhandled by radicals in and around it. No doubt they could and should be eliminated in any new Federal theater project. Further changes could be provided to eliminate all those in the project who are not bona fide actors of long standing. This class of people, made up of individuals unsuited for manual labor, have spent their lifetime in the work of relieving us of our daily care once in a while, and are as much entitled to the provisions of W. P. A. as any other group of artisans or laborers who are in an impossible position at this time.

He goes on to say:

Frankly, I condemn many of the practices and abuses which have grown out of the W. P. A. system in this country. However, as long as we are having a W. P. A. I believe that this class of people to whom I have referred above ought to be provided for.

So do I. I believe in this project. I believe it could be administered in such a way as to give satisfaction to the people generally.

Let me read a letter from the other side of the question. Here is a letter from a young married woman who has had children:

MY DEAR SIR: I am not quite sure I could be most fervent in my plea for the retention of the Federal theater in W. P. A. and spending program now sent to the Senate. I cannot be explosive, nor can I beg. Perhaps it might better to state the story of the one typical Federal theater worker I know best—my father. All his life has been spent in the theater. He is now beyond the age where he is welcome in any other trade. He knows no other.

He has contributed much to the theater in the United States. At one time he was considered the very top as a director of stock. Radio, talking pictures, and the depression robbed him of his profession.

Mr. President, in my State today thousands of men have been robbed of their positions because of the machine age, and they are marching by the hundreds to get on the W. P. A. I see this actor, as I see others with whom I worked, marching today to try to get a job on W. P. A.

Listen to what this good woman says, speaking of her father:

He comes from an old family that settled in this country in 1623. Among his ancestors was a Governor of one of the earliest colonies. He is an American through and through.

I can see that actor in his younger days pleading for every charitable venture in my community, and doing his part. Now, he comes asking us to continue a project which might keep him from misery and want, the Federal theater.

This good woman goes on to say:

The Federal theater was a godsend to my father, after his workless years, just as it was to the thousands of actors everywhere, and they proved it by their subsequent records of achievement. They were not youngsters. They were seasoned professionals. What are people to do now? How are their families to live? My father has a child still dependent upon him. My husband and I can help but very little. We have a family of our own. I have always done my best and I shall continue to do so, but that can be very little, and will prove unsatisfactory.

O Mr. President, I know the time and the energy and the money he has contributed toward the cause which the Senator from North Carolina is advocating today. He has gone all over the country condemning those who are trying to undermine the Constitution of the United States. I do not know of a Senator who would not join with him to help crush communism in our midst. I agree with the Senator from Nevada that the sooner we bring it out in the open the better for us. But let us not throw these men of the stage out on the street. Let us not drive men to do things that they are not competent to do. Let us go ahead and clean our house of this communistic element, whether it be in the theater, in the factory, in the countinghouse, or wherever it may be. Let us wipe it out here in America, and not have a deserving man denied what he received under the W. P. A.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have been seeking to obtain an agreement with respect to debate during the further consideration of the joint resolution. With the permission of the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], who objected to my previous request, I now modify the request I made a while ago. I ask unanimous consent that during the further consideration of this measure no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 20 minutes on the joint resolution, nor more than once or longer than 15 minutes on any amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the senior Senator from Pennsylvania for his fine contribution to this debate. But let me once again make myself clear. I am in favor of providing employment for all actors, actresses, artists, and writers, so long as they are Americans; but I am opposed to spending any of the taxpayers' money to spread the propaganda of the Communists in this country.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. There was much ado a moment ago about the oath that was required to be taken. In the July issue of National Issues, published monthly by the National Committee of the Communist Party, on page 17, I find the following:

The much-referred-to oath that workers on W. P. A. would be required to take, a section in the bill apparently intended for face saving to WOODRUM and his friends, makes the whole affair still more ridiculous. Communists will surely take that oath and take it with genuine sincerity.

In other words, it does not bother the Communists themselves.

Mr. REYNOLDS. What magazine is that from?

Mr. HOLT. It is from National Issues, for July 1939, on page 17.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Is that a communistic publication?

Mr. HOLT. On the inside cover it says:

Editor: Gene Dennis. Published monthly by national committee, Communist Party, U. S. A.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator. I believe no one will say that the Communists are not making headway in this country.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let me say that the expression which the able Senator from West Virginia has read is undoubtedly true. Communism, as we understand it, has no regard for God, so any oath may be taken.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In reference to the spread of communism, I desire to remind the Members of this body that there are 168,000,000 inhabitants of Russia. I dare say that the greater portion of them do not believe in communism, but nevertheless the minorities there are controlling the majority.

In addition to that, we know the headway they have made in Spain, the difficulties they caused there, and we know, in reference to the Asiatic situation, that about two-thirds of China is communistic and controlled by the Communists. At least we certainly know that both Inner Mongolia and Outer Mongolia are under the direction of independent soviet states.

Mr. President, we all have learned from the great works of the theater; we all have enjoyed the splendid and dramatic portrayals of life as presented across the stage. But, Mr. President, I ask the attention of every colleague for the moment to weigh carefully the tripe being served across the footlights by the W. P. A.

It is bad enough to have to put up with ham actors—actors of whom the New York newspapers say in their reviews that they "have not acted and never will," hundreds of whom have had only the thespian experience you and I got in going through high school, or maybe it was in Sunday school playlets when we were children.

But it is worse, Mr. President, when we look over the bill of fare the W. P. A. offers to sell its unsavory collection of communistic, un-American doctrines, its assortment of insidious and vicious ideologies, to the audiences drawn to W. P. A. presentations. Of course, we can thank God that the audiences are small, judging from the box-office records of W. P. A., which show a loss that would drive insane any ordinary theatrical producer.

A few years ago our colleague, the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. HARRISON), speaking in the Senate on useless expenditures by the Federal Government, made one of the most entertaining speeches ever made in this Chamber, I believe. He read the titles of a mess of barnyard literature being issued by the Department of Agriculture. I recall that speech, which I read prior to the time I came to the United States Senate. My recollection is that it was in 1931. I recall that one bore the title "Love Life of a Bullfrog," but it did not have the label, "Written by and paid for with money from the pockets of the American taxpayer."

These putrid plays being presented by the W. P. A., Mr. President, are even more ludicrous than the booklets about which the Senator from Mississippi spoke. There is one great difference. The booklets were inane and comparatively harmless. All they did was to waste some of the money of the taxpayers. But that is not the case with the plays being presented by the W. P. A. theater project—plays that definitely bear the trade-mark of "red" Russia in their titles; plays that were spewed from the gutters of the Kremlin and directed by Communists, so that there could be no weakening of the ideas being spread through the American public. Let us take up a few, the kind that one would not find in the list of "shows you must see" in any reputable publication; the kind, however, that every Senator should see or study, so as to convince himself that the Communists mean business in their efforts to take over America by hook or crook, and are using to the fullest extent the funds of the American taxpayer to put themselves in a position to strangle the taxpayer when they have finished rifling his pockets.

Here is Up in Mabel's Room, which is comparatively clear. Then there is A New Deal for Mary, who probably needed some sort of deal, just as we need to deal out of the game such costs as keeping up with Mary's deal. Mother Goose Goes to Town is another. From looking at the losses of the W. P. A. theater project, I should say that Mother Goose had been sold down the river instead of going to town.

The only persons who have been going to town have been the Communists who are disguising their red pills with salacious coverings so as to lure, like a siren, all who can hear. The titles of the plays speak for themselves; and I judge that the only literature ever read by those in charge of the W. P. A. theater project was written by Boccaccio, or bore the name of Cassanova.

We will start off with The Mayor and the Manicure before going to see A New Kind of Love; and, if we are not careful, according to the W. P. A. play schedule, we can Be Sure Your Sex Will Find You Out. Then, after we are found out, we can be A Boudoir Diplomat, from which we can go to Cheating Husbands; and, once this palls, we probably might enjoy Companionate Maggie.

Of course, one play presented by the theater project might come under the heading of necessary historical, Biblical, and cultural research. That is the question posed in the title, Did Adam Sin?

Once we have settled this question, we might take in any of the following, or perhaps all of them if we chose, and round out the evening in a manner which, if we were to describe it on paper, might violate the postal regulations against obscene material:

Go Easy, Mabel; Just a Love Nest; Love 'Em and Leave 'Em; and then we have Mary's Other Husband by way of diversion.

I join my colleagues in saying that some of these titles perhaps may be a little bit misleading; but there is a side far more serious in the fact that through such material the cardinal keystone of communism—free love and racial equality—is being spread at the expense of the God-fearing, home-loving American taxpayer who must pay the bills for all this dangerous business.

Recently there appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, on page 7234, a lengthy statement showing that the directors of a W. P. A. theater project attempted to persuade an actress to have a date with a Negro who had visited the project. Mind you, this is in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Those of you who desire to check up on it may find it on page 7234. One Trudy Goodrich, secretary of the "red-handed" Workers Alliance which has been issuing great floods of propaganda to prevent congressional elimination of the theater-project fund, told this actress:

I personally encourage Negro attention on all occasions, and go out with them—

Any time she was asked. Trudy, as an employee of the Workers Alliance, which fattens on the dues paid by relief employees from money received from the United States Treasury, is helping us spend whatever we appropriate for a theater project. Trudy told this girl who refused to go out with a Negro, and one of her supervisors named Harold Hecht said to her that the Negro was entitled just as much to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness as was the girl. The girl, however, felt that she herself should choose what constituted the pursuit of happiness.

Do you think the American taxpayers would approve of our financing Trudy in her pursuit of happiness with whatever men of whatever color she might choose, under whatever condition and in whichever gutter might please her?

The Workers Alliance is functioning as the buzzard that picks the bones of the unfortunates on relief everywhere. But in the Federal theater project this communistic-controlled organization is even more active, because through the stage the propaganda of Stalin may be widely spread, and the American taxpayer pays the bill.

A few moments ago I mentioned the fact that the majority of the "actors" employed by the W. P. A. in its theater project were not really actors, but were amateurs trying to acquire some sort of status, or they were misfits and failures who had been unable to meet the rigid requirements of the profession for survival.

An investigation conducted by the gentleman from Virginia, Hon. CLIFTON A. WOODRUM, and set forth in some detail on page 2682 of the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, shows that of some 12,000 theater workers some 50 percent, or 6,000, were qualified as actors by W. P. A. That is what our distinguished colleague the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] stated a moment ago. I desire to state again that I was delighted to have his contribution in reference to the amendment of the Senator from Florida. I believe the report shows that the proportion was about 50 percent, and that 50 percent I want to take care of. I know that the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] wants to take care of them, and so does the junior Senator from the State of California [Mr. DOWNEY]. I know that these Senators want to take care of those who are deserving of help, but I know that they do not want to take care of anybody who is preaching the overthrow of our Government, or who is not in sympathy with the form of government that we have.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. WAGNER. I expect later to say a little more about this matter; but I desire again to call the attention of the Senator to a provision of the pending title which says that—

No portion of the appropriation made under this joint resolution shall be used to pay any compensation to any person who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States through force or violence.

That is an absolute prohibition against the payment of any compensation by W. P. A. to any person of the type to which the Senator refers. So absolute protection is provided against the employment by the United States on W. P. A. of any of these persons who preach communism, or who are believers in communism. What else can we do?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I am very much obliged to the Senator from New York for calling that provision to my attention.

Mr. WAGNER. I am wondering whether we are to leave hungry and without employment the 7,000 men and women who are workers, who are stage hands in the theaters. I am going to say something about the plays a little later. One or two or three persons may have been guilty of subversive activities, but they have been cleaned out.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I desire to repeat, I do not want any real actor or artist or writer to go hungry, and I want to see that they are cared for, just like the bricklayer, or the mason, or the plumber, or the carpenter, or anyone else. But I am bringing these things to the attention of the Senate because I want the American people to know what has been going on in the Federal theater project.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DANAHY in the chair). The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. REYNOLDS. O Mr. President, it was my understanding with the majority leader that the agreement would apply only after I had finished speaking. The majority leader came over and spoke to me and wanted to know if I would object to the agreement after I had finished.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will accept the statement of the Senator.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Chair.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to ask the Senator from New York, for my information, whether the language which he just read describes a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. WAGNER. I do not know; but we were talking about those engaged in subversive activities in this country, and I assume that this is a definition which applies to the type of person who advocates the overthrow of the United States by force or violence. If there is any language which may improve or perhaps make more comprehensive this prohibition, I am quite willing to accept it. I am not the author of this language, but it was undoubtedly inserted to protect us against employing anyone who advocates any of these subversive doctrines.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have great respect for the Senator's opinion, and I am asking solely whether he would consider that membership in the Communist Party falls within the inhibition.

Mr. WAGNER. I am not thoroughly enough acquainted with the doctrines of the Communist Party in this country, but when we have been talking about Communists I think as a rule we are referring to those individuals who are advocating the overthrow of our Government by force or violence.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In the course of his observations the Senator said that this applied to Communists, and I am trying to determine whether he would consider membership in the Communist Party as being within the inhibition.

Mr. WAGNER. I am not an authority upon the subject of Communists at all.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Very well.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, in answer to what the Senator from New York has stated in regard to the oath, I desire again to bring to the attention of the Senate a communistic publication, one article entitled "Politics in W. P. A." This is from the pen of Mr. George Morris. Mr. Morris says:

The much-referred-to oath that workers on W. P. A. would be required to take, a section in the bill apparently intended for face saving to WOODRUM and his friends, makes the whole affair still more ridiculous. Communists will surely take that oath and take it with genuine sincerity. In the oath the worker will swear to defend the Constitution "against all enemies, foreign and domestic"; and state that this obligation is taken "freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion," and that the duties on W. P. A. will be "faithfully discharged."

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. This was brought to my attention by the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLZ]. It appears in the magazine called "National Issues," for July 1939, and this is the first time I have ever seen a copy of it. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. I wish to correct the Senator to this extent. At the time I read from the bill I was not referring particularly to the oath that was required to be taken, although that is also a protection, but I was referring to an absolute prohibition in the joint resolution against paying anyone any compensation out of the funds here provided who advocates, or is a member of an organization which advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States through force or violence. So, in addition to the taking of the oath, there is the absolute direction to those administering the fund that they cannot pay any of the money appropriated to anyone who entertains any such subversive doctrines. Therefore, there is a double-barreled protection. If the Senator can propose anything else to cover the matter, I should be glad to have him do so.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the junior Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. WILEY. Irrespective of whether the plays about which the Senator has been reading teach communistic doctrines or not, I am wondering, if we are to spend our money to provide labor for unemployed artists—and I am in favor of the idea of taking care of the unemployed actors and actresses in this way—whether we are not overlooking one thing which we really have an obligation to look after. We are spending the people's money, and apparently a good many of these plays, if they do not teach communism, teach anything but morality. It is the people's money we are spending. Whose business is it, if we spend the money in this way, to see that that money is spent so that the morale of this country shall not be shot to pieces?

Mr. REYNOLDS. It is the business of the Director of the W. P. A.

Mr. WILEY. Then why should we not put our finger there and say, "Hereafter when you spend that money you will spend it in such and such a way or you shall not get the money for that purpose?"

Mr. REYNOLDS. Why should we not designate someone to pass upon the plays?

Mr. WILEY. I have just seen a list of the plays, which was exhibited to me by the Senator from West Virginia, and they are supplemental to what the Senator has already read into the RECORD. An examination of them indicates that the plays are very malodorous. America's money should not be used to encourage such productions.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator very much for that contribution.

Mr. President, the Equity Association, the actors' union, has a total membership of only 4,500, and I dare say they are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. I stated a moment ago that the American Federation of Labor does not have any Communists in it. They will not stand for Communists in their organization. The American Legion was mentioned by the junior Senator from New York. We all know that the American Legion has been fighting communism, as we find the Veterans of Foreign Wars fighting it. The American Federation of Labor, the American Legion, and the Veterans of Foreign Wars are the three outstanding organizations, amongst others, which are fighting all the time the spread of communism.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator knows that the American Federation of Labor is strongly supporting the amendment.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Oh, yes; I understand that, and I say that there are no Communists belonging to the American Federation of Labor. I am with the American Federation of Labor in its effort to support actors who belong to their union, but I am not willing to support Communists and those affiliated with the Workers Alliance, who are in this.

By the way, I wonder whether the Senator would accept an amendment to the paragraph carrying the prohibition relative to those who should receive pay, that any one who has ever been affiliated with the Workers Alliance, or who is now affiliated with the Workers Alliance, will be barred from participation. I wonder if that would be accepted. I ask that it be accepted as a part of the amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. I suggest that the Senator offer it as a separate amendment.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I would have it apply to anyone who has belonged or belongs now.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will wait until the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] returns to the Chamber.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I hope the Senator from Colorado will accept the amendment. I am sure he will because everyone knows that the Workers Alliance is a part and portion of the Communist Party in this country.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. LEE. I wonder whether it would help any from the Senator's point of view with respect to the Communists to whom he refers, if we inserted in line 21, page 24, the phrase "or as a worker." At present the language reads:

No person shall be employed or retained in employment in any administrative position, or in any supervisory position—

And so forth. At that point I would add "or as a worker on any project." Would not that help?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Who advocates the overthrow of the Government?

Mr. LEE. No; make him take the oath the same as those who work in administrative or supervisory positions—make the provision as to taking the oath apply to the workers as well.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I think it should apply to them, and I shall be very glad if the Senator from Oklahoma will offer such an amendment.

Mr. President, I see in the Chamber now the able senior Senator from Colorado, and I will say for his information that we were discussing the matter of those affiliated with the Federal theater project. The able Senator from New York has brought to my attention again the matter of the oath which has to be taken by those securing employment with the W. P. A. I mentioned the fact that the Workers Alliance seems to be in control of this project, and everyone knows that the Workers Alliance is in alliance with the Communist Party, and I wondered whether the Senator from Colorado would be good enough, in the interest of the American people and the taxpayers, to accept an amendment providing that anyone who has ever been affiliated with the Workers Alliance or who is affiliated with the Workers Alliance be barred from participating in the W. P. A. theater project.

Mr. ADAMS. No, Mr. President, I would not, because, while there may be Communists in the Workers Alliance, I would not be willing to join in condemnation of everyone who belongs to that association, because there are many in it who do not come within that characterization.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I know hundreds of people in the State of Indiana who belong to the Workers Alliance who do not know that there is such a thing as the Communist Party.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I know a great many people who belong to the Workers Alliance, and I have never seen or heard of one who has not heard of the Communist Party. As a matter of fact, I do not know of anyone in the United States who has not heard of the Communist Party. I know there is no one in North Carolina who has not heard of the Communist Party, because the North Carolina people are well read and up and doing about everything. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, to repeat, the Equity Association, the actors union, has a total membership of only 4,500 and requires that to be a member the applicant must have had at least 2 years on the professional stage.

It would seem as though groups of young people who are eligible or partly eligible for relief were told to register as actors and were given salaries by the Federal theater. This amazing discrepancy between acting and actors probably is attributable to Mrs. Hallie Flanagan, director of the Federal theater project, and who formerly was connected with the drama department of Vassar College. I doubt that Mrs. Flanagan has ever had any real experience in the cold practicalities of presenting dramatic productions.

This would be indicated by the fact that the W. P. A. theater even hires understudies for actors who even have nothing to say in a play—the actors who make the noises off stage, and so on. Not satisfied with these extras, the W. P. A. theater project gives its actors vacations with pay at the rate of 2½ days' vacation for each month of work. That is more than the Federal Government gives its regular employees and considerably more than private industry can afford to give.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator was speaking about his amendment providing that anyone who belonged to the Workers Alliance should not be permitted to obtain relief. I have no doubt that there are some of the leaders of the Workers Alliance who belong to the Communist Party, but, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] has pointed out, there are thousands of people, there are thousands in my State, who belong to the Workers Alliance—

Mr. REYNOLDS. Who are not affiliated with the Communist Party?

Mr. WHEELER. Who are not Communists.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is no doubt true.

Mr. WHEELER. Who would not in any sense join the Communist Party. Frankly, I rather doubt the wisdom of inserting a provision in reference to taking the oath before a man can get relief. I do not like the idea of saying to a man, "You have to take an oath and swear allegiance to the United States before you can get a little pittance or get on relief."

I think the committee really went too far.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Of course, the Senator knows that some of the outstanding leaders in the Workers Alliance are Communists, and members of the Communist Party.

Mr. WHEELER. I have no doubt of that. I know that some of the leaders of the Workers Alliance in Montana belong to the Communist Party, and openly admit they do.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. WHEELER. Nevertheless, it seems to me a man ought not to be discriminated against simply because he belongs to the Workers Alliance. The Senator from North Carolina a moment ago said that no Communist belongs to the American Federation of Labor. Let me say that Communists will be found in the American Federation of Labor, to my certain knowledge. I have known of Communists belonging to the A. F. of L.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator does not mean to infer that the American Federation of Labor will knowingly admit Communists to its ranks,

Mr. WHEELER. No; but, as a matter of fact, Communists may be found in all sorts of organizations. The organizations cannot be condemned simply for that reason. Communists will be found among the Masons, among the Knights of Columbus, in patriotic organizations, and in churches; but we cannot condemn a church or any organization simply because there may be some bad people in them. We cannot condemn fraternal and patriotic organizations simply because some bad persons belong to them. Good people and bad people are found in every walk of life.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I wish to say in that connection that I condemn the Communist Party regardless of the fact that there are some good people in it.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; but when the Senator says that persons are all Communists simply because they belong to the Workers Alliance I think he is mistaken.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I will say that I know many persons who belong to the Workers Alliance who are not identified with the Communist Party.

Mr. WHEELER. I will say to the Senator that some of the things that the W. P. A. has permitted the theaters to produce are idiotic and have brought discredit upon the W. P. A. I say that when the W. P. A. permits persons to ridicule certain Senators, as they have done, so I have been told, and ridicule other public officials, that is a very silly and a very foolish thing for them to do. Notwithstanding the fact that they may have ridiculed some of our colleagues, or have ridiculed the courts, I must say that I believe that is no reason why we should deny relief to needy persons. What we ought to do is to hold responsible those who permit money to be spent for such purposes. I condemn the heads who are responsible for permitting such things to be done. I do not know who is responsible for it, whether it is the head of the W. P. A. in Washington, the head of the W. P. A. in New York, or the head of the W. P. A. somewhere else. Whoever permits such things to occur should be held strictly responsible. In the first place, it is not the right thing to do. In the second place, it is a very short-sighted policy. I do not wish to go so far as to keep persons from obtaining such work simply because there may be some fools belonging to the organization.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I may say to the Senator from Montana that I assume that he has read in virtually every magazine in the country and virtually every daily and weekly newspaper criticism of the W. P. A. theater project. And may I say to the Senator that I likewise will go further in assuming that these newspapers and magazines, many of them, have condemned the W. P. A. theater project because of the fact as they allege, that it was spreading communistic propaganda. What I am trying to do is to get those who are spreading communism in the theater project out of it. I say that those who are responsible for the spread of communism thus far through the instrumentality of the various avenues of the W. P. A. theater project should be discharged. They should not any longer be permitted to direct the activities of the W. P. A.

Mr. WHEELER. I am entirely in accord with the Senator in believing that those directing the W. P. A. theater project in whatever community, whether at the top here in Washington or in various cities, who permit such things to continue, should be held responsible. They may not necessarily encourage the spread of communism, but if they permit such things, and are spreading communism and using public funds to do so, then they ought to be discharged from the job.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes; I yield to the junior Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the Senator just a few moments ago read the name of a young woman. I have met that young lady but once. She is a graduate of Vassar. Her name is Mrs. Flanagan. The able Senator from North Carolina used her name in his manuscript. I wish to say that from my very brief visit in my office with this young woman I would testify, if I were required to under oath, that she is a loyal upstanding American citizen of the very highest type. I regret exceedingly that her name should have been brought into this discussion in such a way as to be at all denounced in connection with communism.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, evidently the junior Senator from Nevada was not in the Senate Chamber when I made mention of Mrs. Flanagan's name. I want to go back and read what I said to the Senator. There is no reflection made upon her whatever. I never even mentioned Mrs. Flanagan in connection with communism. I wish to repeat exactly what I stated:

Mrs. Hallie Flanagan, director of the Federal theater project, and who formerly was connected with the drama department of Vassar College. I doubt that Mrs. Flanagan has ever had any real experience in the cold practicalities of presenting dramatic productions.

I made that statement because the information I have is that Mrs. Flanagan was the head of the department of dramatics at Vassar College, but never was connected with the legitimate theater itself outside the college.

I would have the Senators know that I have not reflected upon Mrs. Flanagan, and I would not think of reflecting upon her. Mrs. Flanagan is well known. She is a lady of the very highest type. There is no finer woman in America than is Mrs. Flanagan. That is all I said. I did not mean to infer that she was a Communist. I said that the only experience she had, insofar as I could learn, was that she had been at the head of the department of dramatics at Vassar College.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. If Mrs. Flanagan is interested in those who are in this particular art, to which she has given all her life work, if she is interested to the extent that she wants them to have a living in their particular inclination, in their particular bent in life, then I say that the mere fact that she was never herself a star nor assumed to be a star, nor went on the professional stage, should not be a matter of criticism.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am going to take issue with the Senator right there, Mr. President. I think that those who are in charge of the theater project should be sufficiently experienced to handle the matter in the way it should be handled. Let us read the statistics in reference to the Federal theater project, and we find that it has not been at all successful.

So far as the business management of the W. P. A. theater project is concerned, no one will deny that it is terrible. I did not attend any of the meetings of the committee. I did not read all of the hearings, but I read a part of them last night. In the investigation by the Committee on Appropriations in the House of Representatives we find that W. P. A. projects were in rehearsal for from anywhere from 3 months to 2 years. Months and years in which terrific costs were being piled up, whereas the average theatrical production, according to qualified experts, is seldom in rehearsal more than 4 or 5 weeks, in which time the play is made ready for public appearance.

I say that there has been mismanagement. We ought to have had people at the head of the W. P. A. theater project who had had practical experience in the field. That is the trouble about many things that are going on today. We are getting many persons from colleges that have never had any practical experience. It would have been better had we taken some person with old-fashioned common horse sense.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, Representative DEMPSEY, in speaking of the director of the theater project, recently said:

In connection with the Federal theater project the Dies committee investigated that situation very thoroughly. So far as the director of that project is concerned, she came voluntarily to the committee and gave us free, clear testimony. She is not a Communist nor a "fellow traveler." She is a highly efficient, splendid American woman.

This testimony is amply borne out by the record of background and attainments of the national director, a director for 10 years of a theater which became famous here and abroad for its imaginative productions of both the classic and new plays; the winner of the first Guggenheim scholarship ever awarded to a woman; sent by this foundation to make a study of government in relation to theaters in 12 different European countries.

Mr. President, this distinguished woman is Mrs. Flanagan, who has undoubtedly had much valuable experience and apparently has all the qualifications necessary to enable her to perform her official duties in a most satisfactory manner.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, of whom is the Senator speaking?

Mr. NEELY. Mrs. Flanagan.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Please, I want the Senator to understand, and I am sure the Senator would not leave the wrong impression so far as my attitude is concerned. I have not reflected upon the character of Mrs. Flanagan. She is a lady of the finest character. I am only making mention of the fact that she never had any practical experience, judging from the report of the committee who made the examination.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, what I have said was submitted for the purpose of refuting the insinuation that the management of the theater project is tainted with communism—

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I have not even suggested to the slightest degree that Mrs. Flanagan is in sympathy with communism. I do not want to leave a false impression.

Mr. NEELY. I did not mean to charge the eloquent Senator with having accused Miss Flanagan of being a Communist.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I have the highest respect for Mrs. Flanagan, and there is no lady in all America of higher character than Mrs. Flanagan. I say only that from the investigation made it was found that there has been mismanagement in the W. P. A.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, what I read tends to prove that Mrs. Flanagan is entitled to all the compliments that have been paid her both by the Senator from North Carolina and by the able Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], in all of which I enthusiastically concur. It also demonstrates the fact that she is eminently qualified to perform the important duties of the office which she now holds. The efficient Mrs. Flanagan constitutes one of the many unanswerable arguments in favor of the adoption of the pending amendment, proposed by Senators WAGNER, DOWNEY, and PEPPER, for which my vote will be cast.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. I was present in the committee room when Mrs. Flanagan appeared and gave testimony in support of the theater project. I have also talked to many of the theatrical people who are interested in the maintenance of this project. My understanding is that Mrs. Flanagan is regarded by all of them as a lady of outstanding ability in the theatrical profession. That she has been trained and has a knowledge of the theatrical work these people are doing beyond anyone else who could possibly have been obtained for that position.

There is much misrepresentation with reference to the program they have been carrying out. Tonight on the floor of the Senate a paragraph was read from a play which purported to have been given by the theater project in which the spokesman was supposed to be advocating communism. As a matter of fact, that was a play that was produced at Vassar College. I have before me a statement with reference to it. A single sentence was picked out which created the impression that the whole purport of the play was to advocate communism, whereas if the play had been read further it would have appeared that the purpose of the play was to bring out the subject and to prove that communism was a bad thing for the country, and that the proper course for Americans to follow was good, patriotic, democratic principles.

Here are other sentences from the same play, which I should like to read into the Record, in reply to what was read from the floor of the Senate a short time ago.

FRANK. What do you want us to do? Have a revolution, like in Russia?

WARDELL. No, Frank; that's just what Davis and I want to prevent.

DRDLA. What did the revolution do for Russia? Once people laughed in the fields. Everyone was gay. Now, people are hungry there. No one laughs any more.

ANNE. This is the United States of America we live in, and we got a President and a Congress and a Government to look after our interests, and I want my boys should respect that Government and know that that Government ain't goin' to let us down.

So, if one reads the play in its entirety, it is obvious that the whole purport of the play was to denounce communism rather than to support it.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? What I have to say deals with what the Senator from Montana has said.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. The Senator from Montana says that I was the one who put the material into the Record. He said that I said it was a W. P. A. project. I said no such thing. I said it was a play by Mrs. Flanagan which was read by the Senator from Pennsylvania. I wish to say to the Senator from Montana that he also has not read the play, but it was sent in to him in order that he might try to correct it.

Mr. MURRAY. Yes.

Mr. HOLT. The Senator from Pennsylvania says that the hero of the play was a Communist. I have not read the play. All I said was what the Senator from Pennsylvania has said about it, that it was a W. P. A. project.

Mr. MURRAY. Will the Senator from North Carolina yield in order that I may answer the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. REYNOLDS. My time is rather limited.

Mr. MURRAY. As a matter of fact, all the theatrical newspapers of the country which commented on the play have supported it as a good play, and have said that it was not a play advocating communism. The book which I have here quotes from the New York World Telegram, from the Theater Guild magazine, the Austin Post, and the Theater Arts, showing that the play is not at all a play advocating communism, and that even though it was written by Mrs. Flanagan, it was a good sound American play.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the junior Senator from New York.

Mr. MEAD. A few moments ago the inference was made that this group had not made a very substantial return; that is, the contribution which this group has made was referred to as being very meager. I happened to come into the Chamber at that time. I have before me a copy of the New York Times for Sunday, May 28, 1939, containing an article by Brooks Atkinson, probably the leading theatrical critic of the country, and certainly reporting in one of the most outstanding newspapers of the country. He says:

Two million six hundred thousand people are employed on W. P. A. projects throughout the country. Only 8,040 of them are employed in the Federal theater, between one-third and one-quarter of 1 percent. Among the 2,600,000 it would be hard to find another group of 8,040 that has accomplished so much and given so rich a social return on the money.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I shall not at this hour attempt to give my colleagues all the statistics which are available in the document I have before me, the record of hearings before the House Committee on Appropriations under House Resolution 130, part 1, pages 179, 276, 997, 1013, 1067, and 1115. These statistics show the tremendous wastes and extravagances of the theater project, which aggregated a cost of $5,000,000 from July 1938 to May 1939.

The Senator from New York has just brought to the attention of the Senate and of all those on the W. P. A. throughout the length and breadth of the land that, according to the records, between July of 1938 and May 1939 only 8,040 persons were employed in the Federal theater. They cost the taxpayers of the country more than $5,000,000. That being the case, they cost about 100 times more than the cost of maintaining the same number of men on any other W. P. A. project in this country. We can truly say, in the language of the theater, that Uncle Sam has been an "angel." When it is not known whether or not a show is going to be a success, the financial backer is called an "angel."

Approximately 99.99 percent of this expenditure was a dead loss, as the box-office receipts were virtually nothing.

Incidentally, a tremendous portion of the expenditure went for rental of theaters in which to present these so-called dramatic productions. For example, as indicative of the percentages found throughout all the individual presentations, one example shows rent of $8,156, telephone $2,866, miscellaneous $2,715, travel $589.

The record of the House committee hearing was filled with evidence of waste, such as purchasing 9,000 feet of a very expensive lighting cable for one play and leaving idle in another theater 7,000 feet of the same kind of cable.

I have my doubt as to the necessity of some of these people working on a W. P. A. project of any kind, such as Mrs. Audrey McMahon, who was the head of the art project in New York City. Mrs. Audrey McMahon was paid $300 a month. In addition, her husband was a professor at New York University. She is also the editor of a magazine. That good lady, a lady of excellent character and fine attainments and social standing, whose husband was a professor at the University of New York, and who was the editor of a magazine, was receiving $300 a month. I thought W. P. A. projects were for the purpose of helping people who did not have any money and could not get a job. At one time Mrs. McMahon made a trip from New York to a number of cities in the North and Middle West, costing $203 in mileage alone, paid by W. P. A. travel voucher; and the sole purpose of the trip was to stir up protests against reducing appropriations for the W. P. A.

Mr. President, I have previously referred to the fact that one actress was informed she should have gone out to supper to encourage the pursuit of happiness by a Negro, as indicative of some of the things that go on in the W. P. A. theater project. The investigation to which I have referred gives the record of play after play in which the theater project used a mixed cast of whites and Negroes, a practice never followed in the legitimate theater for reasons we can all understand.

I now again refer to the Workers Alliance, a witness of which, Mr. Charles B. Walton, in the theatrical business since 1907, stated before the House committee that—

The Workers Alliance have absolutely dominated the Federal theater, and the present set-up, in my estimation, is nothing more or less than a very clever fence to sow the seeds of communism.

That is what Mr. Charles Walton said in giving testimony before the House committee. That statement is not mine, Mr. President.

Remember that a play by Voltaire caused the French Revolution. That is why the Communists have "muscle" into the theater project until they now control it, from all I can understand. From statements I have heard this afternoon there is no such thing as communism in the Federal theater project. I hope there is not.

Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of my colleagues to another thing of interest concerning the Federal theater project, and that is that the W. P. A. theater project and the Communist headquarters are in the same building. The Workers Alliance functions from the same building. There can be no doubt about the communistic control of the Workers Alliance, as the records of the Department of Justice show members of the executive board to be members of the Communist Party of America, as I stated a moment ago in reply to the statement of the senior Senator from Montana.

There is no doubt furthermore of the far-reaching campaign of the Communists through the Workers Alliance to spread their alien doctrines of ruin and destruction, their antichrist ideology by means of the theater project of the United States Government's Works Progress Administration.

Courses in Russian language were given in quarters donated by the Workers Alliance. Why should anybody be willing to spend money to spread knowledge of the Russian language in a country that has spoken English since its foundation? Why should the W. P. A. permit this to be done and why should the W. P. A. accept such services and facilities when offered by the Workers Alliance and anybody else?

Why should the Workers Alliance and other organizations of similar nature buy huge blocks of tickets to W. P. A. theater plays—and buy them at a discount of from 30 to 40 percent less than the regular box-office price? The tickets were then sold by these organizations at a profit—so we find the W. P. A. theater project financing organizations dedicated to tearing down the American Government.

Mr. President, in the theater business the glass roof over the entrance to a theater and which contains the names of the play and the stars is called the marquee. On the strength of the record established by the theater projects of the W. P. A. the only lights for which there has been any demand in the past for use on W. P. A. theater marquees are red. Rather than try to make them white, Mr. President, we should eliminate the lights entirely, the marquee entirely, and the Federal theater project entirely.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in connection with my remarks an extract from remarks delivered in the House of Representatives on June 15, 1939, by the gentleman from Michigan, Representative HOFFMAN, and found on pages 7234 and 7235 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MR. HOFFMAN. * * * Let me quote for the benefit of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] and for the benefit of the House the sworn testimony given on the 20th day of August 1938 before the Dies committee, under oath.

Miss Sallie Saunders, born in Vienna, Austria, a citizen of the United States since 1920, a resident of New York City since 1930, and an employee since March 3, 1936, with the exception of 90 days when she was on leave of absence, of the Federal theater project as an actress, testified, among other things, to the following, and I quote from her testimony, beginning on page 858, volume I, of the hearings:

"The CHAIRMAN. You are on the project now?

"Miss SAUNDERS. Yes, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. What is the work that you are doing now?

"Miss SAUNDERS. As an actress.

"The CHAIRMAN. Have you seen with your eyes evidence of communistic or subversive activities on this particular project?

"Miss SAUNDERS. I can only say that literature has been sent around to me personally.

"The CHAIRMAN. Do you know that Communist literature has been distributed on the premises?

"Miss SAUNDERS. Surely.

"The CHAIRMAN. On one occasion you were called on the telephone. Will you go into the details of that without going too much into it?

"Miss SAUNDERS. Yes, sir. On Decoration Day I received a phone call from Mr. Van Cleave.

"The CHAIRMAN. This year?

"Miss SAUNDERS. Yes, sir; and he asked me for a date. I lived at the Fraternity Club, and there are a great many men there. I thought it was someone I met at the Fraternity Club. I said, 'Mr. Van Cleave, I do not remember you; when did I meet you?' He said, 'I was the gentleman who sketched you in Sing for Your Supper.' I said, 'There were 289 people down there, and I do not know more than 25 of them.' He said, 'I am the fellow who was sketching you.' The day before I had noticed a Negro making a sketch of me as I was dancing. He shoved the sketch in my face. I did not know his name and did not know anything about him. All I knew was that a Negro had sketched me. I signed out and left the building. At first I thought it was someone trying to play a joke on me, and I became very angry about it and asked how he got my telephone number. He said that he took it from a petition blank, or a petition to President Roosevelt which we all signed regarding the $1,000 pay cut. He took my name and address from that petition.

"Mr. MOSIER. How did he know that was your address?

"Miss SAUNDERS. He was one of the committee passing it around.

"The CHAIRMAN. After that time, when he asked permission to make a date with you, did you report it to the supervisor?

"Miss SAUNDERS. I reported it to Mr. Hecht.

"The CHAIRMAN. What did Mr. Hecht say to you?

"Miss SAUNDERS. He said, 'Sallie, I am surprised at you. He has just as much right to life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness as you have.' He said, 'It is in the Constitution.' I said, 'Mr. Hecht, that happens to be in the preamble to the Constitution.'

"The CHAIRMAN. Let us not go into that. We know there is feeling in the matter, and we have to be very cautious about race feelings. You reported it to him, and he advised you, in effect, that he was in favor of social equality?

"Miss SAUNDERS. According to the Constitution, and there was some press clipping about equal social rights.

"The CHAIRMAN. Did you report it to anyone else?

"Miss SAUNDERS. I talked it over with Miss Coonan, and she was appalled. I requested for an immediate transfer, which was granted. I then reported the matter through a personal friend to Senator PAT HARRISON.

"The CHAIRMAN. Who was Mr. Hecht?

"Miss SAUNDERS. Mr. Hecht is in Sing for Your Supper.

"The CHAIRMAN. An employee of the Federal project?

"Miss SAUNDERS. Yes, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. I think that is far enough. Is he connected with the Workers Alliance?"

"Miss SAUNDERS. Mr. Hecht is of split nationality. He has a card in every organization which has the most power at the moment."

"Mr. MOSIER. What is his full name?"

"Miss SAUNDERS. Harold Hecht."

"The CHAIRMAN. Did you report it to Trudy Goodrich?"

"Miss SAUNDERS. She is a secretary of a Workers Alliance division, and she came to me of her own accord. She said she felt very sorry that I felt that way about it, because she personally encouraged Negro attention on all occasions and went out with them or with any Negro who asked her to."

"Mr. STARNES. Did she say that it was the policy of the Workers Alliance to do that?"

"Miss SAUNDERS. She did not say that; but she is a representative of that party, and they hobnob indiscriminately with them, throwing parties with them right and left."

"Mr. STARNES. Is that a part of the Communist program?"

"Miss SAUNDERS. Yes, sir; social equality and race merging."

"The CHAIRMAN. I think that is all. I thank you for your testimony."

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I wish to occupy about 10 minutes, but do not wish to take the Senator off the floor.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator, with the understanding we have made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not know what understandings may have been entered into.

Mr. ASHURST. I have no understanding, Mr. President. I am asking the Senator to yield to me.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield the floor to the Senator from Arizona.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona is recognized in his own right. Does the Senator from Arizona wish to speak on the bill or the amendment?

Mr. ASHURST. On the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 20 minutes on the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. I shall not require half that time.

Mr. President, much has been said here today about communism; and all Senators will appreciate the earnestness with which learned Senators have addressed themselves to the subject of communism. If a bill using the word "Communist" or the word "communism" should be passed by the Congress and should be signed by the President, the courts, in construing it, would have recourse to the dictionary to see what Congress meant by "communism." I now quote from Webster's New International Dictionary, published in 1927, the definition of communism.

Communism: A system of social organizations in which goods are held in common, the opposite of a system of private property.

That is one definition.

2. A system of social organization where large powers are given to small political units or to communes; communalism.

3. Any theory or system of social organization involving common ownership of the agents of production and some approach to equality in the distribution of the products of industry. Informally, socialism.

Next, the definition of "Communist."

One who believes in communism in any of the first three senses named, or attempts to put its principles into practice.

Therefore, we may fairly say a Communist is a person who is devoted to, or is propagating, the theory of extirpating and doing away with the right of men to hold property, and is maintaining the principle that all property shall be held in common. I see before me the learned Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], who would adorn the Supreme Bench of the United States. I am quite sure if he were handing down an opinion he would say that what I have suggested is a fair definition of "Communist" and "communism."

Why, indeed, are the people of the United States so much opposed to communism? There is in an American an inborn, ineradicable, and sometimes inexplicable fear and dread of communism. No man in America is more opposed to communism, as I understand it, than am I, for the reason that communism would deprive an American citizen of what I believe to be one of his most precious rights, to wit, the right to hold property.

When the 10 amendments to the Constitution, called the Bill of Rights, were adopted, they set up, mark you, certain rights which inhere in all men, which belong to freemen. Even if they were not enumerated in any Bill of Rights, these rights and immunities would be a part of the liberty of a free person. The fifth amendment provides:

No person shall be * * * deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.

Further, in order to protect what I call a great human right, the right to hold property, the seventh amendment provides:

In suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars the right of trial by jury shall be preserved.

It is provided in the fourteenth amendment:

Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

These provisions indicate that those who laid the foundations of American liberty realized that the right to acquire and hold property, large and small, the right to own a home, a farm, and to earn wages, was as dear as the right to jury trial, free speech, and the right to freedom of religion.

Indeed, of what avail would be jury trial, freedom of speech, and freedom of religion if this other great immunity, to wit, the right to earn wages and acquire property, which adds to the dignity of a human being, did not inhere in the free citizen?

I should not care a fig for a government which, forsooth, granted freedom of speech, and yet ironically deprived men and women of that other great human right, the right to earn wages and to own property. That is the reason why so many earnest, upstanding, sincere American citizens are opposed to communism. They know that communism strikes at one of their vital rights. They know that communism strikes at what I believe to be an—

Mr. WALSH. Inalienable.

Mr. ASHURST. Inalienable—I thank the Senator from Massachusetts—an inalienable right.

A President of the United States more than 34 years ago, in a speech, said he "always put human rights above property rights." Property has no rights. Think of a President using language such as that, putting human rights above property rights. A human right is the right to acquire property. A slab of paving stone is an insensate piece of rock. It has no rights. The right of men to acquire and hold property, large and small, and the right of men to earn wages, is not a property right—it is a human right.

Having said this much with respect to my view of communism, I agree that no person should be employed by or subsisted by the United States, or paid from its Treasury, who would strike a blow at those great rights of citizens, to wit, the right of free speech, freedom of religion, trial by jury, to be confronted with the witnesses against him, and to dignify himself by earning wages and owning property. I am against the Communists because they seek to deprive American citizens of a right that is as important as any other human right—the right to hold property.

We should preclude from being employed at the public expense any person who seeks to deprive human beings of this great right, the right to earn wages and hold property. Therefore I shall support any motion which will prevent the payment of Federal money to any person who says he is opposed to this American, this human, right.

Now, as to the stage and the employment of certain artists, I shall support any reasonable sum which has for its purpose the employment of actors and artists. Some Senators fear or believe some actors or artists may have taught communism.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], in appropriate phrase, said that the way to destroy communism is to draw it out into the public light and expose it to the public view; for when people learn by the exposure of this un-American thing, communism, what it really means and what it proposes to do, the American people will be against communism.

Citizens have a right under our form of government peaceably to advocate a system depriving you, sir, of the right of free speech. They have a right to advocate a law depriving you, sir, of your immunities as a free man. Citizens have a right to advocate a system under which no man shall earn wages, and I oppose such a doctrine. Known to zoology are communal birds, birds that all occupy the same nest. In zoology there are communal or communistic birds. We have in America too many communistic birds. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED. As I gather, the Senator is against communism. He is not in favor of paying any Communists from the Public Treasury.

Mr. ASHURST. Not from the Public Treasury.

Mr. REED. Unless they are artists?

Mr. ASHURST. No, sir; not at all. I would not employ at the public expense an artist who is a Communist.

Mr. REED. Perhaps I misunderstood the distinguished Senator from Arizona, whose attention was called to the fact that Communists had been employed and communism taught and communism spread, to which the Senator from Arizona is opposed, unless it is done by artists?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I would not employ at the public expense a Communist, but I would not be afraid to go and see an artist who was a Communist produce or act in a play. I am not afraid of any contingency of that kind, because I agree with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] that only by exposing the folly of communism can we cope with it.

Mr. REED. May I impose on the Senator again?

Mr. ASHURST. I am glad to have the Senator interrupt me.

Mr. REED. That is to say, communism shall not be taught unless it is through the theater projects?

Mr. ASHURST. I do not say that.

Mr. REED. But, if communism is taught and the doctrine of communism is spread through these W. P. A. theater projects, the Senator is in favor of continuing them?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I say now for the third time—and the Senator is too keen in intellect to fail to grasp what I say—that I do not want anyone paid from the Public Treasury, whether he be artist, mechanic, or what not, who teaches communism. If one wishes to employ a Communist privately, I have no objection. That is his right and his business. If a Communist, at his own expense, desires to write a play and produce it, he has that right. If a man wants to urge that we should no longer have free speech, that is his right; but I do not want him employed at the public expense.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I propose to limit myself to 10 minutes, but I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Merely for a question. I take it that if some one advocated a deprivation of the right of free speech, the Senator from Arizona would not be afraid to listen to him.

Mr. ASHURST. I would not be afraid to listen to him, because I believe I could answer him.

I now want to say a word about the stage. I am probably not competent fairly to discuss the stage because of my tremendous bias in its favor. My body and my brain, if any, are in the Senate, but my heart has from boyhood been in the keeping of those princes and princesses of the House of Thespia.

The stage artists, the screen artists, and the vaudeville artists hold the mirror up to nature, and only through them do we ever see ourselves as others see us.

On the stage and on the screen we see our weaknesses, foibles, and pretensions made plain and then corrected. On the stage and on the screen the richness of human experience is laid before us, and all that is beautiful, all that is tragic, and all that is mournful in man's destiny is clearly shown.

The penetrating skill, the Attic salt, and the humor of the screen artist and the stage artist expose the shams and frivolities of a particular epoch, and not infrequently teach a nation the way of truth.

The comedies of Shakespeare enriched England, softened the cruelties of his time, and gave seasonable advice and admonition to monarch, to lords, and commons. There would have been no polished Elizabethan England except for Shakespeare.

Unnumbered thousands of our own generation have been charmed by the melodious airs and clever rhymes of the Gilbert and Sullivan light operas and the talent of those two gentlemen was so exceptional and their criticisms of official smugness and complacency were so deft and subtle that their productions were given audition and applause by the most prim and rigid of the mid-Victorians.

The drama is coextensive with the people and of all the arts, save music, it is probably the dearest to the human race. The stage is akin to poetry in that it is a great expression of human emotion. The stage is a vision of the romance inseparable from every human life; it is a magical place, breathing the inspiration of color and sound; a place for high thoughts, splendid truths, and beautiful words, for objects vividly observed and gorgeously imagined.

I hope the Senate will not go on record as censoring art. The stage is art. Art is truth, and in the final sum of worldly things, only art endures; the sculptures outlast the dynasty, the colors outlive Da Vinci, "the coin outlasts Tiberius."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] a while ago, I think in response to a question, stated that the 1 percent provided for in his amendment would provide approximately $14,000,000 free from any local contribution. I find from an examination of his amendment that the 1 percent applies to the entire amount appropriated in the joint resolution, which is one billion seven hundred and some odd million dollars, which would mean that seventeen million and a fraction dollars would be exempted from any local contribution.

I appreciate fully, and I sympathize entirely with the position of the Senator from North Carolina, and I will say to him frankly that when we vote on the 1-percent provision, I shall support his amendment. But I am wondering whether the Senator would not agree to modify his amendment by making it one-half of 1 percent instead of 1 percent, which would provide about $9,000,000 out of this fund, which would not have to be matched by any local contribution whatever. I have talked with Senators about it, and I think if the Senator could consistently accept such an amendment, it would facilitate the adoption of his amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I should like to give the Senator from Kentucky some figures.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator asked me awhile ago if I had the figures regarding the total expenditures on these projects from July 1, 1938, to May 31, 1939, which is practically the past year, on the various art projects. The expenditures for the theater project amounted to $9,947,000. The aggregate art project expenditures amounted to $5,000,000, the expenditures on the writers project amounted to $4,000,000, and on the historical records project $5,668,000. So there was a total expenditure in these various art projects of $35,503,000.

I am merely giving the figures so that the Senator can see the extent to which the half of 1 percent would go.

Mr. BARKLEY. When I asked the Senator for the figures I asked him for the 5-year period, and I understood him to reply that the amount expended for the theater, art, and writers projects amounted to a little less than $40,000,000 for the 5-year period. Evidently that was a mistake.

Mr. ADAMS. I was in error, because the figures I have given are the exact tabulations.

Mr. BARKLEY. Based upon the total amount of the appropriation to which this amendment is applicable, it would provide approximately seventeen and one-half million dollars instead of the fourteen million the Senator from New York suggested awhile ago.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. Of course, I bow to the statement of the majority leader of the Senate; but when the proposal is made to reduce the amount to one-half of 1 percent,

I call attention to the fact that the expenditure was reduced last year for these different projects, not only for the theater project, as was pointed out by the Senator from Colorado, but also the art projects. So even 1 percent would be about half of what was expended last year upon these projects. If we further cut the amount, it will represent practically one-fourth of what was spent last year.

Mr. BARKLEY. It seems that the crux of this proposition revolves around the theater project. I am wondering whether it would not be possible to have local communities make a contribution, if necessary, in regard to musical and art projects. The suggestion I am making would permit the W. P. A. to go ahead with the theater projects. I realize that while the theater and the musical and similar projects are all grouped together, it seems to me there is a difference between the theater projects and others which are local and which are more or less stationary. They are rather fixed to the locality, more so than is the theater project. I wonder whether, if the Senator should accede to that suggestion—and I am not pressing it, but I am making it after some discussion here informally—it would not be possible for the W. P. A. to carry out the theater project without serious impairment and at the same time probably receive some local contribution for the musical and art projects, which are more stationary and more fixed to sites than are the theater projects.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Let me suggest, Mr. President, that there are a number of groups—I understand from the Senator from Florida about five—and I suggest that we eliminate from the groups the musicians. I do not think the local communities ought to be called upon to provide any percentage of expenditure for the musicians. The musicians have been harder hit in this country than have any of the other groups. I am perfectly willing, insofar as I am individually concerned, to eliminate the musicians, because we all know that the musicians, as a matter of fact, have been hit harder than any other group. I think the musicians ought to be eliminated.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator does not mean "eliminated."

Mr. REYNOLDS. I mean they ought to be eliminated from this phase of the legislation.

Mr. BARKLEY. I doubt the wisdom of undertaking to mention in the amendment any particular class. It will be largely in the discretion of the authorities who administer the provision whether nine million or seventeen and one-half million or eighteen million dollars will be exempt from the requirements of local contribution.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In respect to that, I am suggesting that we exempt the musicians from the making of any local contribution.

Mr. BARKLEY. I doubt very much whether it would be wise to exempt anyone in the law itself.

Mr. WAGNER. Let me suggest to the Senator from Kentucky, who has been in such a kind way attempting to assist in this matter, that if the thought of the Senator from North Carolina should be carried out, and the musicians should be cared for as they have been in the past, that alone would require the expenditure of $10,000,000. That was the expenditure last year for the musicians on W. P. A. So, if we will leave the 1 percent in the bill, as the amendment provides, and assume that reasonable care will be taken of the musicians, say by $7,000,000, instead of $10,000,000, we will be able to take care of the musicians as the Senator from North Carolina wishes to do, and have some money left—not so much as heretofore, but I am quite satisfied with that—and also take care of both the theater and the art projects.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is difficult to draw a distinction between actors and musicians and artists and sculptors. They all come in the same category. It is difficult to draw a line of distinction and say one shall be excluded and another included.

Mr. WAGNER. I was thinking of the total sum we would allow to be used for purely Federal projects. If we allow $17,000,000, that will take care of the musicians and will take care of the theater and art projects, though not to the same extent, of course.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I think there is, perhaps, some confusion in this situation. What we are dealing with is a provision in the joint resolution which prohibits the use of any of these funds for the operation of projects sponsored solely by the Works Progress Administration. If we did not have another provision, any form of sponsorship relatively small would meet the requirements. The problem is that we now have a 25-percent provision in the joint resolution, so that sponsorship is only required to meet the 25 percent. The W. P. A. takes care of the 75 percent, in any event; that is, there is no occasion to talk about sponsoring to the extent of 50 percent, because it comes out of the same pocket. It is merely a matter of making a provision which will meet the limitation that there may be no projects which are solely sponsored by the W. P. A.

Mr. WAGNER. Except those—

Mr. ADAMS. There is no exception. This provision does not refer only to the art projects. Here is a flat provision that no projects may be constructed which are solely sponsored by the W. P. A., so that if we are thinking only in terms of these projects, we need only 25 percent of the projects which the Senator thinks should have Government help in sponsorship.

There may be other projects which might require sponsorship. The percentage provided is not tied down by the amendment, as I have read it, to the art projects.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let me say to the Senator from New York and to the Senator from Colorado that under the provisions of the joint resolution requiring an average contribution of 25 percent in each State it will be possible for the W. P. A. Administrator to approve a project which requires only 1 percent of local contribution. Of course that would mean that some other project, probably a much larger one, would have to pay more than 25 percent, perhaps 30 or 35 percent. So that some of the artistic projects could still get by on a very nominal contribution.

It occurred to me, in view of the feeling I have been encountering, that if the Senator will make practically $9,000,000 exempt from any local contribution at all, with the possibility of making only 1 percent contribution, or 2 percent, or 3 percent, for these similar projects, even under the 25-percent average, it probably would be possible to work out a much better situation than is possible under the joint resolution as it passed the House, which bars all of them from any consideration unless there is local contribution.

I make that suggestion to the Senator from New York. Of course, it is entirely in his discretion whether or not he will accept it.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit a word of comment, the mechanics of the matter are somewhat difficult, it seems, but the Senator would not think it fair if we reduced by 50 percent the appropriation which was made last year for the whole arts program?

Mr. BARKLEY. If we were considering that all by itself, that would be one thing, but here we have a joint resolution which eliminates altogether, according to the House text, any project altogether sponsored by the Federal Government. So that all theater, art, musical, and other projects of that character are out unless there is a local contribution.

In view of that situation, it occurred to me that it might be well to try to work out a fair average which might make it possible for some of the more important and more emergent categories to be considered without regard to a local contribution, having in mind the possibility that, even under the 25-percent average, it still would be possible to provide some of these projects with a very nominal contribution.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I should like to say in reference to what our leader has just stated that I am exceedingly anxious to have the musicians taken care of as they were cared for last year. I suggest that it might be agreeable to this body to provide for the musicians of America as we did last year without any reduced appropriation insofar as their benefits would be concerned, and that we reduce the appropriation for the Federal theater project by 50 percent. I think that would be agreeable.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the amendment applies not only to theater projects, but to all sorts of artists and musical projects. The 1 percent applies to all of them. I doubt the wisdom from a legislative standpoint of mentioning any particular one of these as being exempt or included. I think we have to leave that for the Administrator to work out. I sympathize with the Senator from North Carolina in this matter, because, as the Senator from Arizona has suggested, I would not like to see Congress or this Government say to men or women engaged in music as a career, to men and women engaged in acting as a career, which have been recognized professions from time immemorial, that they shall be barred from consideration. I realize that because of the nature of their employment it is frequently impossible to work up any local contribution for them. I appreciate all that.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, let me interrupt the Senator. There is another reason. Many of the theater projects have produced plays in more than one State, and the question might arise as to what State ought to sponsor a particular project. That is the reason why it seems to me to be unfair to put them in a class where they will have to have a contribution of 25 percent.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree, because the cost of production may have occurred in one State altogether, and if they go around to various States that might require that each State make a contribution of its proportional share of the original cost of production, which would be impracticable.

Mr. WAGNER. That is so with the musicians. I am sure that those who are lovers of music have heard the symphony concerts of the Federal projects orchestras. These musicians have been going around to different sections of the country where it was impossible to organize a local orchestra, and the country has received the benefit of great cultural advantages. I say it would also be difficult to call that a local project, because a number of States receive the benefit of the music. That is the reason I think they ought to be treated somewhat differently than the projects we were discussing under the 25-percent contribution.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree to that. Can we make it three-quarters of 1 percent? I am not offering it as an amendment to the Senator's amendment, but I think three-quarters percent would probably be a fair compromise. That would amount to about twelve million or fourteen million dollars, which would be earmarked as not requiring any local contribution.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, may we have the amendment as modified stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as modified will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 29, it is proposed to strike out lines 12 to 23, inclusive, and to insert the following:

SEC. 25. After October 31, 1939, not more than three-fourths of 1 percent of the funds appropriated under this joint resolution shall be available for projects sponsored solely by the Work Projects Administration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it. The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request of the Senator from Kansas comes too late. The decision of the Chair was announced after a long pause.

Mr. REED. I beg the pardon of the Chair, but there were several requests for a division which the Chair perhaps did not hear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there were any suggestions made, they were not sufficiently audible to be heard here in the chair.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 19, line 11, it is proposed to strike out all of section 15 and to insert in lieu thereof the following—

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say that the amendment of the Senator from Nevada is not yet in order. It is an amendment to the House text.

Mr. McCARRAN. I understood that the committee amendments had been completed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have not as yet been completed.

The clerk will state the next committee amendment, on page 38, line 24, which was passed over.

The amendment passed over was, on page 38, in line 24, after the word "establish", to insert "relocate", and on page 39, line 1, after the word "products", to insert "(other than those derived from the first processing of agricultural products)", so as to read:

SEC. 34. No funds appropriated in this joint resolution, whether administered by the Federal Government or by the States or local governmental agencies from funds contributed in whole or in part by the Federal Government, shall be used by any Federal, State, or other agency to purchase, establish, relocate, or expand mills, factories, or plants which would manufacture or produce for sale articles, commodities, or products (other than those derived from the first processing of agricultural products) in competition with existing industries.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I dislike very much to interrupt at this point, but I did intend to say something in answer to what the Senator from North Carolina said on the theater project, but I have had sufficient experience to know that there is a time when one should not speak.

I should like permission to insert in the RECORD the names of both individuals and organizations which have supported the amendment, and also a statement by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], who, by the way, landed today in England in the Yankee Clipper. The Senator requested that there be printed in the RECORD the statement which he had prepared in support of the amendment in reference to the theater project.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement by Senator CHAVEZ and the list presented by Senator WAGNER are as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR DENNIS CHAVEZ IN REFERENCE TO FEDERAL ARTS PROJECTS

Inasmuch as the House work-relief bill makes no provision for Federal-sponsored arts projects, I am leaving a live proxy with the Senate Appropriations Committee requesting that in the event that the subcommittee follows the House provisions in respect to this I have asked that my vote be recorded if an amendment is offered by the full committee in favor of Federal arts projects. I do this convinced that a careful and impartial study of what the Federal arts projects division of W. P. A. has done in the past will convince even the most biased of the tremendous cultural value of the accomplishment and further because of the need of the unfortunate persons who come under these types of projects which is equally as great as that of any other group in this Nation; and whose desire to live and work is quite as keen and should be just as respected as those of any other groups.

In New Mexico the work of the Federal arts projects has won the admiration and respect of all walks of life in every community. The artistic endeavors, I am told by authorities and persons competent to judge, rank with the very highest. Art which is termed "boondoggling" by prejudiced critics is welcomed and respected in New Mexico and I feel sure that the same condition exists all over this country. Theater projects in New Mexico have been enthusiastically supported by the communities. It is impossible to estimate the tremendous contribution which the writers project, for example, are making for the cultural advancement of the United States. I have in mind, for instance, a book which is now being prepared which has Nation-wide significance. The time when conflagration threatens in Europe and in the Orient and when the need of cementing closer relations with Latin America is so imperative anything which would benefit our relations with our neighbors to the south is not only helpful but an absolute necessity. The book which is being prepared by the Federal writers project is Study of Spanish Speaking People of the United States: 1540-1940. This book is the epic of the oldest white inhabitants of our country, starting with the early Spanish settlements of the sixteenth century, and carrying the story down to the present time. The Spanish-speaking people are associated in the public mind with the Southwest. What is not so generally realized, and what is brought out clearly in this book, is that some of them migrated from the Mexican to the Canadian border and that they spread not only to the Pacific coast but as far east as New England and Florida.

The music, art, and historical records projects are cooperating with the writers project in the preparation of this study. It includes a detailed account of the Spanish-speaking people, and full treatment of their folklore, folk music, and folk art. With the exception of the Indians, the folk music of the Spanish-Americans of the Southwest has a longer history than that of any other racial group on our continent. Folk ways, folk songs, and folk games were brought in by the first hardy adventurers, and were handed down from generation to generation with comparatively little change.

All this material is being gathered together in the various State offices with the help of volunteer consultants from Spanish-speaking societies and from universities and colleges, and is being welded into a unified whole by the editors of the Washington staffs.

To my mind the success of pan-Americanism and of closer relations with Latin America is absolutely dependent upon an understanding by the citizens of the United States of Latin American philosophy and culture. We can find no better place to study this than in our own American Southwest, "The place where the Americas meet," to borrow a phrase coined by a very close friend and sponsor of pan-Americanism, Dr. F. M. Kercheville, of the University of New Mexico. This study which the Federal art project is in the process of making will develop information and material which will be helpful in promoting this understanding.

How then, can anyone call a study which is so necessary and so badly needed, "boondoggling" and "a waste of taxpayers' money"? The persons employed on such projects are needy and Congress has an equal responsibility to assist them as it has to other needy persons in the United States. This is only one of the many studies which the Federal arts project has under way.

I am leaving instructions that if there is a Senate vote on this that I be paired in favor of the amendment covering this point and I am asking that this statement be inserted in the Record.

EFFECT OF THE AMENDMENT

Mr. WAGNER. The Federal art projects (Federal project No. 1) include the following five units: (1) the Federal music project, (2) the Federal writers project, (3) the Federal art project, (4) the Federal theater project, (5) the historical records survey.

Under the bill as now before the Senate, all of the music, theater, art, and writers projects, and the historical records survey, are required to obtain local sponsorship.

If the amendment is adopted, after October 31, 1939, not more than three-fourths of 1 percent of Federal relief funds appropriated in the bill will be available for projects sponsored solely by the W. P. A.

This means that over half of all these cultural projects will have to obtain local sponsorship by October 31. It also means that those phases of the music, theater, art, and writers projects which would be killed by the requirement of local sponsorship, can be continued under W. P. A. sponsorship. These include such important phases of the work as the music lessons for rural children, the traveling art shows, the traveling theater units, the books on regional subjects, such as the widely acclaimed Oregon Trail, Santa Fe Trail, guides to national parks, and many other regional projects.

Probably the most useful work done by the arts projects has been to bring music, painting, sculpture, drama, puppet shows, and literature to the remote rural areas of the country. People who would otherwise never see an oil painting or a wood cut, attend a musical concert or a legitimate-theater production have become acquainted with these arts for the first time through the W. P. A.

In short, the adoption of this amendment will enable those projects which obviously could not obtain local sponsorship to continue as W. P. A. Federal projects, while at the same time compelling all those which can operate under local sponsorship to be so transferred.

I want to emphasize that the attempt immediately to decentralize the arts projects cannot be justified on grounds of economy. The Federal Government contributes less in nonlabor costs to Federal project No. 1 than it does, for example, to the locally sponsored construction projects. The Federal contribution for nonlabor costs amounts to $4.85 a month per person for Federal project No. 1 as compared with $6 per person for all non-Federal projects.

It should also be noted that while the arts projects are now under technical Federal sponsorship, as a practical matter, through local participation in providing materials, space, services, admissions, and direct cash contributions, a high degree of local participation is obtained. Whereas local sponsors on all W. P. A. projects bear 53.8 percent of the non-labor costs, in many units under Federal project No. 1, all the non-labor costs are locally borne, and more than 50 percent of them are locally borne in a majority of the units.

For example, the publication costs of all but two of the 300 volumes published by the writers project have been borne locally. In some localities, the music project is and has been under practical local sponsorship for a considerable period of time; in Massachusetts, it has operated for 2 years without a cent of nonlabor cost to the Federal Government. In addition, this project has taken in receipts amounting to $453,693, which, in addition to the sponsors' direct contributions, provides a high degree of local sponsorship.

The community art centers established by the art project are locally sponsored through the provision of space, light, heat, and other facilities. Of the 96,000 drawings, easel paintings, murals, and sculptured works produced by the project, a large number have been done for display in tax-supported buildings. The nonlabor costs of these works—principally the cost of materials—are borne by the city, county, or State requesting that they be done.

Finally, the theater project, like the music project, obtains substantial local sponsorship through admission charges. While more than 65 percent of its productions are free, admissions for the remainder have totaled $2,291,000. Since January 1939, admissions have amounted to 10 percent of the total cost of the project, or enough to cover all the nonlabor costs. In addition, the project has received a variety of local contributions in kind.

To illustrate the wide diversity of this local sponsorship so far as the theater project is concerned, I have inserted at the end of my remarks a list of over 300 clubs, universities, charities, and other civic and religious bodies which have actively sponsored the project through the purchase of large blocks of tickets or other financial contributions.

EMPLOYMENT AND EXPENDITURES ON FEDERAL ART PROJECTS

In weighing the merits of the proposed amendment, it will be helpful to summarize briefly the employment provided and sums expended in connection with the Federal art projects.

The five projects have employed an average of 40,000 people for the past 3½ years; 32,577 persons were on the rolls as of June 14, 1939.

Since their inception in 1935, the Federal Government has expended $136,053,221 on these projects, of which over 95 percent has been paid in wages. This sum has been distributed as follows:

Art.....	$18,493,968
Music.....	46,120,073
Theater.....	43,349,121
Writers.....	15,739,516
Historical Records.....	12,350,543

For the fiscal year 1939, expenditures on the arts projects have been distributed as follows:

Art.....	$5,532,095
Music.....	11,834,215
Theater.....	10,726,022
Writers.....	4,397,147
Historical Records.....	6,354,301
Total.....	38,843,780

As I have said, the average contribution by the Federal Government for nonlabor costs under Federal project No. 1 has been $4.85 per month per person, in comparison with approximately $6 per person under all other W. P. A. projects. In other words, these projects while under Federal sponsorship have cost the Government less in nonlabor costs than have the locally sponsored construction and other projects.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS

The accomplishments of Federal project No. 1 have been notable. In bare statistical terms alone its record is prodigious. As of June 30, 1938, it had produced the following:

Number of churches whose records have been listed.....	50,355

That much of the work is of unusual quality is apparent from a glance at some of the honors conferred on project employees. For example, James Newell was awarded the Architect League's gold medal in 1938 for his mural at Evander Childs High School in New York City, entitled "The Evolution of Western Civilization." This medal had not been awarded for 5 years because no work worthy of its award had been found. Three W. P. A. project sculptors took the first three awards in the 1938 Metropolitan Life Insurance competition. Each year several of the woodcuts, etchings, and lithographs done by W. P. A. project artists, are chosen for inclusion in the volume Fine Prints of the Year. In 1936, Artist Harry Sternberg won a Guggenheim fellowship.

The theater project, too, has done distinguished work. Its staff has included such well-known figures in the theater as Orson Welles, Alfred Kreymborg, Virgil Geddes, John Houseman, and others. Orson Welles and the Mercury Theater, which he heads, owe their start and success to this project, as attested by Mr. Welles himself. More than 2,650 former employees of the theater project have returned to private theaters or the movies.

Of the 94 productions on Broadway during the current season, 88 employed one or more former Federal theater workers. Four of the seven playwrights winning Rockefeller scholarships this year were formerly connected with the theater project, while Arthur Arent, author of the highly successful W. P. A. production One Third of a Nation, received a Guggenheim fellowship. Ardis Gaines, known to moviegoers as Brenda Marshall, was recruited by Warner Bros. directly from the cast of a Federal theater play for the feminine lead in Career Man. The experience of Gloria Dickson was similar.

Practically every major Hollywood studio employs former theater-project employees. Howard Bay, who designed the sets for Tallulah Bankhead's production of the Little Foxes, had previously designed the set for the Federal theater's production of One Third of a Nation.

[Mr. WAGNER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a list of all the W. P. A. theater productions by title, which will appear hereafter in the Appendix.]

The director of the theater project has a distinguished record of service to the American theater. As director of the experimental theater at Grinnell College, her alma mater, as assistant to George Pierce Baker in the famous "47 Workshop" at Harvard and as director of the experimental theater at Vassar, her work attracted wide attention which led to her being awarded the first Guggenheim Fellowship ever conferred on a woman. Of the report of her work under the fellowship, the New York Times has stated that it is "the most intelligible and best proportioned account of the contemporary European theater now available in English."

She returned to Vassar after her fellowship work, from where she was called to Washington to head the theater project. The tremendous success of this phase of her work is attested to by drama critics, playwrights, producers, actors, and actresses the country over.

A similarly high record of achievement has been made by the other cultural projects. Formerly employed on the writers project were such well-known literary figures as John Steinbeck, author of Of Mice and Men and Grapes of Wrath, Conrad Aiken, Richard Wright, Vincent McHugh, and John Cheever.

Practically every symphony orchestra in the country contains one or more former W. P. A. music-project employees. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, for example, has 11 former project members, the National Broadcasting Co. Orchestra has several, as have the Pittsburgh Symphony, the National Symphony, and others. In addition, former W. P. A. musicians are now conductors of the Houston and Louisville Symphonies.

While this list of individual accomplishments is impressive in itself, the worth of these projects as a whole is demonstrated by the unanimity with which they have been approved by critics, artists, actors, writers, producers, musicians, and others eminently qualified to judge. Only last week, 12 of the outstanding New York dramatic critics said:

We declare that we have had many occasions to praise productions of the Federal theater in New York, many of which have been distinguished contributions to the art of the theater and others of which have been creditable in many respects.

To the same effect was the following statement by 30 prominent actors, actresses, producers, and playwrights:

Its productions have given entertainment and education to millions of Americans and brought economic relief and moral regeneration to thousands of theater workers who faced destitution.

Helen Hayes, Eddie Cantor, Ben Bernie, George Abbott, Moss Hart, Lee Shubert, Arthur Schwartz, Burgess Meredith, Ethel Waters, Worthington Minor, Arthur Richman, Harold Clurman, Sam H. Harris, Clifford Odets, Richard Rogers, Laurence Langner, Philip Loeb, Katharine Cornell, Tallulah Bankhead, Katherine Hepburn, Blanche Yurka, Donald Ogden Stewart, Douglass Montgomery, Herman Shumlin, John Krimsky, Bela Blau, Laurette Taylor, Florence Reed, William Gaxton, and Victor Moore.

Brooks Atkinson, well-known theatrical critic, of the New York Times, wrote last month of the Federal theater project:

Two million six hundred thousand people are employed on W. P. A. projects throughout the country. Only 8,040 of them are employed in the Federal theater—between one-third and one-fourth of 1 percent. Among the 2,600,000 it would be hard to find another group of 8,040 that has accomplished so much and given so rich a social return on the money. * * * It has been the best friend the theater as an institution has ever had in this country.

The art project, too, has been highly lauded. Ford Madox Ford, prominent English critic and author, said of this project:

The level of the work is astonishingly high. Art in America is being given its chance and there has been nothing like it since before the Reformation.

The music project, too, has been highly praised. Erich Wolfgang Korngold, the Austrian conductor and composer, after hearing several W. P. A. music units, remarked:

Nowhere in Europe is there anything to compare with it. Of course, we have state-subsidized opera, but no country in Europe has anything to equal this.

Charles Wakefield Cadman, the celebrated American composer, has voiced his praise, as follows:

The Federal music project is the finest constructive force that has ever come into American musical life. * * * It is serving as a vital stimulating factor, not only in the immediate rehabilitation of musicians but in the perpetuation and furtherance of a high type of music which is so important to any nation's cultural and ethical progress. A vital musical evolution has taken place in every community it has reached.

The work of the writers project has been hailed by authors, editors, and publishers alike. On May 22, 1939, 44 publishers, including representatives of virtually all of the large publishing houses, such as Harcourt, Brace & Co., the Viking Press, Random House, Funk & Wagnells, Houghton Mifflin, Alfred A. Knopf, Bobbs-Merrill, and others, issued a statement praising the Federal writers project and urging that nothing be done to "hamper its program at this time."

On June 15, 50 authors, editors, and other literary figures, including Stephen Vincent Benet, Rockwell Kent, Burns Mantle, Louis Untermeyer, and Van Wyck Brooks, joined in a statement characterizing the work of the writers project as "one of the most significant literary records of the twentieth century."

Finally, Lewis Mumford, well-known literary critic, has said of the American guide series:

Of all the good uses of adversity, one of the best has been the inception and execution of a series of American guidebooks, the first attempt on a comprehensive scale to make the country itself worthily known to Americans. The best of the new guides that are so far available give one a great thrill of pride; pride of the country they describe and in the capacity and devotion and the fine anonymous collaboration which has gone into this work. These guidebooks are the finest contribution to American patriotism that has been made in our generation.

Mr. President, in the light of the distinguished record of the arts projects, their significant contribution to American culture, as well as their social and economic contribution to the unemployed artists, actors, writers, and musicians, I sincerely hope that the Senate will provide the comparatively insignificant sum authorized by this amendment for the Federal maintenance of those of the projects which cannot survive under a requirement of local sponsorship.

I wish to call to the attention of the Senate an eloquent and moving plea for the continuance of the Federal arts projects, delivered over the National Broadcasting System Monday evening by the distinguished actor, Mr. Lionel Barrymore:

RADIO ADDRESS BY LIONEL BARRYMORE

I have been in the theater a good many years. Acting is the only profession I know. I have been a pretty lucky actor, and don't think for a minute that an actor doesn't need plenty of luck. An actor is an odd sort of animal. If he's got any talent at all, he seems to feel that he ought to make his living by that talent. I am told that doctors and nurses and painters and sculptors all have kind of the same idea, because they like to make their living at what they are good at.

When this depression came along the theater was badly hit. That didn't stop the actors from wanting to keep on living, however. It didn't stop the stage hands and the electricians, and the ushers and the scrub women, from wanting to keep on living, too. Well, the Government recognized that fact. By golly, one day we found a special theater had been established, and those people went to working at it.

Now, the special theater was a little different from any we had ever seen. In the old tramping days our job used to be to get folks to the theater, and along came a modern, civilized idea: Let's take the theater to the people. So the Federal theater project was not limited to the big cities. The Government was saying, Why shouldn't the people that live in the little towns and villages, remote communities, that had never seen a play, have the advantage of getting acquainted with the great classics of poetry and drama? But what about the 26,000,000 people who have been benefited by seeing the Federal theater plays, and millions of others who have been finding education through its art projects? I think they would be kind of mad if they found they were going to go back to the humdrum world they had to live in before the Government came along to help them.

If I were a farmer, say, living down in the swamps of Florida, and my children had been taught to play the fiddle and paint a picture or sing a song, or watch theatrical productions, I don't know how I would answer them if they asked me why all these things were being taken away from them. Maybe I would want to ask my Congressman why this chance to improve themselves had been taken away from them, and he would have to have some pretty good answers if he wanted to satisfy me.

Yes, sir; as a farmer I think I would be pretty mad, and as an actor I know I would be as mad as I ever expect to be in my life if 8,000 men and women of my own kind, earning their living in a pretty tough world, were thrown out as though they weren't worth Congress' consideration.

Now, it is true, I am just an old actor talking, but I am also an old citizen of the United States and I bet you I could find a lot of people who feel just about the same way I do on this sort of thing. I think it is dangerous for a nation to start proving what a fine country it can be and then right in the middle of proving it let it slide back to the dark days of the depression. If I were a Congressman, I would try to remember that the American people never let anything be taken away from them permanently. Lately their own country has given them something else besides protective tariffs, good roads, good schools, and pellagra control. I hope Congress won't see fit to say, "Oh, all right; we will give them their old arts projects for a couple of months more." I hope they will realize that the help the Government has furnished in the last few years has become part of the daily life of the American people and part of their hope for the future, and taking it away would be almost like taking one of the stripes out of the American flag.

Now, you must not do that, and don't say, "Well, you can have it for a little while longer."

The Federal art projects are all part of America today and you ought not to fool with them at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 21, to insert:

Sec. 38. Any Administrator or other officer named to have general supervision at the seat of government over the program and work contemplated under the appropriations contained in this joint resolution and receiving a salary of $5,000 or more per annum from such appropriations, and any State or regional administrator receiving a salary of $5,000 or more per annum from such appropriations shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate: Provided, That the provisions of section 1761 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to any such appointee and the salary of any person so appointed shall not be increased for a period of 6 months after confirmation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the sections will be renumbered.

Without objection, those amendments which were passed over en bloc at the request of the Senator from Arizona and depending upon the action of the Senate with regard to the public-works amendment, will be agreed to en bloc.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 20, at the end of line 23, it is proposed to strike out the period and insert the words "on the basis of relative needs."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate long, because, although this is an important amendment, it is, indeed, a very simple one. I propose to add at the end of section 16 (a) the words "on the basis of relative needs." If the amendment should be adopted it would mean that all nonveterans would be given employment on the W. P. A., preference being given to those who have the greatest need. It would mean that when lay-offs take place on W. P. A. those with the greatest need would be laid off the last. My purpose in offering the amendment is twofold. In the first place, like every other Member of this body, I have received innumerable letters advising me that individuals who were in great need were not hired on W. P. A., whereas those with a lesser degree of need were hired. I have received complaint that when lay-offs were made those with comparatively slight degree of need were retained and persons with a large number of dependents were dismissed. It seems to me that it is clearly the purpose of the law to relieve the needy. If there is not sufficient money with which to relieve all the needy, then it seems to me that, insofar as nonveterans are concerned, we ought to give preference to the neediest people. The amendment does not affect the veterans' preference section, and I believe if it were put in as a direction to the Administrator it would make crystal clear the intent of Congress.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, this matter was presented to the committee by the Senator from Massachusetts. The committee, having entire sympathy with the purpose of the amendment, after careful consideration decided that it was administratively impossible that the people should be put on the rolls on the basis of relative need. The provision of the act is that people shall be employed and retained. If every day the rolls, with more than 2,000,000 persons, men and women, on them, had to be examined and reexamined when someone was taken off, because it became necessary to go into their case histories, into their family lives, into their income to find out who was in the greatest need, it would be utterly impossible as a practical matter to carry out this well-intentioned amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may I make one further statement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has already spoken once on his amendment. Does he wish to speak on the bill?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; I wish to speak on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time is on the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I know the Senate is impatient to act, and I shall take but 1 minute. The amendment, it is true, was defeated in the Committee on Appropriations by a vote of 10 to 9. I think the Senator from Colorado raises somewhat of an unnecessary objection to it. I do not think that the administrative difficulty would be so great as he says it would be. It would not be necessary to go over the list every day. I think it is important to establish a principle in the measure. The House inserted a formula for the allocation of funds. That was one attempt to establish a principle rather than to leave the whole thing to the personal decision of those who may administer the measure. I do not say that those who will administer it and have in the past administered it are not splendid men. However, they are but human. They are merely men like you and me, Mr. President. It seems to me that we should establish this thing on the basis of principle, and if there is a better or a fairer or a more humane principle than to give preference to the neediest persons, then I do not know what that principle is.

Mr. President, on this question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, for a great number of years I have been a close follower of the distinguished and able senior Senator from the State of Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]. Since January last I have been closely and intimately associated with him here in the Senate. I wish to say that I agree with what he stated in his address a few moments ago. Then I also wish to congratulate him because of his wit, his humor, his penetrating scholarship, and his profound knowledge upon legislative matters which he extols so frequently in this historic Hall.

Mr. President, this distinguished statesman a few moments ago discussed the question of communism and brought enlightenment to the Senate and the country upon that question. In view of what he said I cannot refrain from discussing the subject of communism or a certain phase of it as it relates to the subject matter before the Senate.

Mr. President, the Daily Record, of Chicago, Ill., is the recognized Communist newspaper for the Midwest section of this Nation. On June 20 last there appeared in that daily paper an advertisement entitled "Send This Wire Tonight!" For the benefit of the Senate and for the RECORD I shall read this wire, which is as follows:

Senator SCOTT LUCAS,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Defeat of the Woodrum W. P. A. bill is vital for the future of America. We expect you, as our spokesman, to vote against the three-man W. P. A. board, P. W. A. earmarking, abolition of Federal Arts Projects, slashing of N. Y. A. funds, limitation of funds for individual projects, and elimination of prevailing wages.

Mr. President, the senior Senator from Illinois has received from his own State 613 telegrams, most of them coming from the city of Chicago, concerning the W. P. A. appropriation measure which the Senate is now discussing. I caused the personnel of my office to make a close comparison of each and every telegram received. Out of the 613 telegrams which came, either advocating the defeat of the measure or supporting the W. P. A. appropriation measure, I found 107 telegrams word for word just like the telegram which was printed in the Daily Worker, which is the chief communistic organ of the Central West. In addition to the 107 telegrams, 30 more used that telegram as a basis for conveying to me the same information which is found in the advertised telegram. In other words, out of the 613 telegrams, 22 percent came from those who are avowedly Communists, or at least who read the Daily Worker, and have leanings towards communism in this country.

Mr. President, I agree with the philosophy of the distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], in saying that no individual who advocates the destruction of the Bill of Rights, or advocates the overthrow of the Government by force and violence, is entitled to money from the Federal Treasury. And yet, notwithstanding their belief in and advocacy of such an un-American doctrine, they have the audacity and the temerity to send or cause to be sent to me 137 telegrams from my own State urging and insisting that I do certain things in connection with the W. P. A. program.

I have no way of knowing whether the 22 percent who sent me these telegrams are all Communists, but certainly they have been influenced by the advertisement to which I have referred, and could be convicted upon circumstantial evidence beyond any question of doubt of being either Communists or leaning toward the philosophy of communism. I give this information to the Senate merely to show how the Communists in the country are working day and night in connection with this particular program, which many of whom are apparently enjoying to the utmost, notwithstanding the fact that they believe in a different form of government than that under which they live.

In conclusion, let it be understood that I make no complaint against the thousands of true Americans who write or send me their views upon W. P. A. legislation. I welcome their honest advice and counsel upon all questions of government because these are trying times—there are times that test the mettle of men and women in all walks of life. I shall support the present legislation, but it should always be understood that the telegrams of the Communists had nothing to do with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Montana will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, beginning with line 8, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including line 8, on page 8, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SECTION 1. (a) The Work Projects Administration (hereinafter referred to as the "Administration") in the Federal Works Agency is hereby continued as an agency of the Government for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section.

(b) Funds made available to the Administration for the purpose of enabling it to carry on the program of public works provided for by subsection (c) of this section may be expended for (1) the prosecution of projects approved for such Administration under the provisions of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936, the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937, the joint resolution of March 2, 1938, and the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938; and (2) the following types of public projects, Federal and non-Federal, subject to the approval of the President: (A) Highways, roads, and streets; (B) public buildings (including schools, hospitals, and public-housing projects), parks, and other recreational facilities (including buildings therein); (C) public utilities, electric transmission and distribution lines or systems to serve persons in rural areas (including projects sponsored by and for the benefit of nonprofit and cooperative associations); (D) sewer systems and water supply and purification systems; (E) airports and other transportation facilities; (F) flood control, drainage, irrigation, and conservation; (G) eradication of insects pests; (H) miscellaneous construction projects; and (I) educational, professional, clerical, cultural, recreational, production, service (including training for domestic service), and miscellaneous nonconstruction projects.

(d) The Commissioner of Work Projects is authorized and directed to make such upward revisions in the monthly wage rates payable to persons employed on the public-works program provided for by this section as may be necessary to enable such persons to maintain a standard of living compatible with decency and good health.

(e) The hourly rate of wages paid to persons employed upon projects under this section shall be not less than the greatest of the following—

(1) The prevailing hourly rate of pay for work of a similar nature in the same locality as determined by the Commissioner of Work Projects.

(2) Thirty cents.

(3) In the case of employment in any occupation for which minimum rates of pay for persons employed by private employers are established under the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, such minimum rates.

On page 19, beginning with line 11, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including line 12, on page 20.

On page 20, line 13, it is proposed to strike out "(a)."

On page 21, beginning with line 14, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including line 8, on page 23.

On page 29, it is proposed to strike out lines 12 to 23, both inclusive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY obtained the floor.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me?

Mr. MURRAY. Yes.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana has been generous enough to yield to me to present a very brief amendment.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, my yielding in this instance does not result in my yielding the floor, does it?

Mr. BONE. I do not want to take the Senator off the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Montana withdraws his amendment, he will have to take his chances of being recognized.

Mr. BONE. Then, Mr. President, in view of the fact that this amendment interests the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] very much, and has to do with municipal power, I am going to ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to offer the amendment now, and that the Senator from Montana may not lose the floor. This amendment will take only a very little time, I think. It seems to me that there is no reason why it should not be adopted.

The Senator in charge of the bill says he has no objection to the introduction of this matter into the bill. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that I may present the amendment without the Senator from Montana losing the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair is of the opinion that the Senate of the United States may do almost anything by unanimous consent; but he does not believe that one Senator may hold the floor, even by unanimous consent, while the Senate is passing upon an amendment. However, the Chair believes a unanimous-consent agreement could be entered into that the Senator from Montana should be recognized upon the disposition of the amendment to be offered by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana be temporarily withdrawn and that the Senator from Washington be permitted to offer his amendment and that, at the conclusion of the consideration of that amendment, the Senator from Montana be recognized to reoffer his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Regular order!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] was demanding the regular order as the Chair said there was no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not hear the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I have an amendment that I desire to have considered. I should like to have it considered.

Mr. BONE. I yield the floor.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Presiding Officer recognized the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. McCARRAN. The junior Senator from Montana did not yield the floor. Why should the junior Senator from Montana now be taken off the floor, when he has an amendment pending? The Record will show exactly what I have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana did not lose any rights in the matter. The Senator's amendment will now be considered to be pending before the Senate. The Chair recognizes the junior Senator from Montana.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, at this late hour I do not desire to enter into a lengthy discussion of the problem of unemployment; but it occurs to me, after having given most careful study to the situation, which confronts our country, that the program offered by the House joint resolution is utterly insufficient, and that a substantial increase should be made to carry the load of unemployment which is freely acknowledged to exist at this time.

Under the provisions of the House joint resolution it is proposed to reduce the relief rolls to a million and a half, while during the past year we have carried on the W. P. A. rolls an average of 3,000,000 workers. Anything less than an average of 3,000,000 would be utterly insufficient in view of the tremendous unemployment situation in the country.

It is not only inhuman but it is a great injustice also to the business interests of the country, because while this is a relief program it is also a program of recovery; for the money spent on W. P. A. is money that aids in the small business and professional circles of the country, and is absolutely necessary that that program be carried out if we are going to continue to advance in the efforts to bring recovery.

My amendment not only provides for an average of 3,000,000 on the relief rolls, but it also relates to the other various features of the House joint resolution which have been in controversy here during the day and are inadequately provided for. It seems to me that the amendment I have proposed is the absolute minimum necessary if we are going to continue to make a substantial fight against the desperate conditions which prevail everywhere in the country today.

As I say, I have no desire to make an extended speech at this late hour. I had hoped that a resolution would be adopted here which would make provision for carrying on the W. P. A. program after the 1st of July, so as to give the Senate an opportunity to make a careful study of the situation. As it is, we are rushing through with this program, attempting with great hurry to make provision for the relief program for the coming year, and we are bound to find that a great many mistakes have been made.

The desperate situation which we find in the country today is the result of a break-down of our industrial system. It is due to no fault of the unemployed in the country. They have made no contribution to the conditions which make it necessary to carry out a program of this kind. All prominent authorities on the problem of unemployment have now come to concede that it is no longer merely an emergency situation, but that it is a continuing problem, and that the Government must meet the situation until industry is again able to furnish employment to these workers. Therefore, in any intelligent consideration of the problem of work relief, it must be borne in mind that the problem to be adopted should be envisioned to extend over a considerable period of time. The reason for this is that our economic system is undergoing a serious process of readjustment, particularly in connection with the production and distribution of goods. This process of readjustment will take time.

Until our economic machine can be corrected and readjusted to meet the present-day conditions of the country, the problem of unemployment will continue to persist. Through the rapid development of machinery and technological advancement, America has become the leading country of the world in mass production of goods. American plants today are equipped to turn out goods far beyond the capacity of our purchasing power. In every line of endeavor, technological development has made it possible to throw on the streets by the hundreds, and sometimes by the thousands, workers who, under these existing conditions, have nowhere to turn for a livelihood.

The amendment which I propose, covers extensive changes in the joint resolution as it refers to the W. P. A. The first and most important change which the amendment would make would be an appropriation of $2,250,000,000 for the coming fiscal year in place of the $1,477,000,000 provided in the House joint resolution. This appropriation is devised to provide an average of 3,000,000 jobs for the coming fiscal year. This is slightly less than the appropriation which was made available to the W. P. A. in the past fiscal year.

In spite of some estimates which have been submitted to the Senate, it is my contention that such a sum is a bare minimum to carry through the W. P. A. for the coming year. I would challenge any economic or political forecaster to say at this time, in good faith and with conviction, that employment would increase within the next year sufficiently to absorb a cut of a million from W. P. A. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] has indicated that it is the estimate of the committee that the sum provided under the committee joint resolution would cut the W. P. A. to approximately 1,500,000 jobs by the end of the coming fiscal year.

It has been pointed out often that it requires the reemployment of four unemployed persons to take one person from the W. P. A. rolls into private employment. Therefore, it would be required, in order to meet the committee's estimate, to have a reemployment of 4,000,000 persons in private industry during the next year. Of course, no such thing will happen.

Our previous experience relating to deficiency appropriations during the past years has indicated that predictions of increase in private employment to absorb the cuts in W. P. A. have not materialized. The only result of cuts on W. P. A. has been to increase the misery of people who are unemployed, and to bring a faltering, a hesitation, and retardation in the recovery movement which was under way at the time this session of Congress convened.

Nonagricultural employment, as estimated by the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, has declined from 33,620,000 in December 1933 to 32,804,000 in April of this year. In other words, instead of increased employment we have increased unemployment.

I wish further to call the attention of the Senate to the testimony of the representatives of the United States Conference of Mayors, the representatives of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, including the United Automobile Workers of America, and the testimony of the American Federation of Labor unions which appeared before the committee. All of these powerful and influential organizations emphatically indicated, either directly or indirectly, that there was no prospect of increases in private employment sufficient to absorb the cuts in W. P. A. so far as they could predict.

It seems to be perfectly clear that a serious cut in W. P. A. funds at this time would be a direct threat to the continuation of recovery. A glaring example stands before us of what happened in 1937 to the economy of the country, when Federal expenditures which were made available to purchasing power were abruptly cut off.

From that experience we should take warning. There we had a condition in which business was constantly increasing, and we began to curtail the W. P. A. rolls; we cut down the P. W. A. program, and immediately we began to find in the country a situation in which men were being thrown out of employment in private industry because there was no purchasing power in the hands of the people of the country to continue the activity of industry and business.

It seems perfectly clear to me that this should be avoided now. Certainly anyone who advocates similar cuts in Federal investment and expenditure now, at a time when the economy is actually operating at a lower level than in 1937, takes upon himself a terrible responsibility. I, for one, do not wish to see this Congress repeat the mistakes of 1937, and I have therefore offered this amendment to provide for what I believe to be a minimum of necessary jobs.

Mr. President, the amendment which I propose has been carefully prepared after careful studies and conferences with the legislative experts of the Senate. It is designed to overcome any defects which may be charged against the administration of W. P. A. and thus place the national program of work relief on a sound, effective, and efficient basis.

Mr. President, unemployment is the most serious and threatening problem which has ever confronted this Nation. It cannot be disposed of by merely indicting the vast army of unemployed American citizens as a lazy and worthless army of leeches hanging on the Government and refusing to find employment in private industry. The plain fact confronting the Nation is that there is no present opportunity for the millions now employed on the W. P. A. rolls, and also nearly a million in addition thereto who are qualified for W. P. A. enrollment, to find employment in private industry.

This desperate situation has developed as a result of the break-down of our industrial system of private competitive enterprise. It is due to no fault or blame on the part of these millions of unemployed workers, but is due entirely to the failure of our economic system to afford them employment.

I feel very strongly, therefore, that this amendment offers to the unemployed, and to those who have a concern for the welfare of the working men and women of this country, the only practical opportunity to register their desire for an adequate provision for the unemployed.

Mr. President, I think it would be unfair for me to continue any argument on this subject at this time. It occurs to me that it should be plain to everyone that unless we continue this program of work relief on an adequate basis, unless we continue to spend money in this country to carry out a program of work for the unemployed and destitute people of the country, we are going to experience another recession such as that in which we found ourselves in 1938. I therefore submit that the amendment should be agreed to.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I should like to comment for about 5 minutes in favor of the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY]. The chief appeal the amendment makes to me is that it tends to get away from the castigation of the people who work upon this program as "relief clients." I do not regard a person who has been displaced, for example, from the job he holds honorably because of technological improvements, as a person who is not deserving of confidence and respect in this country. I think that the first day we ever called this program a relief program, and tended to make everyone who was on the program almost to a degree ashamed of himself and ashamed of the fact that he was on it, we did a great injustice to a large number of honorable citizenry of this country.

I think I have mentioned heretofore an incident which came to my attention of a person who was working on W. P. A., who happened to be a young lady. While on a boat voyage on the Atlantic seaboard she met some other guests on the trip and got into close association with them. After the voyage had ended, and she had had a very pleasant association with these new-made friends, she wrote me and told me about it, and said, "I was ashamed to tell them that I was working on the W. P. A."

I do not think it is any less honorable to work on the W. P. A. than it is to work on the construction of a post office, which, too, is a Federal project; or to work on the construction of a highway which is contributed to by the Federal Government, or to be engaged in the construction of a ship, the development of which is subsidized by a Federal program. So that in the beginning of this endeavor to give jobs to people who did not have work in private industry we should never have castigated them as relief clients. They are merely American citizens who have a right to work, and to do any honorable work which may be provided for them.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to ask a question, because, perhaps, I am not familiar with the matter. How does the question arise as to whether or not it is an honorable job or something else?

Mr. PEPPER. In the first place, a person has to be investigated by a social public welfare worker, and to be adjudicated by that person to be impoverished, and every means of subsistence so completely depleted that he is virtually on the verge of starvation before he is eligible to get the benefit of the work program. That is the application of a means test, which goes far beyond the natural right of an unemployed American citizen to do honorable labor, even if his National Government does make it possible for him to get the job.

What I was getting at, I will say to the able Senator from New Mexico, was that I am sorry that we ever applied a means test, that we ever so sharply limited the amount of the appropriation that there had to be a means test to restrict a place on the program to the relatively few who can pass it.

I think, if I may submit my individual opinion with humility, that this country is rich enough to give a job to the people who are willing to work and who are able to work at the jobs they are fitted to fill.

Mr. HATCH. I merely want to get the Senator's idea. Does he mean they should be employed regardless of the need?

Mr. PEPPER. Regardless of the need. I mean to say that a man who owns a little cottage, who has a wife and children, who, perhaps, is the absolute owner of the little cottage, may be working, for example, in some kind of a factory, whatever one may choose to take as an illustration, and that factory may put in new machinery which will do away with that man's opportunity to work in the factory.

Is that man, who cannot find a job in private industry, not to be permitted to work upon projects created by his National Government because he is the owner of a little cottage which he has been able to acquire through stinting in the years past? Why cannot his country provide for him an opportunity to work without him being so impoverished that he has to meet the ordinary means test that is applied to each person who now works upon the W. P. A.?

I believe that we would perhaps have saved the money in the long run if we had done away absolutely with the means test, if we had said, "We are giving jobs to American men and women who want to work and are willing to work a full day's work on a job they are fitted to do. If you cannot find a job by honest endeavor in private industry, we are not going to castigate you as a failure in life, we are not going to castigate you as one of the impoverished and one of the unworthy failures of your generation." Here is an alternative. Here is an implemented service that is made available by the activity of the National Government. I wish it were possible for that standard to prevail in the whole public-works program. It would cost but two or three or four million dollars, I believe, to carry out a program like that annually in this country, and I do not regard that as extravagant.

If we cannot build rural electrification lines and make those facilities available to the rural homes, if we cannot build homes for the people of this country who do not have decent habitations, if we cannot find enough highways, if we cannot find enough rehabilitation of eroded soil, and enough reforestation where the forests have been depleted in this country, in other words, if, with intelligent leadership, we cannot find enough projects to give employment to the honest men and women of this country who are able to work and willing to work, there is something wrong with the leadership of this Nation, and if we are unwilling to make available the funds to provide work of that character, there is something wrong either with the conscience or the sentiment, or, in any case, the judgment of this country.

I, therefore, commend the Senator from Montana. I think this is one of the best-drafted amendments I have seen in the Congress. It sets up a standard of employment which is related, in a degree, to the need of the applicant, but it does not apply the same sort of means test as is applied to the employee of the Works Progress Administration. It sets up about four or five possible wage standards, and provides that the highest one of those shall prevail, 30 cents an hour, or the prevailing wage in the community, or other wages which are specified in the amendment.

Mr. President, I think this administration should have the courage to say, "We are resolved that unemployment shall be abolished in this Nation; we are in competition with the dictatorships of the world, which are availing themselves of their resources of materials and men, every one of them to the last degree, and we cannot afford to let them get ahead of us by that kind of service to their people while we lag behind with the conscious, humiliating knowledge that ten or more million of the people of this country, however diligently they search in this rich Nation, are unable to find a chance to do an honest day's work without having people point them out as having so failed in life that they have to sink to the level of the means test of the W. P. A."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MURRAY. I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. MURRAY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, in the interest of saving time I can more readily call attention to the situation than by having the amendment I propose read at the desk. On page 32, in line 14, I offer an amendment which will transpose the words "in any election" to follow the word "candidate."

Mr. President, as a matter of legal draftsmanship the words "in any election" should follow the word "candidate." The amendment which I have offered would simply rectify that particular language. I have discussed the matter with the Senator from New Mexico. So far as I know, there is no objection. I ask that the question be put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 32, line 14, it is proposed to transpose the words "in any election" to follow the word "candidate."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, last night, when we were examining the bill in connection with the explanation of the able Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], his attention was directed to page 22, line 11, and at that point the Senator from Colorado explained that the language came to us from the House in the form in which it there appeared. I have an amendment at the desk with reference to line 11, and I ask that the clerk state the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 22, line 11, after the word "exists", it is proposed to strike out down to and including the period in line 13.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish the Senator would explain that amendment and advise us concerning what he has in mind.

Mr. DANAHER. I am glad to do so, Mr. President. Let me point out that subsection (d), commencing in line 4, provides that "there shall be removed from employment on Works Progress Administration projects all relief workers whose needs for employment have not been certified by the formula which follows," first, that "a local public certifying agency" shall certify, or that the Work Projects Administration shall so certify where no local certifying agency exists. Then, in line 11, there is stated the alternative that "where the Work Projects Administration certifies by reason of its refusal to accept the certification by local public agencies." Obviously, this gives the Administration a veto power to nullify the certification by the local relief agency.

The alternative obviously goes right to the root of the very situation which led to the report by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], which confronted us when we convened in January. Although the Senator from Colorado told us that there was no intention, certainly in the mind of the committee to make such a situation possible, yet the possibility of politics, and the application or misapplication of politics, which has led to the abuses in the W. P. A. in the past, is obvious. It is the type of language that ought not to be in the measure, and the amendment therefore is directed to cure the defect.

Does that answer the question of the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; I understand. Mr. President, what the amendment does is to make final and conclusive the certification of the local board. The Federal Government has all the money, but under this provision it would be denied the right to exclude from employment anyone who was certified by the local board. There are six States in the Union where the Works Progress Administration has been compelled to set up its own certifying machinery because of the failure of the local boards or because of the lax and incompetent character of their work. It seems to me that that should be clearly understood. If Senators want the local board, the board of county commissioners or some other local board, absolutely to determine the amount of employment and to impose upon the Works Progress Administration any number of employees of their own choice, they should support the amendment.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I should like to call the Senator's attention to the situation which existed during the winter of 1937 and 1938 at the time of the rapid increase of unemployment. There was a situation in many parts of the country against which complaint was made by Members of Congress of the failure of those who were entitled to Works Progress work because of the fact that they had not been certified by the local agencies. It was absolutely necessary and essential at that time in a number of instances throughout the country, in order to protect those who were unemployed, that the Works Progress Administration take action. First, they gave these local agencies a certain length of time in which to prepare their certified list. Then they found that that was not a successful method, and that they had to come in and do their own certifying. The amendment of the Senator which is now under consideration would take away from the Federal Government that power; it would take away that opportunity.

Of course, there are always those who see in everything some measure of politics. This is not a question of politics at all. It is merely a question of the Federal Government which supplies these funds seeing that they are properly used in instances where the local certifying agencies completely fall down on the job. There is no question of politics about it at all.

Mr. HATCH. I merely wish to say in corroboration of what the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Washington have said that, in my opinion, it would be one of the gravest mistakes that the Senate could make to agree to the amendment. It would make it impossible for the Federal Government to have anything to say about the certification of persons for relief. It would open the door wide for politics in its worst form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 23, line 8, after the word "months", it is proposed to strike out the period and to insert "Provided further, That the first such investigation be made forthwith."

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, section (f), on page 23, provides that an investigation of the relief rolls shall be made at least each 6 months. Therefore, it is possible, in my opinion, that such an investigation may not be made until the last of 1939, or after 6 months have elapsed. During that time we are all desirous of seeing that as many of those on relief as possible get as much good out of this money as possible. Therefore, I think it is the desire of all of us to see that we start out with a clean slate. My amendment provides nothing more or less than that an investigation be had immediately on the passage of the measure.

Mr. President, I urge the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 9, line 25, it is proposed to strike out the numerals "$123,000,000" and to insert in lieu thereof the numerals "$153,000,000."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, this amendment has to do with the appropriation for the Farm Security Administration. Last year it had $175,000,000, and used $50,000,000. I think it is generally agreed by those who are familiar with the situation that this is the cheapest form of relief under any of the relief programs we have under the Administration. The beneficiaries are paying the money back. Instead of giving them relief, loans are made to them, and 25 percent of the loans have already been paid back.

In the Appropriations Committee an amendment was offered to replace this $50,000,000. That was defeated by a narrow margin. I took it to the floor leader in charge of the bill, who is, of course, as we know, now coming to be known as "The Watchdog of the Treasury," and I have reduced the amendment from $50,000,000 to $30,000,000. I think the Senator in charge of the bill, as I have understood from his conversation with me, agrees to that amount. It will be a real saving ultimately, because, otherwise, a very large number of persons will be transferred to the relief rolls.

Mr. ADAMS. I told the Senator from Alabama that I had no control over the amount, but, so far as I was concerned, I was willing the matter should go to conference and there be further argued.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, having been one of those who suggested that this increase should be made in the committee, I am unwilling that it should be taken to conference with the sentence of death already pronounced upon it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I quite agree with the Senator. If that is the attitude of the Senator from Colorado, I want a straight vote, because I am not seeking any formal consent.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It was quite apparent from what the Senator from Colorado said that the acquiescence was merely for the purpose of ending the debate and getting the pending matter out of the way.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I cannot believe that the Senator from Colorado will take such a position.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Perhaps that was an exaggerated statement, but I should like the Senator to explain just what he would do.

Mr. ADAMS. Exactly what I stated on the floor. I should be very glad to have the matter further discussed in the conference committee. I shall take it there.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I cannot conceive it to be the attitude of the Senator from Colorado that he would take the amendment to the conference committee merely for the purpose of letting it die there.

Mr. ADAMS. I am perfectly frank with the Senator. The Senator knows that in the committee a majority voted against the increase.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; a majority did not vote against this increase.

Mr. ADAMS. Well, against any increase.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; of $50,000,000. It has been now reduced to $30,000,000.

Mr. ADAMS. I am quite in agreement with the Senator's view in connection with the major portions of the farm-security program as being very effective and very economical in its administration. I am not personally in a position to bind unappointed conferees. I will say that all I can do is to see that the matter receives consideration.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not ask the Senator to bind anybody, but himself, but I know he is as firm in his convictions as any Member of the Senate and as determined in his attitude when he takes one. All I want to have the Senator do is to say that he will do his best to retain it in the measure in conference.

Mr. ADAMS. I will see that it receives fair consideration.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. I shall wait until the Senator concludes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. When this matter was discussed in the committee attention was called to the evidence which was presented by the representatives of the Farm Security Administration, that the repayment during the next fiscal year is estimated to be at least as much as $40,000,000. My own feeling is that this amendment should provide $40,000,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think it should have provided $50,000,000. That was the amount they had last year.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is correct about that. Only $123,000,000 is appropriated in the joint resolution as it was reported by the committee. The evidence presented to the committee has established very clearly that more than $82,000,000 of some $340,000,000 has already been repaid.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Although these loans have been in force only 4 years, 87,000 families have not only been taken off relief but have been made self-sustaining by the operations of the Farm Security Administration. The testimony before the committee is that today there are at least 350,000 migratory farm families in the United States. The Farm Security Administration has succeeded in making more than 160,000 families completely self-sustaining. The evidence indicates that the net worth of families who have had the benefit of the farm-security loans has been increased in these 4 years by more than $67,000,000. I am frank to say that there is no agency in all the vast number of agencies which have been created under the relief work which to my mind has established as good a record as that established by the Farm Security Administration. I think it would be exceedingly desirable if the full amount of the appropriation of last year were now allowed, and I hope that the Senator from Alabama will alter his amendment to make it at least $40,000,000, and that we shall stand fast to secure that increased appropriation.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. Will the Senator from Wyoming state to the Senate what amount the President, after receiving reports from the Farm Security Administration, and being thoroughly acquainted with the facts, requested that Congress grant for this purpose?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the Senator wants to know what the Budget estimate was, I will say the Budget estimate was $123,000,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if he has made any effort to increase the appropriation for the National Youth Movement to the amount recommended by the President?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Is the Senator addressing his inquiry to me?

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. In explanation of the question I asked, I think it is very important in considering this matter at this hour that we take into consideration the fact that the President, the Budget Bureau, and the Farm Security Administration, after thorough study of the matter, made a request for $123,000,000, and the House Appropriations Committee considered the whole matter carefully. The House considered it, and all agreed that $123,000,000 was adequate for this purpose. I think the picture is not complete without that statement.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, whatever may be the facts with respect to what the Senator has mentioned, they are to me irrelevant to this matter, because the judgment of the Budget Bureau, in my opinion, has failed to take into consideration the great success of the Farm Security Administration in establishing farm families upon land. That is the most essential thing that we can accomplish at this time. When we hear the stories which are being told and the evidence which is being presented of families wandering over the face of the earth, and when we know it is no longer possible for them to succeed as they have in the past, in establishing homesteads upon the public domain, this appropriation affords an opportunity for us to help establish firmly the theory of private property, which was so eloquently defended in the Senate this evening by the distinguished senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]. I believe that our own judgment should outweigh the judgment of the Bureau of the Budget or any other official who may not know the facts with respect to this administration.

Mr. RUSSELL and Mr. BURKE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield first to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. I hope the Senator from Wyoming, before he takes his seat, will make it clear that, with the exception of $20,000,000 of this appropriation, it is all for loans, and that the repayments so far indicate that the Government will have a very small loss on these outlays. These people are paying for their own relief. They are in need, but they take these loans and pay for their own relief, and are rehabilitated as farm families on the land, rather than to flock into the cities, where they would undoubtedly wind up on the rolls of the Works Progress Administration, in which event the funds paid for their upkeep would be gone in perpetuity.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is quite correct.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The record, in facts and figures as presented to the committee, is that a total of $320,000,000 plus have been loaned, and of that fund, although the loan period has not yet been reached, $82,939,000 have already been repaid.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Let me state to the Senator that the estimate of the Department is that 80 percent of the total amount appropriated by Congress has been repaid.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is quite correct.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I should like to point out that 87,000 farm families have anticipated their farm loans and have paid off the loans in full before maturity.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That also is the evidence.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I merely want to ask one further question. Of course, the Bureau of the Budget took its information for what was needed for the Farm Security Administration from the Farm Security Administration's own statement. I ask the Senator what facts he has to present to the Senate to indicate a change of condition since the Farm Security Administration made its request of the Budget Bureau for $123,000,000, which would now justify him in saying that the figure set by the Bureau of the Budget is irrelevant to this discussion.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. My answer to the Senator from Nebraska is that the Budget Bureau frequently acts without detailed facts, merely for the purpose of arriving at such a distribution of the funds as the Budget Bureau has determined in advance to reach. I do not believe that the reduction from $173,000,000 to $123,000,900 was based upon any facts that the Senator from Nebraska can produce.

Mr. RUSSELL and Mr. PEPPER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield first to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. The testimony before the committee was to the effect that last year, with the larger appropriation, the Administration had applications for loans from 400,000 families in need, upon which they were unable to act. In the face of that statement, that testimony, and those applications on file with the Farm Security Administration, someone in the Bureau of the Budget brought about the reduction in the Budget estimate.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. There is no question that what the Senator says is true.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. REED. I want to add my voice to the voices of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. We are appropriating a large amount of money for use through various agencies. There is no agency connected with relief of any kind that has a record so successful as that of the Farm Security Administration. As Senators have already said, approximately 80 percent of the money used by the Farm Security Administration actually to locate people upon the land in homes of their own is being repaid.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Not only has the Administration made an effort but it has succeeded in the effort, which is the most important factor.

Mr. REED. We have been discussing appropriations for millions and scores of millions of dollars, which, when spent through other agencies, will never come back into the Treasury of the United States. Here is one undertaking on which we can more usefully employ the money, do more good with it, benefit more people, and salvage more of it and bring it back into the Treasury than in the case of any other agency provided for by the joint resolution.

When this amendment is voted upon I should like to have a yea-and-nay vote. I want the able Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] to go into the conference with instructions from the Senate to maintain this increased sum.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Let me make clear that the Senator from Colorado has never gone into a conference but that he has maintained the position of the Senate; and the Senator from Colorado is never going into a conference unless he carries out the faith of those who send him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Wyoming on the amendment has expired.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I shall take time on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming is recognized on the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall yield in just a moment.

My remark at the outset may have provoked the statement which the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] has just made, to which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] has made response. I wish to say that no member of the committee, and I am sure no Member of the Senate, fails to recognize the complete sincerity of the Senator from Colorado. In making my original remark, I was adopting, or attempting to adopt one of his own facetious methods of expression. I hope the Senator realizes that there was no intention on the part of anybody to cast any reflection whatsoever upon his loyalty to the instructions received from the Senate.

Mr. LEE and Mr. BARKLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from Oklahoma has been endeavoring to obtain the floor for sometime. I yield first to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. I wish to add my voice to the voices of those who have spoken favorably on the amendment. I cannot understand how we can give away millions of dollars, and then hesitate so long on a loan, most of which will be repaid. In the same measure we propose to vote about one and a half billion dollars for W. P. A. work. We can feed a man on W. P. A., and yet at the end of the year our money is gone and he is still hungry, and we have not put him a dollar nearer to self support. However, here is a program which is self-supporting, self-liquidating, self-starting, and self-operating, and we hesitate to make available sufficient credit to establish these people on the soil. Put people on the pavement and they starve to death. Put them on the soil and they live. We are bringing them nearer to self-support.

I rise simply to add my voice at this time, so that the Senator from Colorado will know at least some of the sentiment of the Senate on this question.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it seems the only point of difference in this matter is the extent to which the Senate will attempt to bind the Senator from Colorado as a conferee on the joint resolution.

It is my understanding that the Senator from Colorado agreed to accept this amendment. Of course, he cannot bind the conferees as to what will happen in conference; but it is my understanding that if this amendment is accepted and agreed to—and I will frankly say that I intend to support it, for I am in sympathy with it—the Senator from Colorado, without attempting to bind other conferees, says to the Senate and will say to the Senate that if he is a conferee, as no doubt he will be, he will use all reasonable and honorable means to see that the viewpoint of the Senate on this question is sustained.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think there can be no doubt about that.

Mr. BARKLEY. And it seems to me that is all we have a right to ask.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That question is out.

Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. REED. May I ask the Senator—

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am letting all my time go to Senators who may speak in their own right. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Is it in order for me to move that the amendment of the Senator from Alabama shall be increased to $40,000,000?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in order.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I make the motion.

Mr. BANKHEAD. So far as I am concerned, I accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has a right to modify his amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, as modified.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President—

Mr. REED and other Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. TAFT. I prefer to speak in my own time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, this matter was presented to the Bureau of the Budget. It is just as easy to make any of these propositions look attractive as it is to make this proposition look attractive. I do not know anything about the question of the relative merits; but the Budget Bureau weighed those merits, and that was its duty.

So far as I am concerned, I do not think we ought to increase any appropriation that the Bureau of the Budget has recommended. In my opinion, the Budget Bureau has gone away beyond anything it is justified in doing under the law, which requires it to present a Budget. In my opinion, the President has gone away beyond anything he is justified in doing under legislation in presenting here a Budget three and a half billion dollars in excess of any possible revenues we can secure during the coming year. I say if, with all their disregard of proper financial management, the Bureau of the Budget still holds this appropriation down to $123,000,000, or holds any other appropriation down, I intend to support at least the figure that the Bureau of the Budget has recommended.

I think that argument should apply to this amendment. These projects come one at a time. Just as attractive an argument can be made for every single appropriation as the Senator from Wyoming has made for this particular one. It can be done; but we have the same responsibility that the Bureau of the Budget has. We have the same responsibility to say we are going to hold the total down to a certain figure.

The President has recommended a reduction in relief. As I understand, this reduction is approximately the same percentage that is occurring in the general relief appropriation. It seems to me that if we are going to maintain any kind of a fiscal policy whatever we ought to vote to support the position of the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I merely wanted to say to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] that if he received from anything I said any impression that there was any lack of confidence on my part in the senior Senator from Colorado, I desire to correct that impression. There is no man on this floor for whom I have higher respect, and I think no one respects him more than I do. I only suggested taking the yeas and nays so that we could emphatically go upon record upon this matter, and so that the senior Senator from Colorado would go into conference armed with a definite expression of the sentiment upon this question.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. AUSTIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. REED. To the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the hour and the exigencies, does not the Senator think the Senator from Colorado or any other Senator appointed a conferee would attempt to carry out the mandate of the Senate just as sincerely on a viva voce vote as he would on a roll-call vote, if this amendment is put in the joint resolution?

Mr. REED. If I were in the place of the Senator from Colorado I should prefer to have a roll-call vote back of me when I went into conference on this particular item.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I desire to record myself in favor of this amendment. From personal observation, I am convinced that this is the finest type of relief in which the Federal Government is engaged; but I wish to say in passing that in my opinion there is a grave defect in the Bankhead-

Jones Act, to which this section of the pending joint resolution refers.

The joint resolution provides that the funds provided in this section shall be available for farm-debt adjustment service, and making and servicing loans under this section and prior laws. That provision really refers to the Bankhead-Jones Act. The yardstick for allotment of these funds to the different States contains one element which is fallacious. It is an element which recognizes the conditions that exist in only certain States of the United States and disregards a different condition which obtains in a few other States. That is the yardstick consisting of farm tenancy.

Our system in certain of the States is entirely different from that in other States. We find farmers on farms who have an equity in the land; the title came to them, and they have the title; but they are in distress, in just as great distress as the farm tenant in the South is. The condition to which I refer exists in New Hampshire, in Vermont, in Wisconsin, in Minnesota; it is scattered over the northern part of the United States; and those States have been deprived of any substantial benefits under the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenancy Act, because the allotment measured by the yardstick of farm tenancy is so small that they can participate only to a slight extent.

Mr. President, some time ago I introduced in the Senate a bill, known as Senate bill 2200, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] assured me of his sympathetic interest in that bill; but, somehow or other, the bill is still in the committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Permit me to say to the Senator that there has been no opportunity, since we discussed the subject, for the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to act on the bill. I had the bill, and intended to request the committee to make a favorable report on it; but we got tied up in a hearing, and adjourned today with only one member present. The others had to rush over here to answer to their names on a quorum call. I say that for the information of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator from Alabama for that information, and I commend him to the other members of that great committee of the Senate. I take this occasion to ask the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to rectify this mistake promptly, so that there may be a fair and equitable allotment of these funds. I know the good that is done with them, and I want to see relief given to the States where there are good people on farms who cannot pay the high rate of interest charged under the old contract, and cannot meet the amortization or payments on the principal at the present time because of the depression, who need and who are entitled to the benefit of writing down the capital and of writing down and adjusting the interest rate which can be afforded only through this type of relief, which the Federal Government has given by means of the Farm Security Administration. They are entitled to it as much as are the people of the South; and I think the great Committee on Agriculture and Forestry ought to get together and afford that relief before the present session of Congress adjourns.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the hour is late—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas has already spoken on the amendment.

Mr. REED. I was going to withdraw my request for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I merely wish to state that I shall support the amendment offered to increase the funds to be available to the Farm Security Administration.

As a practical matter, we know that the Farm Security Administration, like other Government agencies and departments, could use more money; but, unlike certain other agencies, it could use these funds to the very great advantage of the people and our whole economic and social order.

I know of no other agency created by the Congress to alleviate the suffering of needy persons that has done more than has the Farm Security Administration to relieve conditions wrought by depressed economic conditions, or that has done more to rehabilitate people. It has done fine work in Montana. I wish it were possible to broaden its powers in certain respects, and to increase its appropriation so that it might do more. I have in mind a stump-clearing project in northwestern Montana. If the Farm Security Administration had the funds, together with the proper authority—and I understand the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] has a bill on the Senate Calendar, Senate bill 1365, which would give the Farm Security Administration that authority—it would be possible to clear land in the great Flathead country in Montana, which would make self-sufficient many deserving families.

Before closing, I wish to pay tribute to those charged with the responsibility of administering the Farm Security Administration—Dr. Alexander, the Administrator; Mr. Baldwin, the Assistant Administrator; Mr. Wilson, regional director at Denver, and the many others with whom I have come in contact.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, a number of Senators have expressed their very great faith in the Farm Security Administration. I fully share that faith. I believe it is one of the finest of the governmental agencies dealing with this very difficult problem. The only place where I differ with these Senators is that after having expressed their great faith in the Farm Security Administration they promptly eat their words, and say that that agency did not know what it was doing when it gave its consent to a reduction to $123,000,000 of the appropriation for the work for the coming year. I go all the way with the Farm Security Administration.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I know the Senator from Nebraska is fair-minded.

Mr. BURKE. Is the Senator asking me to yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am.

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to say to the Senator that the Farm Security Administration necessarily acquiesced in the ruling of the Bureau of the Budget. It could not ask for any more than the Budget Bureau recommended.

Mr. BURKE. No statement has been made here, and, so far as I know, there is nothing in the record to indicate that the Farm Security Administration asked for more than $123,000,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. They asked for it as strongly as they could, consistently with the regulations. They said they had 400,000 worthy, needy applicants that they could not accommodate under the amount appropriated. How much stronger could they make it?

Mr. BURKE. So far as I know from attendance at the committee hearings and from examination of the record, the Farm Security Administration and the President were entirely satisfied with the request for $123,000,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. They were not.

Mr. BURKE. The only answer made here today is, "Why, last year we appropriated $50,000,000 more than that." Does that mean that because we appropriated—

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. In a moment, when I finish the sentence. Does that mean that because 1 year, in the depths of distress, we appropriated a certain sum, we must keep on every year from now until the end of time appropriating the same sum? Are we never to come to the time when we can make any reductions in these matters?

I now yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Senator began his sentence, in which I so rudely interrupted him, with the qualifying phrase, "So far as I know." How far does the Senator know? Is it not a fact that the Senator has not the faintest evidence as to what representations were made by the Farm Security Administration to the Bureau of the Budget, and not the faintest evidence of any reasons why the Bureau of the Budget reduced the appropriation?

Mr. BURKE. I know that the President of the United States submitted to Congress his request for $123,000,000 to carry on the work of the Farm Security Administration for the coming year; and I assume—and I think I am entitled to indulge in that assumption—that the President was acting after thorough consultation and advice with those who were carrying on this important work. If the President felt that under those circumstances $123,000,000 was adequate to carry on this work properly, that is all the information I need on this particular subject.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator bases his argument entirely upon an assumption that the unknown evidence which was submitted by the Budget Bureau, if any, and the unknown evidence upon which the President acted, if he did act, would bear out what he has to say. Contrary to that assumption, I have presented to the Senator facts and figures which cannot be denied, and which, in my opinion, altogether outweigh the mere assumption of the genial and eloquent Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. If I may reverse the roles here and ask the Senator from Wyoming a question, what does he mean by saying that I assumed that "the President acted, if he did act"? What does he mean by "if he did act"?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I said he acted upon evidence that was presented by the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. BURKE. Surely the President did not act without any evidence at all.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Well, it may be that the Senator himself does not always sign his mail after reading all of it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President—

Mr. BURKE. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am sure we all recognize this issue as too important to human interests to go off on a technical argument. The Senator from Nebraska is a fair-minded man. I recognize the splendid purity of his motives. He is inquiring whether there was any request for more money than the Bureau of the Budget or the President recommended.

Mr. BURKE. Any serious request.

Mr. BANKHEAD. He now charges the Farm Security Administration with not asking for a larger amount. Let me read from the hearings. The Senator knows the limitations upon Federal departments about incurring deficiencies and asking for amounts in excess of those recommended by the Bureau of the Budget. Let me read to the Senator what was said in the hearings, because I want to convince him. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] was questioning Dr. Alexander, and asked this question:

What do you think about the basis of need? Do you think that there will be as much need?

He was speaking about last year, when they had $135,000,000.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Senator RUSSELL, there are these 400,000 families we have appealing to us now. Somebody has to take care of them wherever they are or they are going to go to the cities—

Take care of them where they are on the farms, or they will go to the cities—or they are going to go wandering around over the county.

Does not the Senator recognize that that was as far as Dr. Alexander could go in calling upon Congress to increase that amount, reminding us that 400,000 families are wandering, when we can keep them on the farms by loans?

Mr. MINTON. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MINTON. Who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. BURKE. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Indiana if he has a contribution to make to the debate.

Mr. MINTON. If the Senator will yield, does he not think we ought to enforce the rule we have of a limitation on time? Otherwise we will go on all night.

Mr. BURKE. I presume that the Presiding Officer will indicate when my time has expired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When the time of the Senator from Nebraska on the amendment has expired he will be notified.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, all I desire to do at this time is to express my very great approval of the Farm Security Administration and to reiterate my feeling that, if Mr. Alexander and the others felt that there was going to be great hardship if this reduction from $175,000,000 to $123,000,000 were made, those very able men would have presented that matter to the President of the United States and to the Bureau of the Budget, and when the request was made of Congress it would have been for an amount adequate to take care of the needs. I am not willing by my voice or vote here to express a lack of confidence in the President or in the Bureau of the Budget or in the Farm Security Administration, and therefore I shall stand by their recommendation.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. If I still have time left, I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. May I inquire whether those of us here may take new hope and new heart from the assertion by the Senator from Nebraska that he has confidence in the President of the United States that he is going to give full faith and credit to any recommendation the President may make?

Mr. BURKE. There are clouds which have silver linings, I will say to the Senator. [Laughter.]

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, there has been some discussion as to the source of the figures given here. In the House hearings, when Mr. Wallace, the Secretary of Agriculture, appeared, with Mr. Baldwin, Assistant Administrator, it was definitely shown that there were unexpended balances as of June 30 of $15,457,000, which previously it had been expected would be used, which will be available. So if the amendment should not be agreed to, there would be a total of over $139,000,000 allocated in this instance. Mr. Baldwin also stated that the request before the committee at the time was from the President.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the majority leader, I thought I understood the Senator from Kentucky a few moments ago to arrange for the amendment as originally submitted to be taken to conference in the general form in which any action of the Senate goes to conference.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, this whole debate seems to have followed a colloquy nearly an hour ago with reference to the extent to which the Senator from Colorado considered himself bound by the adoption of the amendment, which he agreed to accept. I undertook to clarify the situation, and if I did not succeed, I should like to make a further effort.

I understood that the Senator from Colorado would consider himself, without attempting to bind other conferees, under the same obligation to use all reasonable and honorable means to see that the Senate viewpoint on this amendment was sustained as much as in the case of any other amendment the Senate puts in the joint resolution. It seemed to me that with that understanding—

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas cannot take the Senator from New Mexico from the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Texas desires to raise a point of privilege, of course, I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I rise to a point of privilege with respect to the remarks of the Senator from Kentucky. I am heartily in favor of the amendment, but I do not think it is in order to put the Senator from Colorado on the hot skillet here, and make him promise in advance what he will individually do as a conferee. If we start that sort of practice on the floor of the Senate, it is in derogation of adjustments between the two Houses.

Every Senate conferee is in honor bound to go to a conference and represent the views of the Senate, but not to represent the views of the Senate merely on one point. There will be 50 points on which the Senator from Colorado will be supposed to represent the views of the Senate. If we single out one or two of them and say "Now, honor bright, you are going to stick to this one," an agreement would never be reached. So I think it is out of order for any such proposition to be put up to the Senator from Colorado. He is a Senator, he is an honorable Senator, and when he is appointed by the Chair as a conferee he is supposed to go to the conference to represent the views of the Senate in its entirety, not merely on some little, inconsequential amendment. I, therefore, think it is out of order to extort from the Senator from Colorado any promise regarding this amendment.

I am for the amendment; I believe it should be adopted. I think the Farm Security Administration is doing a great work, but I do not see anything that is so sacred about this particular amendment that we should go to the extent of demanding of the conferees in advance that "before you ever go to conference, you are told you can sacrifice anything else, but you cannot sacrifice this amendment."

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I would not agree to put the Senator from Colorado on the spot, so to speak.

Mr. CONNALLY. I referred to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am not attempting to bind the Senator from Colorado. Nearly an hour ago the Senator from Colorado agreed to accept this amendment, and if his word had been accepted by the Senate, this matter would have been disposed of nearly an hour ago, but because the Senator from Colorado could not, and was unwilling, in all frankness, to bind the other conferees, to say that he would stand there indefinitely and would not yield on this amendment this debate has ensued.

It seemed to me, in all fairness to the Senator from Colorado and to the Senate, that his position ought to be made clear, that he does not take any different position on this amendment from that he takes on any other amendment put on the joint resolution by the Senate; that is, as a Senate conferee he would attempt to see that the Senate viewpoint was sustained so far as he could reasonably do so, but he could not guarantee that he could bring the joint resolution back to the Senate with the amendment agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I merely rose to state what the Senator from Texas has so well said, that this situation should never have arisen in the Senate as it has arisen. The Senator from Colorado did say everything a Senator could say under the circumstances; and although I am favorably inclined to the amendment, the way the matter has arisen I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word in reply to the Senator from New Mexico. What the Senator from Texas was objecting to was what he understood to be the suggestion by the Senator from Kentucky that we could adopt this amendment without a roll call provided the Senator from Colorado would make some sort of a declaration as to what he would do as a conferee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator misunderstood me. My remarks were based on the unwillingness of the proponents of the amendment to accept the statement of the Senator from Colorado nearly an hour ago that he would see that this amendment was given every possible fair consideration in conference. That is all I think we ought to demand of the Senator from Colorado; and, based upon that, I thought we might save time, and we might have saved time by eliminating all this debate, and even a roll call, but apparently that is impossible, so we will vote on it.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. CONNALLY. Just a moment. I have not spoken on the pending joint resolution, and I have not disturbed the Senate in some time. [Laughter.] The Senator from Texas assumes that every Senator here is as good a gentleman as the Senator from Colorado is a conferee, and he accepts the Senator from Colorado as a 100-percent conferee. It seems to me that when a Senator is discussing the privilege of the Senate, Senators ought to listen. They would do well to listen.

The reason for raising this question is that I think it is a matter which goes to the fundamental privilege of the Senate, and I do not think we ought to violate or abuse our fundamental privileges. I beg the pardon of the Senator from Kentucky. I probably misunderstood him. What I am objecting to, however, is the demand that Senators make promises on the floor as to what they will do in conference about some particular amendment. When a Senator goes into a conference he is supposed to represent the views of the Senate on the entire bill. If he could get all the amendments agreed to, that would be well, and if he must sacrifice some of them, he must do the best he can.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know whom the Senator has in mind, but I want to state that I did not take any part in any effort to demand any promise of the Senator from Colorado. I would trust him as freely as I would trust myself.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am sure the Senator would.

Mr. BANKHEAD. However, in view of the way this whole matter developed, the way the Senator from Colorado expressed the idea that he would take the amendment to conference, I believe it would strengthen his hand in conference with the House if the Senate would now back up the amendment by a vote.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not care to delay the Senate longer. I merely wanted to make clear the reason why I interjected these remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I come from one of the drought-stricken States. We have had droughts in the western part of North Dakota for 10 years, and a dozen other States have had the worst droughts in the history of the Nation in recent years. The drought area extends from the Canadian border clear to the Mexican border. The farmers there have carried on, and held on to their lands as best they could year after year, hoping for better crops. They are entitled to have assistance, and they must have assistance if they are to stay on the land.

The reason why there is a little balance left in the farm-security fund, as there is at the present time, is because on the 1st of April they cut off the grants they had been paying in the drought areas. Farmer after farmer has made appeals for a little money to keep his family from starving to death. They did not have anything on which to live, in many cases no crops last year, and nothing to live on. Their allotments or benefit payments were cut off, and the grants were cut off on the 1st of April, and many of them had to be reinstated in order that they might be kept going. Many of them have been going hungry during the past month, not only in North Dakota, but in every one of the drought-stricken States.

In addition to that, last year there were low prices, and there was little or no money for the farmers, and they had to have relief. This year prices are still low. Wheat is selling in North Dakota for as low as 55 cents a bushel, corn is low, and as we know, cotton is low in the South, and the farmers in all the Nation will have to be helped again.

The only criticism I have of the amendment is that it does not provide sufficient to take care of the needs. It is not the fault of the Farm Security Administration that there is not a larger sum carried in the bill as it passed the House.

It is because they have been told to keep down expenses, and must keep them down, and they did their part along with others. But if there is any department of the Government which needs assistance in the pending measure it is the Farm Security Administration, because they take care of the farmers who have been in hard circumstances, who have lost their crops through no fault of their own, and must have help until they can get a crop.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRIDGES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. Not knowing how he would vote on this amendment, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as before with reference to my pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], and withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I announce that my colleague [Mr. SCHWARTZ] is detained from the Senate by reason of illness. He has a special pair on this vote with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY]. If he were present and at liberty to vote my colleague would vote "yea," and I understand the Senator from North Carolina would vote "nay."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ] are detained from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is absent because of illness in his family.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are necessarily detained.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] are absent on important public business.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] is paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN].

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]; and

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]; the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] would vote "yea," and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] would vote "nay."

Mr. HALE (after having voted in the negative). I am advised that my general pair, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] would vote as I have voted. I therefore let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 20, as follows:

So Mr. BANKHEAD's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 19, line 11, it is proposed to strike out all of section 15 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

The rates of pay for persons engaged upon projects under the appropriations made in this joint resolution shall not be less than the prevailing rates of pay for work of a similar nature in the same locality as determined by the Commissioner of Works Projects: Provided, That not less than the minimum rate of pay established by the Fair Labor Standards Act (Public Law No. 718, 75th Cong.) for private industry shall be paid to any person engaged upon projects under this joint resolution: Provided further, That in fixing the monthly earning schedule of persons employed upon work-projects projects, the Commissioner of Work Projects shall consider differentials in such earnings according to the various classes of work only and shall not give consideration to differentials between cities, counties, or other areas upon the basis of degree of urbanization, or any other factor that will tend to discriminate against the less urbanized areas.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, we commenced discussing this question in 1933. We have been carrying on the work ever since. It is proposed to maintain in America the wage standard for American living as established by American labor. If the Senate of the United States does not want those who are especially interested in wage standards to advise, then I would say that the Senate should disregard the views of the President of the United States, because following nearly 7 weeks of debate in 1933, at the conclusion of which we were defeated in the prevailing wage amendment, the President of the United States caused an investigation to be made out of which three great zones in America were established looking to the carrying out of the prevailing wage in each of those zones.

The amendment offered takes into consideration first of all the President's executive proclamations following the battle that he conducted in 1933 for the continuation of the prevailing wage.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Is the second paragraph or section of the Senator's amendment, relating to the eliminating any differential, a new principle?

Mr. McCARRAN. It is not a new principle, if the Senator has in mind a principle that has been worked out and is now in the law.

Mr. WALSH. I understand clearly what the Senator said in reference to the first paragraph and the application of the prevailing rate of wage during the years that have passed; but I have wondered whether the second paragraph was likewise in the law.

Mr. McCARRAN. The second paragraph or the second proviso?

Mr. WALSH. The latter is a better expression.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is not in the law, but is in the Executive order.

Mr. WALSH. So that the Senator contends that both the first proviso and the second proviso are now, by reason of the Executive order, the law and the manner in which the wages are adjusted and determined under W. P. A. appropriations.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator is entirely correct. In the President's Executive order is involved the security wage. So the security wage has been established, after a study resulting in an Executive order by the President. And then involved in this matter is something more, namely, the wage and hour provision. In other words, we established a floor below which wages could not go, namely, 25 cents per hour.

Mr. WALSH. Does that floor increase with the years, as the wage-and-hour law provides?

Mr. McCARRAN. It does not increase.

Mr. WALSH. It remains for the present year at the minimum wage fixed in the wage and hour law, namely, 25 cents?

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct. But may I bring to the mind of the Senator the three zones established by the Executive order in which the particular minimum-wage scales prevail? There are four wage scales.

Mr. WALSH. Is the minimum wage the same in all those regions?

Mr. McCARRAN. They are not the same. They cannot be the same, because the wage and hour measure does not contemplate that they would be the same.

Mr. WALSH. The wage and hour measure makes the minimum wage uniform throughout the whole country?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes, sir; uniform over the entire country. That is true. But remember that the Executive order provided for three zones, and those zones with their particular classification of hours and the particular classification as to monthly earnings, must be contemplated.

I may say, Mr. President, that while we started the battle for this amendment in 1933 with the idea of establishing a wage in conformity with what the labor class of the country had evolved by experience, we have now worked into the amendment not only that experience but also the law as it has been evolved by the Congress.

I submit it to the Senate with the hope that it may be adopted as a substitute in place of the present section 15.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. As the Senator knows, I am strongly in favor of the prevailing-wage principle. I should like to ask the Senator whether the words in the amendment "or other areas" mean that there shall be no difference in pay or in rates of pay between the various sections of the country?

Mr. McCARRAN. In that regard, if the Senator will bear in mind in connection with my answer the three zones, each of which carries its particular rate of pay—

Mr. LODGE. That is what the W. P. A. calls a wage region.

Mr. McCARRAN. A wage region. With that in mind, if I catch the Senator's question, I think my answer is that within the zone there is no differential.

Mr. LODGE. This would not act as a prohibition to a differential between different zones, would it? There would be a differential between the different zones, but there would not be a differential within the zones; is that correct?

Mr. McCARRAN. There would be no differential within the zone.

Mr. LODGE. But there would be one between the zones.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct. In other words, let us assume we are in the first zone, and let us assume, if I may go home, that the principal city in my State, with a population of 30,000, has established a wage scale which is recognized by the various methods by which recognition is accomplished. Now, let us assume that a project is outside that particular city. Then the wage scale of that city shall prevail in that project which is outside. But let us assume that over in Idaho, an adjoining State in the same zone, a different wage scale is attempted to be established. Then the amendment carries the idea that the same wage scale shall prevail within the zone in the same district.

Mr. LODGE. But it does not require that the same wage shall be paid in Nevada as is paid in Massachusetts, let us say?

Mr. McCARRAN. I am not certain whether or not Massachusetts is in the same zone.

Mr. LODGE. Assume that they are in different zones.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am assuming that. I would say no. I rather think, if I hold in my mind the zones as they have been portrayed, that New England is in the same zone as Nevada.

Mr. LODGE. Then that is a poor illustration. The point I am trying to get at is that there is no attempt in this amendment to iron out all the rates on a uniform basis.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator is correct in that regard.

Mr. President, I submit the amendment and ask for a record vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are demanded.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the first prevailing wage scale was approved by the President of the United States on March 3, 1931. During the years I have been in the Senate I have consistently upheld the principle of the prevailing wage. In 1931 I was actively identified with the movement which finally resulted in the enactment of the Davis-Bacon bill. I have followed this principle through in its application to industrial firms doing business with the Government under the terms of the Walsh-Healey Act. I favored and voted for the essential principles of the Fair Labor Standards Act. The American Federation of Labor over a long period of time has held a consistent position in these matters.

Mr. President, I ask that a copy of the Davis-Bacon Act, approved March 3, 1931, be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The act is as follows:

[S. 5904]

An act relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed on public buildings of the United States and the District of Columbia by contractors and subcontractors, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That every contract in excess of $5,000 in amount, to which the United States or the District of Columbia is a party, which requires or involves the employment of laborers or mechanics in the construction, alteration, and/or repair of any public buildings of the United States or the District of Columbia within the geographical limits of the States of the Union or the District of Columbia, shall contain a provision to the effect that the rate of wage for all laborers and mechanics employed by the contractor or any subcontractor on the public buildings covered by the contract shall be not less than the prevailing rate of wages for work of a similar nature in the city, town, village, or other civil division of the State in which the public buildings are located, or in the District of Columbia if the public buildings are located there, and a further provision that in case any dispute arises as to what are the prevailing rates of wages for work of a similar nature applicable to the contract which cannot be adjusted by the contracting officer, the matter shall be referred to the Secretary of Labor for determination and his decision thereon shall be conclusive on all parties to the contract: Provided, That in case of national emergency the President is authorized to suspend the provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect 30 days after its passage but shall not affect any contract then existing or any contract that may thereafter be entered into pursuant to invitations for bids that are outstanding at the time of the passage of this act.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I am for the pending amendment and hope it will be enacted into law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN].

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In order to perfect the amendment and to make clear the point which was raised by the question of the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], I move that the amendment be amended by inserting after the word "city" the word "or" and by striking out after the word "county" the words "or other areas." That modification makes clear the interpretation which the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Massachusetts have agreed upon.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator so modifies his amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, may we have the amendment as now modified reported?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], as modified, will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The amendment, as modified, proposes to strike out, on page 19, line 11, all of section 15 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

The rates of pay for persons engaged upon projects under the appropriations made in this joint resolution shall not be less than the prevailing rates of pay for work of a similar nature in the same locality as determined by the Commissioner of Work Projects: Provided, That not less than the minimum rate of pay established by the Fair Labor Standards Act (Public Law No. 718, 75th Cong.) for private industry shall be paid to any person engaged upon projects under this joint resolution: Provided further, That in fixing the monthly earning schedule of persons employed upon work-projects projects the Commissioner of Work Projects shall consider differentials in such earnings according to the various classes of work only and shall not give consideration to differentials between cities or counties upon the basis of degree of urbanization or any other factor that will tend to discriminate against the less urbanized areas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] as modified. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were not ordered.

On a division the amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, on page 16, line 13, I move to strike out the figures "$50,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$75,000,000." That is to restore the Budget estimate, so that the Commissioner would be authorized to allocate not to exceed $75,000,000 to other Federal agencies for Federal projects.

The change in the language is a mere limitation. The amount of money appropriated in the bill is in no manner affected. Senators who do not understand this proposal think that if money is transferred or allocated over to a Federal department, in some way or other we lose money by the operation. What it means is this: We appropriate $1,477,000,000 to hire to perform work people who are on relief. We are going to pay them by the year. They are going to be on relief, and the question is, For whom shall they work?

If they are on a project sponsored by a municipality, a county, or a State, the Federal Government pays them to work for the county, the State, or the municipality; but if it is on Federal property, we have a limit to the effect that only $50,000,000 may be expended. It is as though I hired a man by the year to work on my farm. I contract with him. I know I have to pay him by the year. However, when it comes time for him to do some work, I say to him that he may not work on my farm. My neighbor may need some work done, and he may go over and work for him, and I will pay him, but he cannot work for me.

The testimony before the committee is that the entire $50,000,000 allowed by the House for this purpose could be expended by the War Department alone. I shall not take the time to read from the hearings, but in the hearings will be found the statement that last year the War Department had $26,000,000 of this kind of labor furnished to it for work upon airports and upon Army posts all over the United States. The War Department could use $50,000,000. The representative of the Navy Department testified that the Navy Department could use $12,000,000. The Department of Agriculture could use $40,000,000 or $50,000,000, if it could obtain the money. In my judgment, the appropriation should be $100,000,000. The Budget estimate is $75,000,000. I ask that the Budget estimate be restored.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, this matter has been before the Senate on other relief bills. The question is, What is the appropriate amount? In the bill of a year ago the amount fixed was $60,000,000 on an appropriation relatively the same. It seems to me the Senator from Arizona is being unduly liberal with Federal projects. I move to amend the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona so as to make the amount $60,000,000 instead of $75,000,000.

Mr. HAYDEN. Let me suggest to the Senator that a good place to make that reduction is in conference. The House has allowed $50,000,000. The Budget estimate is $75,000,000. If we set the figure at $75,000,000 we shall probably receive $60,000,000.

Mr. ADAMS. This is a good place to make the reduction.

Mr. HAYDEN. I hope the Senator's amendment to my amendment will be defeated, and that we will be allowed to take the Budget estimate to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN]. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, on page 18, line 6, I move to strike out the figures "$40,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$100,000."

If I may have the attention of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], as well as other Senators, the amount on this page was not changed by the Senate committee. The limitation of $50,000 is put upon Federal buildings. I presume that means post offices. So far as Federal post offices are concerned, I think it may be advisable to limit the amount expended on any one building to $50,000, so that any general post office building program can be carried in a bill for that purpose.

A limit of $40,000 of Federal contribution toward any sort of building would very seriously disrupt the building program of the W. P. A. in all the States and make it almost impossible for any building such as a high school to be constructed in a large city. A Federal contribution of $40,000 may be enough for the small towns; but in the larger cities, and even in the larger towns, on the question of building high schools and other public buildings of a permanent and valuable nature, the $40,000 limitation seems to me to be entirely too small. For that reason I have offered the amendment to increase the amount to $100,000. I hope the committee may accept the amendment.

Mr. PEPPER and Mr. ADAMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield, and if so to whom?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. I wish to say only a word to supplement my personal knowledge of the statement just made by the Senator from Kentucky. At every one of the State institutions in my State we have tried to erect some permanent buildings in cooperation with the W. P. A., the State putting up half the money. As a result, we have some permanent structures that are of permanent value and a real credit to the W. P. A. program.

Great criticism has been directed at the W. P. A. because we started it off as a leaf-raking enterprise, and we have never yet lived it down. So, the more durable and permanent we make W. P. A. projects, I think the more respect and confidence they will have in the public mind.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the figure in the joint resolution, which is the House figure, is entirely too small. I really think it is ridiculously small. Probably it ought to be above the $100,000 which I have fixed in the amendment; but, in view of the situation, I do not feel justified in offering an amendment to go beyond $100,000. I do think, however, it ought to be at least that amount.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, several of the mayors of the larger cities, including the mayor of New York, came before the committee urging an increase in this amount, taking the position that with this limit they could not proceed with the character of construction that is required in a thickly populated, high-priced part of the country. On the other hand, we were presented by the artisans and the workmen with objections even to the $40,000 limit, upon the ground that it was too much. They claimed that we should not undertake large construction with W. P. A. labor; that that construction should be left to the artisans and to the workmen. There was no change in that figure by the committee as a result of a choice between the two arguments.

I am simply presenting the matter so that the Senate may have the problem as it was before the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes appear to have it.

Mr. PEPPER. I call for a division.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which is on the clerk's desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 8, line 14, it is proposed to strike out "$100,000,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$123,000,000."

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, this amendment comes up at a fortunate time. I had become a little impatient, fearing that I should never have an opportunity of offering the amendment; but while I listened to the arguments why the appropriation of $123,000,000 on the opposite page, page 91, for farm loans, should or should not be made, I felt like moving that that sum be transferred to page 8, where $100,000,000 is appropriated for the N. Y. A. I was particularly impressed by the argument, both on this side of the Chamber and on the other side of the Chamber, that the recommendations of the President and the Budget Director should be followed. It happens that the same sum of $123,000,000 was the sum in question; and I trust that the arguments of Senators on the other side of the Chamber and on this side that the recommendation of the President should be followed, and $123,000,000 should be appropriated, will cause them to vote in favor of this amendment.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Did not the Senator understand me to state that I thought the Budget itself was grossly excessive, and therefore, while I thought nothing should be done over the Budget, I thought reductions should be made wherever they could be made?

Mr. GREEN. Yes; I certainly understood that statement; but it seems to me the argument which the Senator from Ohio made at that time is applicable at this time, because this is a project which calls for an increase even more than the other one did; for in the other case the loans are made once for all, while in this case the appropriations for the youth have to be made each year.

The President requested $123,000,000 to help young people between 16 and 24 years of age, some of them to get their education either in school or in college; some of them to be sent to work, and incidentally to learn how to work. It is conservatively estimated that there are about 2,000,000 young people who want the type of work which the N. Y. A. provides in addition to those who want to be aided in their education.

With an appropriation of $123,000,000, the N. Y. A. can somewhere near adequately meet that demand, although it will not meet it completely. This will provide the benefits of education and the benefits of work, too.

I have heard in talking with Senators only one objection to this movement, and that is that the students should not have their education paid for by the Government; that they themselves should pay for it. For that reason I want to read just a few figures showing what the Government actually does pay for the students in helping them to get an education.

I will take the figures from my own State, Rhode Island, because that is the one with which I am familiar.

In Rhode Island, about one-half of the youth who are helped by this appropriation are helped in educational ways by having their tuition in school or college partly paid for, and just about one-half receive the other sort of aid, in work. The amounts that they are paid are as follows:

In the school-aid program in secondary schools they are receiving only $5.63 a month.

In the colleges and universities the college-aid students are earning an average monthly wage of $11.92.

The graduate students in the colleges, who are receiving the highest amount, receive $21.13 a month.

Those on the work program receive an average monthly wage of $19.74 a month.

No one can claim that those students are being pauperized by this amount of Government aid; but it is a fact that those students would not be able to receive the education they are now receiving if they did not receive that additional help from the Federal Government.

Therefore I trust this amount may be increased from the $100,000,000 recommended in the committee report to the $123,000,000 recommended by the President and the Budget Director.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not true that the report made by the unemployment census headed by Mr. Biggers some 2 years ago showed that one-third of the unemployed in the country were between the ages eligible for this program?

Mr. GREEN. That is true.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Under the joint resolution as it comes from the House, the amount allocated for this program is a little less than one one-hundred-and-seventeenth of the total amount allocated for the whole program; so that even with an increase of $23,000,000 it still is not more than one one-hundred-and-fifteenth of the total amount of the program, while one-third of the eligibles for unemployment relief are within the class between the ages of 18 and 24.

Mr. GREEN. That is very true; and to some of us, among whom I include myself, the appeal of youth is the most stirring appeal of all those who need our help, because the future of the country depends on these young men and young women being developed into good citizens. The chance of their being good or bad depends a great deal on the start they get; and, in my opinion, the Government should exert itself to give them a good and a fair start.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield.

Mr. LEE. I understand that this amendment is to increase the amount for the N. Y. A. from the figure of $100,000,000 now provided in the joint resolution to $123,000,000, the amount recommended by the President. Is that correct?

Mr. GREEN. That is correct.

Mr. LEE. I am for it.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GREEN. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. MALONEY. I had intended to ask for the floor in my own right, but the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] has pointed out that one-third of the unemployed are between the ages of 16 and 25. I had the figures and wanted to discuss them; but in view of the fact that the point has been made, I desire to associate myself with the opinion expressed by the Senator from Rhode Island, and add to it, if I may, that the numbers in this particular group not only represent one-third of the unemployed at this time, but, due to the fact that so many young men and young women with no opportunity for employment are leaving the high schools and colleges every day, that number is bound proportionately to increase, in my opinion, rather than decrease.

I am very hopeful the Senate will accept this amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Like the Senator from Connecticut, I wanted to take the floor in my own right to discuss the National Youth Administration, particularly as to its work in my own

State. There are several matters I wanted to discuss, because they have done a most worth-while job in New Mexico; but if the Senator does not object, I should like to present the figures I have here relating to the work in New Mexico. I shall not take the time now to read them, but I ask permission to insert these figures in the Record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

NATIONAL YOUTH ADMINISTRATION—FACTS ON THE N. Y. A. PROGRAM IN NEW MEXICO

The fund allotment for the present fiscal year to the State of New Mexico was $580,188. Currently a total of 3,271 persons are employed on the works program and the student-aid program, as follows:

Total employment.....	3,271
Works program.....	2,067
All student-aid programs.....	1,204
School aid.....	862
College and graduate aid.....	342
Total number of participating institutions.....	148
Schools.....	141
Colleges and universities.....	7

In New Mexico the earnings of the students receiving N. Y. A. assistance are sufficient to represent the difference between their remaining in school or leaving school because of lack of funds. The students participating in the school-aid program in the secondary schools are receiving an average of $4.89 a month; in the colleges and universities the college-aid students are earning an average monthly wage of $10.93; and the graduate-aid students are averaging $15.71 a month.

On the works program N. Y. A. project workers are receiving an average monthly wage of $17.24 for 47.5 hours of work per month.

The youth on the N. Y. A. projects are learning to do a great many types of work and are becoming familiarized with working conditions in potential fields of private employment. There is an effort made to relate this work experience to training along the lines of the youth's interests and aptitudes.

In New Mexico N. Y. A. project youth are working in the following major work classifications:

Number of persons employed
Highways, roads, and streets.....	50
Construction of new buildings.....	126
Remodeling and repairing of public buildings.....	34
Improvement of grounds.....	116
Recreational equipment and facilities (excluding buildings).....	107
Conservation.....	8
Sewing.....	88
Workshops.....	528
Nursery schools.....	37
Resident-training projects.....	247
Recreational-assistance projects.....	214
Clerical projects.....	341
Library service and book repair.....	88
Museum work.....	13
School-lunch projects.....	19
Youth-center activities.....	28
Miscellaneous projects.....	23
Grand total.....	2,067

In New Mexico, there are 1,131 needy, out-of-school, unemployed youth who are certified by the local welfare agency as eligible for N. Y. A. projects and who are awaiting assignment to project work. It is estimated that there are 9,600 young people between the ages of 18 and 24 who are out of school and unemployed needing and wanting the work experience and training provided by the National Youth Administration.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I think every member of the committee agrees that the work which has been done by the National Youth Administration has been an excellent work. That work has been done with an appropriation of $75,000,000. I gather that the Budget estimate has proved of significance at one time and not at another. Some of the Senators are willing to go above the Budget estimate, but not below it.

What the House did—and the House action was followed by the Senate committee—was to divide the difference between the appropriation for last year of $75,000,000 and the Budget estimate for this year of $125,000,000. It seemed to the committee that an increase of $25,000,000 from an appropriation of $75,000,000 was a liberal and entirely adequate one. In addition to that we have reappropriated the unexpended balances, amounting to some $2,000,000 more; so there is practically an increase of $27,000,000 over the former appropriation of $75,000,000.

That, in substance, is the attitude of the committee.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. PEPPER. I desire to call the attention of the Senator to a report which I have here from the N. Y. A., that in Florida there are 5,446 needy, out of school, unemployed youths who have been certified by the local welfare agency as eligible for N. Y. A. projects, and who are awaiting assignment to project work, which is dependent upon there being additional funds available.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, one thing I think perhaps ought to be added. Of the $75,000,000 expended in the past year, there was expended for school help $22,000,000. That is the amount and the proportion that was expended for aiding young men in school. Fifty-three million dollars, or the balance, was expended for projects. We asked the type of projects, and they were all types of projects—ditch digging and every other type. The work is similar to that of the W. P. A. in its character, except with the age limits running from 18 to 25.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point for a question?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. McCARRAN. Is it not true that involved in the percentage which the Senator has just mentioned were those who were engaged in vocational training?

Mr. ADAMS. I think not. I think that was all included in the educational part. I am making no complaint; I am merely stating to the Senate the facts presented to the committee.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. GREEN. I can give the Senator the figures. When the appropriation of $123,000,000—

Mr. ADAMS. I am interested only in the figures as to what the administration spent out of the $75,000,000.

Mr. GREEN. The proportion is almost the same.

Mr. ADAMS. They testified before the House committee that if they got $123,000,000 they would add $5,000,000 to the amount for education. When they came before us, they said that in view of the fact that some of the House Members were a little dissatisfied with that they proposed that they would take more of it for education.

Mr. GREEN. They provide part-time employment and educational opportunities for the 460,000 needy young people to enable them to continue in schools and colleges and universities, and adequate work experience and training on public projects for 350,000 young people who are out of school and unemployed. That is the relative proportion, 460,000 in the field of education, and 350,000 engaged in what is called out-of-school work.

Mr. ADAMS. Those out of school and at work receive more per month than those in school.

Mr. GREEN. That is correct.

Mr. ADAMS. But the actual proportion in dollars was $22,000,000 for education and $53,000,000 for out-of-school work.

Mr. GREEN. My figures show the number of those helped.

Mr. ADAMS. Yes. There is no question about that feature. The only question is whether or not Congress wishes to draw any line as to expenses. If we should go to the point of saying that just because a certain work is desirable we ought to go the limit, and merely say to the Department "What do you want?" the money of this Government would not last 3 years.

Mr. GREEN. It is not what the Department wants, it is what the youth of this country want. Even the amount proposed will not take care of those already certified. It provides for perhaps 200,000 during the present year getting jobs, but the number who need the help are far greater than the number who will get the jobs. The number will increase year by year unless the trend changes, and we will have to appropriate more year by year if we are to look after these young people. It does the same sort of work the C. C. C. does in a different way. It prevents the young men going to the bad on the streets. The C. C. C. has captured the public imagination. I believe the N. Y. A. does equally good work, but it has not yet captured the public imagination; so we hesitate about giving them the increase they need.

Mr. ADAMS. So far as we know, there has been no question as to the desirability of the work. Those in touch with it have been enthused by it. There is merely the one question, as to how much the Government this year should appropriate for that work, how large an increase there should be. Last year the President recommended $75,000,000, and that was appropriated. This year the recommendation went to $123,000,000, and the House of Representatives felt that $100,000,000 would represent a fair increase.

I am not speaking in opposition, other than to say that the Committee on Appropriations felt that the compromise reached by the House was a fair, a reasonable, and an adequate appropriation under existing conditions.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question about the difference in the appropriation.

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Can the Senator inform me as to whether the separation of the departments resulted in the National Youth Administration losing funds which it formerly received from the Works Progress Administration?

Mr. ADAMS. I think perhaps they are losing, not funds but perhaps some assistance; that is, formerly the Youth Administration was a part of the W. P. A., and to a certain extent they receive perhaps the benefit of the statistical services and other services of the W. P. A., but there is no loss in the funds. There may have been a countervailing service rendered to the W. P. A. by the Youth Administration.

Mr. HATCH. Somehow I had the impression that the separation would cause additional outlay by the Youth Administration which was not occasioned before because the money was provided by the W. P. A. appropriation.

Mr. ADAMS. There are two things. One is in reference to what the Senator from Rhode Island says. I am still one of those who have hope that conditions are going to be better and that there is going to be less need rather than more need. I have always had faith that the reorganization plan was going to be effective, and that when we changed the departments it would be in the interest of economy and efficiency.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the figures show that there are in the country about 2,000,000 young men and young women, boys and girls, who are eligible for National Youth Administration training, but who cannot get the training because there have not been sufficient funds to give them the training. I desire to emphasize that this whole program of the National Youth Administration is an educational program. It is divided into two divisions, as we know. One is what is called the student aid division, and that is where the National Youth Administration provides money for boys and girls going to high schools, colleges, and universities. The National Youth Administration requires these boys and girls to do a certain amount of work and then pays them the money to enable them to go to the schools and the colleges.

The record shows that these boys and girls who are being helped by the National Youth Administration have made far above the average in their grades in their scholastic standings at the schools and colleges.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I wonder if the attention of the Senator has been called to the fact that Mr. Aubrey Williams testified that there are now 997 field positions, but for the 1940 program he contemplates an increase of 1,378 field positions, making a total hereafter of 2,375.

Mr. HILL. For this program to be carried out properly and to be effective requires a great deal of supervision and leadership on the part of the program providing work, under which young men are working on all kinds of different projects, such as learning machine-shop work, metalwork, foundry work, typewriting and stenography, accounting, book-keeping, filing, construction work, mechanics, nursery technique, engineering, chemistry, home economics. The boys and girls on these different projects not only have the practical work on the project but they are gathered together, so to speak, in classes and given the theoretical side as well as the practical side. It requires a great deal of leadership and supervision to carry out this program.

Mr. DANAHER. To the extent of an increase of 150 percent, obviously. I ask the Senator if he realizes that Mr. Williams also testified, as bearing on the Senator's reference to the youth in the colleges, and the like, that the increase in the cheapest part of the program for such assistance is only $5,000,000. It was so testified. Does the Senator realize that?

Mr. HILL. The cheapest part, of course, is the chief part. We know some of these boys and girls in colleges and high schools are receiving only five, six, seven, or eight dollars a month. That is a very cheap part of the program, but it is a great educational program, and it is now taking fine, splendid young boys and girls out of idleness and giving them an opportunity not only to work, but to go to school and train and prepare themselves for their life's work. The figures show that the turn-over in this work program is over 10 percent a month, over a hundred percent a year.

We know that the average boy and girl who comes to one of our offices and asks for a position does not know anything about the work, has no particular training, is not qualified for any particular kind of employment. This sort of program, whether it is teaching the boy chemistry, or to be an automobile mechanic, prepares the boy for his life work, it trains him so that he may go out and get a job in private employment. The figures show that is just exactly what is happening. There is a large turn-over, of more than 10 percent a month, of these boys being trained by the Government, preparing themselves so that they may carry on and thereby go out and get employment.

Mr. President, it is the cheapest form of help or assistance the Government is engaged in furnishing today. It costs just one-tenth of what the C. C. C. work costs. We all know how fine the C. C. C. work is, but this work is also fine, and costs just exactly 10 percent of what the C. C. C. work costs. There are some 2,000,000 fine, splendid boys and girls in the United States today who are idle, who are seeking something to do. They are the seed corn of this Nation. We should not permit them to rot; we should give them this opportunity to prepare themselves for work, to prepare themselves to carry on their part in this Nation.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, when the honorable and able committee which is responsible for a $23,000,000 deficiency in the item now before the Senate acted in this matter, it was manifestly under the influence of the philosophy of the elderly woman who decided that she would for the first time in her life ride on a train. She went to the station and said to the agent, "I want a ticket to Springfield." The agent responded: "There are several Springfields—one in Ohio, one in Illinois, and one in Massachusetts. To which Springfield do you want to go?" She retorted: "To whichever one is the cheapest." [Laughter.]

In her opinion the cost of transportation was more important than destination. In the matter of opening the doors of opportunity to the young people of the United States, destination is more vital than cost. There are now 2,000,000 young men and women in this country who are eligible for enrollment by the N. Y. A., but no accommodations are available to them. Three hundred thousand of these have been certified for enrollment. They are imploring the Government to extend them a helping hand. To their supplication deafened ears must not be turned. If there should be a war, the boys who are among these eligibles would, if necessary, be conscripted and sent into the trenches to fight and perhaps to die for their native land. And the girls among the eligibles for enrollment by the National Youth Administration would be required to work in factories and fields as substitutes for the boys who had gone to war.

We should expect all of them to be loyal to our flag and the glorious institutions for which it stands.

In return for the loyalty we require of them, we should make it possible for them to obtain employment or acquire an education. The most important asset of this Nation is not the silver that is stored at West Point. It is not the money in the Treasury. It is not the hoarded gold in Kentucky. Our boys and girls are more valuable than all of these combined. Because—

Not gold but only men
Can make a people great and strong;
Men who for truth and honor's sake,
Stand fast and suffer long;
Brave men, who work while others sleep,
Who fight while others fly;
They plant a nation's pillars deep
And raise its banners to the sky.

Let us not shut the door of opportunity in the faces of these young men and women. Let us rescue them from the possibility of becoming failures on earth, or the necessity of begging their bread from door to door. By adopting the pending amendment to provide them an additional sum of $23,000,000 we shall so demonstrate our determination to be just to them in their necessity that they will patriotically and sincerely proclaim:

My country 'tis of thee
Sweet land of liberty
Of thee I sing.

They will wholeheartedly help to plant this Nation's pillars deep and raise its banners to the sky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. NEELY. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 20, line 21, it is proposed to strike out the words "who are in need" and to insert the words "who have been certified as in need of employment and who are qualified and available therefor."

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment is to make effective the provision for veterans' preference. As it is now, the language is "who are in need," and as that has been interpreted it works a disadvantage to the disabled veteran who draws a small income. For instance, the Administration has held that a veteran with a pension of $15 or $20 a month is not in need. The amendment changes the provision so as to read "who have been certified as in need of employment" and makes effective the veterans' preference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE]. The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I tender an amendment which is now on the desk, and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 39, line 3, it is proposed to insert the following sentence: "This section shall not apply to municipal electric plants."

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, it clearly appears in the language of section 34 that an effort has been made to prevent any part of W. P. A. funds being used in manufacturing plants which might compete with private industrial operations, but the language is obscure and ambiguous, and I take it that there has been no studied effort on the part of the Senate committee at least to make it impossible to use W. P. A. work in connection with the expansion of electric-light enterprises carried on by a municipal body.

In the Northwest particularly a great many municipal operations are being carried on, which are now in existence, and it is vitally important that there be nothing in the measure which might be construed as a prohibition against the use of W. P. A. funds in projects associated with that sort of an expansion. It may be that other sections of the country do not care to do this, but in my section of the country, where we have Bonneville and Grand Coulee, this becomes a matter of very vital importance.

I talked to the Senator from Colorado, and he assured me that there was no desire on the part of the Senate committee in charge of the joint resolution to make it possible, by construction of the language, to forbid the use of W. P. A. labor in connection with the expansion of these little plants. They are very small affairs in the West. So I have suggested this language in order to get rid of any ambiguity, and to remove any question which might arise out of an attempt to interpret the act. That is my sole and only purpose in offering the amendment.

I discussed it with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who, I am at liberty to say, authorized me to say he is in favor of it. I believe the amendment, which is proposed merely in the interest of clarification and the removal of any question, should be adopted. It does not expand the bill or add anything to it. It simply allows the little plants in my section, of which there are large numbers, to avail themselves of the opportunity to employ W. P. A. workers on projects embraced in the expansion and operation of small plants.

I urge my brethren of the Senate to adopt the amendment. There is nothing in the amendment which adds anything to the cost. It is a decent, purposeful, worth-while thing. If it be said that the language does not forbid the use of W. P. A. labor on those projects, then, Mr. President, there could be no objection to the amendment, because it merely makes impossible an interpretation of the language to the injury of those little plants of which there are a large number in the Northwest.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 13, line 7, after the comma, following the word "Service", it is proposed to strike out "$300,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$600,000."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the amendment?

Mr. RUSSELL. I was about to make an explanation, Mr. President. I am glad that the temper of the Senate is such that Senators are willing to listen for one moment to what I regard to be one of the most important provisions in connection with this measure. The purpose of the amendment is to appropriate to the Public Health Service the sum of $600,000 for the supervisory work which that Department of Government does in connection with public-health projects within the several States.

At the present time in 29 States cooperative community sanitation programs are being carried on by the State public health departments in conjunction with the Federal health service operating Works Progress projects. In 17 States there are malaria-control projects, and they are of vital importance to the health of the people of those States.

In the fiscal year 1937 and in 1938 $1,300,000 was made available for this purpose to the Public Health Service, to give technical advice and engineering service to carry on these worth-while health programs. In this measure only $300,000 is allowed.

I submit that any such drastic reduction as that is wholly unjustified, and that its effect will be to dry up and starve every public health project in the United States.

I am merely asking for $600,000, as compared to an appropriation of $1,300,000 made for the same purpose in 1937 and 1938. I have here and could give a great many statistics to the Senate showing the vital importance of these public-health projects. Certainly, the labor that we find on the rolls of the Work Projects Administration, the unskilled labor, can be utilized to better advantage in drainage and public-health projects than in almost any other kind of project. It would be nothing short of criminal now to cut them all off and stifle them by this drastic reduction in the appropriation to the Public Health Service of the United States for the supervisory and technical work.

I beg of the Members of the Senate to consider the importance of this small amount of money proposed to be added to the sum we are appropriating to preserve public-health projects in the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]. [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the benefit of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 11, after line 8, it is proposed to insert the following:

"The Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act is amended by inserting at the end of section 3 a new subsection reading as follows:

"(e) Loans may also be made under this title to enable the borrower to refinance an existing mortgage or mortgages on a farm personally occupied and operated by him and for necessary repairs and improvements thereon, in cases where the Secretary determines that such refinancing is necessary and will enable the borrower successfully to operate the farm, and that the borrower cannot obtain credit for such refinancing from any other Federal agency or federally incorporated lending institution. Such loans shall comply with all the provisions of this title: Provided, however, That the Secretary may make such loans without regard to the provisions of section 4 of this title, but shall not use for such purpose in excess of 10 percent of the funds made available during any fiscal year for the making of loans under this title."

Mr. AUSTIN. A very brief explanation of the amendment seems to be in order. It is germane to that part of the pending joint resolution which is entitled "Department of Agriculture," and which starts out with the words:

In order to continue to provide assistance through rural rehabilitation and relief to needy farmers—

And so forth. And then, on page 10, it specifically provides that the funds may be used for "farm-debt adjustment service and making and servicing of loans under this section and prior law."

One of those prior laws is the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, and the section which I propose to amend is section 3, which provides:

Loans made under this title shall be in such amount (not in excess of the amount certified by the county committee to be the value of the farm) as may be necessary to enable the borrower to acquire—to acquire the farm and for necessary repairs and improvements thereon.

Notice that word—

And so forth. The point is right on that word "acquire." My amendment provides that "Loans may also be made under this title to enable the borrower to refinance an existing mortgage or mortgages on a farm."

Under this Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, as drafted, we have section 4 reading as follows:

In making loans under this title, the amount which is devoted to such purpose during any fiscal year shall be distributed equitably among the several States and Territories on the basis of farm population and the prevalence of tenancy, as determined by the Secretary.

That is the point—"prevalence of tenancy."

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, does the Senator's amendment change that point; and if so, how?

Mr. AUSTIN. It does, in this way:

Provided, however, That the Secretary may make such loans without regard to the provisions of section 4 of this title—

That is what I have just read—

but shall not use for such purpose in excess of 10 percent of the funds made available during any fiscal year for the making of loans under this title.

In other words, this is a very simple arrangement which undertakes to make it possible for the Farm Security Administration to go into those States where they are now unable to allocate funds because of the small amount of farm tenancy. This proposal was recommended by the Farm Security Administration. It was drawn by the Farm Security Administration. It is supported by the Farm Security Administration and by the Farm Bureau Federation. It is fair. It adds no burden onto the country, but it enables the Government to aid to rehabilitate the farmers who have titles which they are going to lose because they must meet the heavy interest demand, and because they are unable to meet it on the due date of these obligations.

It is suggested to me that they are land poor. That is one way of saying the same thing I am saying. They are industrious, they are thrifty, they are honest, they pay as they can, but, as Senators all know, their circumstances have been such that they were obliged to default interest and principal on their farm mortgages.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield first to the Senator from Nebraska, who has been seeking recognition.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I think this is a very commendable amendment. However, on page 2, line 1, the language seems to make it necessary for the borrower, before he can avail himself of the benefits of the provision, to prove that he cannot obtain credit from any other Federal agency. Why is it necessary to include that provision?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I understand that that is the policy of the Farm Security Administration, and that it is also the policy under the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenancy Act. In order that the RECORD may show what that policy is, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD all of section 3 of that act, to which this language refers.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEC. 3. (a) Loans made under this title shall be in such amount (not in excess of the amount certified by the county committee to be the value of the farm) as may be necessary to enable the borrower to acquire the farm and for necessary repairs and improvements thereon, and shall be secured by a first mortgage or deed of trust on the farm.

(b) The instruments under which the loan is made and security given therefor shall—

(1) Provide for the repayment of the loan within an agreed period of not more than 40 years from the making of the loan.

(2) Provide for the payment of interest on the unpaid balance of the loan at the rate of 3 percent per annum.

(3) Provide for the repayment of the unpaid balance of the loan, together with interest thereon, in installments in accordance with amortization schedules prescribed by the Secretary.

(4) Be in such form and contain such covenants as the Secretary shall prescribe to secure the payment of the unpaid balance of the loan, together with interest thereon, to protect the security, and to assure that the farm will be maintained in repair, and waste and exhaustion of the farm prevented, and that such proper farming practices as the Secretary shall prescribe will be carried out.

(5) Provide that the borrower shall pay taxes and assessments on the farm to the proper taxing authorities, and insure and pay for insurance on farm buildings.

(6) Provide that upon the borrower's assigning, selling, or otherwise transferring the farm, or any interest therein, without the consent of the Secretary, or upon default in the performance of, or upon any failure to comply with, any covenant or condition contained in such instruments, or upon involuntary transfer or sale, the Secretary may declare the amount unpaid immediately due and payable, and that, without the consent of the Secretary, no final payment shall be accepted, or release of the Secretary's interest be made, less than 5 years after the making of the loan.

(c) Except as provided in paragraph (6) of subsection (b), no instrument provided for in this section shall prohibit the prepayment of any sum due under it.

(d) No provision of section 75, as amended, of the Act entitled "An Act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 11, sec. 203; Supp. II, title 11, sec. 203), otherwise applicable in respect of any indebtedness incurred under this title by any beneficiary thereof, shall be applicable in respect of such indebtedness until such beneficiary has repaid at least 15 percent thereof.

Mr. NORRIS. I think what the Senator says is probably true; but it has occurred to me that before a farmer can avail himself of this provision he must make some negative proof.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. He has to go to the trouble, time, and expense of proving that he has tried this agency, that agency, and the other agency, and that they all turned him down.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; that is true.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not like that part of it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Neither do I.

Mr. NORRIS. I would suggest to the Senator that he leave out that part of the language.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am afraid that would run counter to the policy of the Farm Security Administration. When I talked the matter over with representatives of the Farm Security Administration it was claimed that the Administration did not want to become the reservoir of mortgages now held by the Farm Credit Administration or some other of the lending agencies of the Government and have the whole business dumped onto it.

Mr. NORRIS. Before a farmer can obtain any relief under this provision he must almost prove that he is a pauper and that he cannot obtain relief anywhere else. It seems to me the proof he has to offer has a tendency to show that he is a poor risk.

Mr. AUSTIN. Indeed, this kind of relief is to prevent his becoming a pauper, because he is in great danger of that right now. Many of these defaulted mortgages on farms are under foreclosure at the present time, and this type of relief ought to be granted, but it cannot be. The Farm Security Administration comes in with a very beneficial service. There is a humane side to this question, besides the money side. I refer to the side of the farmer.

Of course, it is also an advantage to a creditor in one respect to go to the debtor and negotiate with him upon a settlement which reduces the debt, reduces the interest, and extends the period of payment for a longer period of time, making it possible for the farmer, who thus far has been unable to make his payments, to do so in the future. So there is a saving to these thrifty people who are merely victims of the bad times through which we have been passing.

Mr. LEE and Mr. MILLER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. LEE. A portion of the Senator's amendment disturbs me somewhat. I do not know whether it applies to the purchase of farms for farm tenants, or only to refinancing. I am very much in sympathy with the Senator's amendment to make provision for refinancing farm loans which are in distress, because it is just as much of an advantage to save a farmer from becoming a farm tenant as it is to rehabilitate one who is already a tenant.

What disturbs me is that, as I understand, a provision of the Senator's amendment would strike down the only yardstick or criterion by which these loans are to be made in the different States and different sections. The present Bankhead-Jones law provides that these loans shall be made according to the ratio of farm tenancy to farm population, which provides some guide for making the loans. Part of the Senator's amendment, I think, strikes down the theory of the Bankhead-Jones act. If it applied only to refinancing, I would not see any objection to it. However, if it applies to the sale of farms as well as to refinancing, it seems that we ought not to agree to it, unless the Senator has some other provision which will give us a guide for making these loans.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, in answer to the learned Senator I assure him that he has misunderstood the amendment. The amendment does not strike down the theory of the Bankhead-Jones Act at all. It leaves section 3 as it was with respect to acquisition. That is dependent upon the tenancy feature, just as the Senator from Oklahoma wants it to be. That is left undisturbed. The amendment relates solely to adding to section 3 this language:

Loans may also be made under this title to enable the borrower to refinance an existing mortgage or mortgages on a farm personally occupied and operated by him.

That is all. It adds that aid, and it is limited in amount. The amount of money which may be allocated to a State where this condition exists is limited by the proviso:

Provided, however, That the Secretary may make such loans without regard to the provisions of section 4 of this title—

Mr. LEE. Is not section 4 the one which gives the Department the guide, which is the ratio of farm tenancy to farm population?

Mr. AUSTIN. That relates only to allocation to the State. Let me read it:

Sec. 4. In making loans under this title the amount which is devoted to such purpose during any fiscal year shall be distributed equitably among the several States and Territories on the basis of farm population and the prevalence of tenancy as determined by the Secretary.

Mr. LEE. Is that language left in?

Mr. AUSTIN. That language is left in, exactly as it is. It is not changed at all. In those States where that yardstick bars the allocation to them of their equitable ratio of the amount of this appropriation, the proviso comes in to a limited degree, namely, 10 percent:

Provided, however, That the Secretary may make such loans without regard to the provisions of section 4 of this title, but it shall not use for such purposes in excess of 10 percent of the funds made available during any fiscal year for the making of loans under this title.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield further.

Mr. LEE. I am very much in sympathy with the Senator's amendment; and I should like to say that the farm-tenancy bill, which is now on the calendar, has a provision in it for the refinancing of farm mortgages which are in distress.

Mr. AUSTIN. I know about that bill. However, it does not service the social purpose covered by the Farm Security Administration. We want to rehabilitate these families. That can be done by giving attention to them directly, going to the family and discovering what will aid the family to produce a better income with which to retire the debt. That is one aspect of this service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time on the amendment has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I shall take time on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized on the bill.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. MILLER. I wish to refer to the proviso in the amendment, making a limitation of 10 percent of the funds made available in one fiscal year. Personally I think the Senator is to be congratulated upon the amendment. I think it will serve a very useful purpose in every State in the Union. It will reach a class of people who cannot be reached in any other way of which I know. Neither the Federal land bank nor any other agency is reaching them. I refer to a class of people who are going on relief daily and constantly. Unless relief is granted, I do not know what is going to become of them. I wonder why the Senator limited the amount of loans to 10 percent of the appropriation.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I shall be quite frank about that. It was believed that those States which now enjoy a larger allocation by virtue of the limitation with respect to prevalence of farm tenancy might object if more than 10 percent were diverted to other States in trying to allocate an equitable amount. However, since the appropriation has been increased tonight, I feel certain that that objection cannot possibly be made on any rational basis.

Mr. MILLER. I think it would be a short-sighted policy for any State to object, because the thing which is creating farm tenancy in this country is the inability of the small landowner to obtain a loan.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I submit the amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont made reference to the fact that the appropriation for the Farm Security Administration had been increased tonight. I voted for that increase. I think it was deserved. However, not one dollar of that money can be used for the purpose of carrying out the purposes of title I of the Bankhead-Jones Act. The appropriation for the purpose of enabling tenant farmers to purchase farms, and which would be available for the purposes of the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont in the event that amendment is adopted, was carried in the agricultural appropriation bill. Senators will recall that the Senate amended that bill to appropriate the full amount of the authorization of $50,000,000 for that purpose for the coming fiscal year. The conferees on the part of the Senate supported the Senate position as valiantly as they knew how. We insisted that the House conferees take that amendment back for a separate vote in the House. The House voted it down by a substantial vote. When the action of the House was reported to the Senate, the Senate again insisted on its amendment and threw the matter into conference once more.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not know whether or not I surrendered the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator did; and the Chair recognized the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL].

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator in my time.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to ask the Senator how he interprets the language on page 10 of the pending measure:

The sums provided in this section shall be available—

Now, come down to line 7:

for farm-debt adjustment service and making and servicing of loans under this section and prior law.

As a lawyer I cannot see why that does not refer directly to the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenancy Act as prior law. Throughout the provision entitled "Department of Agriculture", we find direct references to it, particularly on page 11, where it is provided that:

The Farm Security Administration within the Department of Agriculture is hereby extended until June 30, 1940, to carry out the purposes of this section.

Why?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is the very reason why I do not think the funds voted here tonight are available for the purpose of making loans on land. True it is that they are available for the purpose of making loans, and that is the chief function of the Farm Security Administration, but the loans referred to in section (b) are loans which are made to farmers to enable them to make crops, and to purchase livestock and farming implements and things of that nature, and personal property, and do not pertain to the real-estate loans which are provided for in title I of the Bankhead-Jones Act.

By some strange construction or perhaps by some logical construction of the language pointed out by the Senator from Vermont, loans might be made on land; but undoubtedly the references here are to the loans which are made on personal property, and which are made to farmers to enable them to subsist and live during the period in which they are making crops and do not apply to the farm-tenant loans.

I have no quarrel with the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont. It will doubtless serve a useful purpose. I do think the sum of $40,000,000, which has just been agreed to in the agricultural appropriation bill, is woefully inadequate for the purpose of dealing with the farm-tenancy program or with the problem of refinancing loans of the type the Senator from Vermont has described. I put the House conferees on notice that if it was possible to do so in any deficiency bill I intended to offer again an amendment appropriating the $10,000,000 that the Senate heretofore has voted, to bring this appropriation up to the full amount of the authorization of $50,000,000; and I therefore offer an amendment to the Senator's amendment, appropriating the $10,000,000 authorized by law for the purpose of making these loans to tenant farmers to enable them to purchase farms. These funds will also be available for the purpose sought by the Senator from Vermont in his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont the following:

There is hereby appropriated the sum of $10,000,000 for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of title I of said Bankhead-Jones Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Has the relief joint resolution been laid aside and the Bankhead-Jones bill been taken up?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, we seem to have before us an amendment to the Bankhead-Jones Act and then another amendment appropriating money to carry out the Bankhead-Jones Act. I do not know anything about the merits of the thing. It seems to me, however, that the relief joint resolution ought in some way to be confined to provisions bearing upon relief.

This amendment starts out:

The Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act is amended by inserting at the end of section 3 a new subsection, reading as follows—

Then I gather that my fellow member of the Appropriations Committee has a provision adding $10,000,000 for the operation of the Bankhead-Jones Act.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am merely restoring the $10,000,000 which was twice voted in the Senate, but which we have never been able to get the House to agree to.

Mr. ADAMS. In the Bankhead-Jones Act, or in the relief joint resolution?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am offering it as an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. ADAMS. Which is an amendment to the Bankhead-Jones Act.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is. It is in order, however.

Mr. ADAMS. Oh, it is in order in a purely parliamentary sense.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. LEE. If we are able to take a farm family off W. P. A. and put them on a farm that they have a chance to buy, and make the farm purchase itself, that is relief; and if we are able to keep a farm family from losing their farm and going on W. P. A., is not that relief?

Mr. ADAMS. Does the Senator from Oklahoma seriously contend that in the passage of a great relief measure we ought to go back into some other farm bill which is pending before the Agricultural Committee, and has not been reported out from that committee, just because it is a good bill?

I think the Senate ought to exercise a little discretion in handling this measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr.

AUSTIN], as amended. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BURKE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll to ascertain the presence of a quorum.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-three Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

The yeas and nays have been requested by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] on his amended amendment. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRIDGES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before concerning my pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], I withhold my vote. The roll call was concluded.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] has a general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

Mr. HALE (after having voted in the negative). My general pair, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], would vote as I have voted; so I will let my vote stand.

So Mr. AUSTIN's amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment on page 18, line 6, to strike out "$40,000" and insert "$75,000." In the amount of money appropriated, the amendment is the same as the one I offered awhile ago which was defeated by a tie vote on a division, except that the amount was $100,000 then instead of $75,000. This does not change the amount appropriated in the joint resolution at all.

I have talked with Colonel Harrington about the effect of this $40,000 limitation, and he says it will disrupt the building program of the W. P. A. in every State of the Union. I know it will in my State, and I am sure it will in all the States. I think the Senate feels that $40,000 is too little as a limitation, because even with the State or the locality putting up 25 percent of the total cost, it means that the outside limitation on the construction of any commodious high-school building in any community of any size would be limited to about $50,000 or $52,000. It is not enough. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I have an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 23, line 2, after the period it is proposed to insert the following:

If the person filing such affidavit was not born in the United States, the affidavit shall contain a statement as to the time, place, and manner of his entry into the United States and the time and place of his acquisition of said citizenship by naturalization.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, on page 22, beginning in line 20, we find the following language:

(e) No alien shall be given employment or continued in employment on any work project prosecuted under the appropriations contained in this joint resolution and no part of the money appropriated in this joint resolution shall be available to pay any person who has not made or who does not make affidavit as to United States citizenship, such affidavit to be considered prima facie evidence of such citizenship.

The amendment would merely be a further assurance on the part of the Government that only duly qualified American citizens should be provided with work under the terms of the pending measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I offer another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 25, line 18, before the period, it is proposed to insert "or to any person who participates in any activity the subject matter of which relates to the overthrow of such Government through force or violence."

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, this is in reference to the matter we had under discussion this afternoon in regard to communistic activities in the W. P. A. In other words, anyone who participates in activities of the sort mentioned in the amendment would not be entitled to employment under W. P. A.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 3, line 24, to strike out the word "and" and to insert a comma after the word "recreational", and to strike out the word "work" and the semicolon following the said word "work"; in line 25, to insert a comma after that part of the word "production" which appears in line 25; to strike out the words "of goods for distribution to the needy" and the semicolon following the word "needy" and to insert a comma after the word "service" appearing in line 25, to strike out the words "to the"; and on page 4, line 1, to strike out the word "needy" and the comma following that word.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in explanation of the amendment, I will merely say that striking out the words and making the corrections I have suggested in the amendment restores the language of existing law. In the bill as prepared by the House, I think, striving to strike at the theater project and the art project, a change was made in the language which does and will interfere with work rather than the projects which were sought to be affected. The amendment which I offer merely restores the language of the existing law.

I conferred with the Senator from Colorado earlier in the day, and at that time he agreed as I understood to take the amendment to conference. I am perfectly willing to rely upon the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I was interested in offering an amendment, and I am anxious to know whether it is not covered perhaps by what the Senator has offered. I propose at the bottom of page 3, after the word "needy," to offer an amendment providing "including men, women, or children receiving treatment or maintenance from charity or from any charitable institution."

Mr. HATCH. One of the purposes of the amendment is to cover cases of that kind.

Mr. PEPPER. They will be covered, and goods from the W. P. A. can be distributed under the Senator's amendment?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I should like to speak for a few minutes on the joint resolution itself. I intend to vote for it, but I do not like to vote for it without explaining that I do not approve of the principle of the measure—that I think relief ought to be returned to the States. I desire to ask unanimous consent that I may introduce a bill presenting a system which I believe should be adopted, and have it printed as a part of my remarks, it being the bill introduced by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], and myself, presenting substantially the plan which was presented as an amendment to the Byrnes bill earlier in the session.

I do not like to vote against the pending measure because we have a serious relief problem.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Did I understand the Senator to say that he is against the joint resolution in principle?

Mr. TAFT. I say I am against the principle of the administration of work relief by the Federal Government; yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then why is the Senator going to vote for the joint resolution?

Mr. TAFT. Because we face a situation in which a very large number of men—2,000,000 men—will be thrown out of work on the 1st of July unless we take this action now, because it is impossible to change the system except after a very considerable time. The bill which I present proposes that the system be changed on the 1st of July 1940, because it requires the States to adopt a plan of relief which must be approved by the Federal Government, and under which the Federal Government will extend aid to the States to the extent of 66½ percent of the total cost of work relief and direct relief, just as it extends aid for old-age pensions and other uses under the Social Security Act.

In the meantime, until that system can be adopted, I see no alternative except to proceed with the present system.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. TAFT. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator has such a fine plan all worked out, why did he not introduce it some months ago, when there would have been some hope of getting it adopted?

Mr. TAFT. Substantially this bill was introduced by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] almost the very first day of the session. The committee has not seen fit to give consideration to any such change in plan. We think we have somewhat perfected the bill. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], and myself have joined in presenting at the present time a bill which I hope will be considered at this session, because, as I have said, it will take nearly a year to get the necessary State legislation and the necessary plans if we are to have administration by the States.

Mr. HATCH. Did I understand the Senator to say that he proposes that the Federal Government shall contribute toward the payment of direct relief in the States?

Mr. TAFT. I propose that the work relief and direct relief be one plan, and that the Federal Government contribute approximately 66½ percent of the total cost of work relief and direct relief to the States; yes.

Mr. HATCH. Then the Senator proposes to destroy the principle we have now established, that the Federal Government shall contribute only toward the employment of persons who can work?

Mr. TAFT. Yes; I propose to destroy that distinction. It is a distinction which never should have been made. There is no real distinction between employables and unemployables; and the Federal Government has never carried out the principle laid down originally, that it would employ all employables. There is no distinction. The two ought to be administered together. They should work together, and they should also work together with the unemployment-insurance divisions which are operated by the States. There should be one single administration if we are to have effective relief, and, in my opinion, the Federal Government, if it is to carry out such a system, must contribute the money.

I think relief is a local problem, but I recognize the fact that the localities and the States have no means of taxation sufficient to provide adequate funds. So we must assist them, as we must assist them in the case of old-age pensions.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the cost of direct relief in the United States is about equal to the cost of work relief.

Mr. TAFT. No; I think the cost of work relief is very high. The cost of direct relief is less than 50 percent of the cost of work relief today. I do not know whether if work relief were properly administered, it would not be almost as much, but my impression is that today it is less than 50 percent of the cost of direct relief. The result is that what we are doing today is to make the States contribute 25 percent for the cost of work relief and the whole cost of direct relief, so that today the localities, under the present system, are forced to pay nearly half of the total cost of all relief.

Mr. HAYDEN. Then the Senator's plan proposes to transfer what is now a local burden to the Federal Government. How would he save any money?

Mr. TAFT. I think the administration of relief by localities will be infinitely more economical. There is no city council in this country, there is no State legislature in this country, with the utter lack of financial responsibility demonstrated by this body tonight. There is not another body in this country that I know of which will vote millions and millions of money when they do not know where the money is coming from, when they cannot think of a system of taxation which will provide the money they are spending. If the administration of relief is so changed that the localities will have the responsibility for administering the relief, and providing a percentage of the funds, it will be an infinitely more economical administration. There will be less money spent by the Federal Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator spoke of the bill in substance having been prepared very early in the session—I believe in January—and introduced. Has there been the slightest effort upon the part of anyone to bring it out of the Committee on Appropriations, so far as the Senator knows?

Mr. TAFT. I do not think it is a matter for the Committee on Appropriations. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] also introduced a similar bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Did it go to our committee?

Mr. TAFT. I do not know to which committee it was referred. The President himself has reiterated that he is entirely opposed to the principle, and apparently so long as the present administration is in power the possibility of adopting this system is not worth the effort, practically, of insisting upon the adoption of the plan by a committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely wanted to let that be understood.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I understand the Byrnes committee has also considered the problem. It has not met their approval, and they have refused to go ahead with any serious consideration of such plans.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I want to ask one other question. The Senator from Ohio, I understand, says he does not know to what committee this matter was referred. Is that correct? He does not know before what committee it has been pending during all the present session?

Mr. TAFT. I understand the Byrnes Committee on Unemployment Relief has been considering it, but has not given it serious consideration.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] himself is opposed to this system, and wrongfully, I think. I think he confuses public works with relief. I do not think they ought to be confused. I think relief is one thing and public works another.

Mr. CONNALLY. I suppose the Senator has asked for a hearing before the Byrd committee?

Mr. TAFT. No; I have no bill pending.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then to what bill is the Senator referring?

Mr. TAFT. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] offered a bill as an amendment, and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] also offered a bill. All three of us joined in offering amendments to the Byrnes bill when it was before the Senate, which we would have pressed had the Byrnes bill not been laid aside at that time because of the reorganization. I have now proposed a bill which was offered as an amendment to the Byrnes bill at that time. The bill is a combination of two previous bills and one or two additional ideas.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Ohio is against the Federal Government administering direct work or work relief as a Federal proposal entirely?

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. But he is in favor of a bill which would make the States do it, and require the approval of the Federal Government, and also make the Federal Government pay two-thirds of the cost?

Mr. TAFT. That is correct. Two-thirds for the present. I should hope that as the problem grew less the amount might be lowered.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought the Senator said awhile ago that direct relief, which is now borne by the localities, is as large as the Works Progress Administration. Is that correct?

Mr. TAFT. No; I said I thought it was less than 50 percent. In my own locality, with which I am familiar, it is only 25 or 30 percent of the cost of W. P. A.

Mr. CONNALLY. If that be true, the Federal Government would be paying about as much under the new plan as it pays now.

Mr. TAFT. If relief and work relief are coordinated under one local administration which is determined to carry out the language in an economical way to suit the will of the people of their own district, instead of suiting the will of some national body and a lot of pressure groups, I say that then the total cost would be much less, and that I would hope that the Federal Government contribution might be less.

Mr. CONNALLY. So the Senator would neither save money nor save Federal participation. About all he would save would be to get his name on the bill.

Mr. TAFT. Not at all. I would make a fundamental change in the whole matter of relief. I hope it would be infinitely more satisfactory.

Mr. President, I will say that if the Senator thinks the Federal Government is going to continue the administration of direct relief for many years to come he is very much mistaken. I do not think the people approve of it. I do not think it is a proper method of administering relief.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Did I understand the Senator from Ohio to say that he did not favor Federal administration of relief?

Mr. TAFT. That is what I said.

Mr. PEPPER. And then did I understand the Senator to say that the purpose of the relief plan which he introduced contemplated the Federal Government contributing 66⅔ percent of the cost of the projects and the local community one-third? Is that correct?

Mr. TAFT. In dealing with projects, the Federal Government would contribute two-thirds of the total cost of relief and work relief, leaving to the local locality the direct relief they might have. I may say that the apportionment plan between the States, which is somewhat similar to the apportionment plan that was in the bill before it was taken out by the Senate committee, is to make sure that no State will get an excessive percentage.

I may say that the plan provides further that the administration in each State must be under civil-service rules, and that it must conform to certain minimum standards.

Mr. PEPPER. Would the Federal Government have any supervision over the construction program in the several States?

Mr. TAFT. None whatever, except that it must conform, as I said, to some fixed qualifications which the State plan must have. This in effect is similar to the unemployment-insurance plan. The State must adopt a plan and must conform to that plan. If it departs from that plan, the Federal Government may withhold the payment of money just as they may in the case of unemployment insurance.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. At the present time Cook County is paying for direct relief at the rate of $4,000,000 per month. Under the Senator's plan would the Federal Government take care of two-thirds of that $4,000,000 by transferring the proper sum to the State authorities and then having them pay it to the municipalities?

Mr. TAFT. I do not know. They would add to that the total sum of work relief, which, I suppose, in Chicago may run to seven or eight million dollars a month. I should think it would be about $8,000,000 a month, which would make $12,000,000 a month, which would make the total cost of relief in Chicago nearly $150,000,000 a year.

I should say that if the city of Chicago were willing to put up $40,000,000 the Federal Government would put up $80,000,000, to enable the city to carry out its complete relief plan, providing it did not exceed the total allocation of the State of Illinois, which is provided by the Federal appropriation, and which, of course, may be changed from year to year.

Mr. LUCAS. That is hardly the question. What I was trying to ascertain was whether or not the Senator's plan would cost the Federal Government more, providing it had to put up two-thirds of $4,000,000 that is now being contributed by the taxpayers direct per month for direct relief.

Mr. TAFT. I would say that in the city of Cleveland, which I know more about, the Federal Government last year was spending in the neighborhood of about $50,000,000 for W. P. A. The city of Cleveland was spending about $12,000,000 more, or a total of $62,000,000. The best authorities in social work that I could find in the city of Cleveland felt that if they had a single administration of relief in Cleveland they could do the whole job for $40,000,000, in which case the Federal contribution would have been two-thirds, or about $26,000,000, instead of approximately twice that sum. I say the present method of administering, according to any social worker one may talk to, is the most expensive method of administering relief that we have had in the United States, and we have had some six different methods since the depression of 1929 began.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I am looking to 1940. I do not think the Senator ought to monopolize this bill all to himself, or along with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR]. I wonder if he would not take in my friend the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]?

Mr. TAFT. I shall be glad to do so.

The bill introduced by Mr. VANDENBERG, Mr. BARBOUR, and Mr. TAFT (S. 2721) to amend the Social Security Act to provide for grants to States for direct relief and work relief was read twice by its title, referred to the Special Committee on Unemployment and Relief, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new title:

"TITLE XII—GRANTS TO STATES FOR DIRECT RELIEF AND WORK RELIEF"

"It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States Government to discontinue on July 1, 1940, the administration of direct relief and work relief (which shall not be construed to include the activities of the Civilian Conservation Corps) and to assist thereafter only in financing the administration of such relief by the States and the local subdivisions thereof. The Administrator shall cooperate with the States and local subdivisions and assist them to set up the necessary records, personnel, and organization to handle work relief, and on July 1, 1940, he shall discontinue the direct administration of relief.

"(a) The term "needy individual" means any person who lacks self-support and who lacks resources from which may be derived support adequate to provide a reasonable standard of subsistence compatible with decency and health for such individual and for persons legally dependent upon such individual living in the same household, and includes such persons legally dependent upon such individual living in the same household.

"(b) The term "States" shall include the District of Columbia and the Territories of Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

"APPROPRIATION"

"SEC. 1202. For the purpose of enabling each State to extend and improve, as far as practicable under the conditions in such State, plans for providing financial assistance, including both direct relief and work relief, to needy individuals not otherwise receiving assistance or benefits as referred to in titles I, II, III, IV, and X of this act, or for whom the assistance or benefits received as referred to in such titles is inadequate to provide a reasonable subsistence compatible with decency and health, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, the sum of $1,250,000,000, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of this title. The sums made available under this section shall be used for making payments to States which have submitted, and had approved by the Board, State plans for such services.

"Sec. 1203. A State plan for direct relief and work relief within the meaning of this act must—

"(1) provide that it shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State;

"(2) provide for financial participation by the State, or by political subdivisions thereof, or by both, in the cost of such relief;

"(3) either provide for the administration of the plan by a single permanent State agency or provide for the administration of the plan by agencies of political subdivisions within the State, supervised by such single permanent State agency; and shall provide that such State agency be directed and controlled by a relief board of not less than five persons, no more than a bare majority of whom shall be members of any one political party;

"(4) provide that all officials (except board members) and employees of such State agency, and of all agencies of political subdivisions administering the plan, shall be selected and protected in their tenure of office by civil-service laws of the States;

"(5) provide that the State agency and the agencies of political subdivisions within the State will make such reports in such form and containing such information as the board may from time to time require;

"(6) Provide that there shall be no unreasonable discrimination between needy individuals within the jurisdiction of the State, and particularly no discrimination on account of race or color;

"(7) Provide for the periodic reexamination and reconsideration of all individuals receiving direct relief or work relief under the plan;

"(8) Provide that the State agency may enter into reciprocal agreements with the appropriate agencies in other States for the care, treatment, and readjusting of transient needy individuals; and

"(9) Provide the exact manner in which the share of the State or the subdivisions, or both, shall be paid into the relief fund.

"(b) The Board shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a), except that it shall not approve any plan which imposes, as a condition of eligibility for work relief under the plan—

"(1) Any residence requirement which excludes any resident of the State who has resided therein continuously for 1 year immediately preceding the application; or

"(2) Any citizenship requirement which excludes any citizen of the United States.

"Sec. 1204. (A) From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan under this title for each quarter beginning with the quarter commencing July 1, 1940, an amount, which shall be used exclusively as financial assistance, equal to two-thirds of the total of the sums expended during such quarter as financial assistance by the State and the political subdivisions therein under the State plan, in which expenditures shall be counted—

"(1) payments of direct relief, both in cash and in kind, with respect to needy individuals who at the time such payments were made were not inmates of any public institution; and

"(2) the ascertained cost of all work-relief projects on which only needy individuals (other than supervisors) are employed, and 80 percent of all expenditures are direct payments to such needy individuals: Provided, however, That the total amount paid to any State for any quarter shall not exceed such State's quota as calculated under paragraph (B) (1) of this section.

"(B) The method of computing and paying such amounts shall be as follows:

"(1) The Board shall, prior to the beginning of each quarter, fix the total amount which it will distribute during such quarter to all the States out of the amount or amounts appropriated by Congress for the entire fiscal year; it shall then calculate the quota of each State for such quarter by apportioning 90 percent or more of the amount it has fixed for all the States, among the several States in the following manner:

"(a) One-third in the ratio which the population of each State bears to the total population of all the States, as shown by the latest available Federal census;

"(b) One-third in the ratio which the number of unemployed individuals in each State bears to the total number of such individuals in all the States, as shown by the latest available Federal census of unemployment, including the unemployment census of 1937, or by the latest available statistics with respect to unemployment supplied by Federal or State agencies.

"(c) One-third in the ratio which the prevailing average of wage rates as determined by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor in each State bears to the prevailing average of wage rates for all of the States as similarly determined.

"(2) A sum not to exceed 10 percent of the amount or amounts appropriated by Congress for the entire fiscal year may be apportioned among the States or local subdivisions thereof by the Board without regard to any limitations as to amount or percentage prescribed by this title: Provided, That such apportionment shall be made only among such States or local subdivisions which have made written application therefor, and only when the Board, after a complete hearing, finds that by reason of disaster, or extraordinary conditions of unemployment, or extraordinary conditions of inability to finance relief, such States or local subdivisions are unable to provide adequate relief within their boundaries, and the President approves such findings.

"(3) The Board shall, prior to the beginning of each quarter, estimate the amount to be paid to the State for such quarter under subsection (A) of this section, but not exceeding the quota fixed under paragraph (B) (1) of this section, plus such sum as may be apportioned under paragraph (B) (2), such estimate to be based on (a) a report filed by the State containing its estimate of the total sum to be expended in such quarter in accordance with the provisions of such subsection, and stating the amount appropriated or made available by the State and its political subdivisions for such expenditures in such quarter; and if such amount is less than one-third of the total sum of such estimated expenditures, the source or sources from which the difference is expected to be derived; (b) records showing the number of needy individuals in the State; and (c) such other investigation as the Administrator may find necessary.

"(4) The Board shall then certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount so estimated by it, reduced or increased, as the case may be, by any sum by which it finds that its estimate for any prior quarter was greater or less than the amount which should have been paid to the State under this act for such quarter, except to the extent that such sum has been applied to make the amount certified for any prior quarter greater or less than the amount estimated by the Board for such prior quarter.

"(5) The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon, through the Division of Disbursement of the Treasury Department and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, pay to the State, at the time or times fixed by the Board, the amount so certified.

"Sec. 1205. In the case of any State plan for financial assistance under this title which has been approved by the Board, if the Board, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of such plan, finds:

"(1) That the plan has been so changed as to impose any residence, citizenship, or other requirement for relief prohibited by section 3 of this title, or that in the administration of the plan any such prohibited requirement is imposed, with the knowledge of such State agency, in a substantial number of cases; or

"(2) that in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with any provision required by section 1203 of this title to be included in the plan; the Board shall notify such State agency that further payments will not be made to the State until the Board is satisfied that such prohibited requirement is no longer so imposed, and that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until it is so satisfied it shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such State."

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, is the presentation of an amendment in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. BONE. I offer an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 20, after the word "insect" it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "plant and fungus."

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, throughout the forests of the West, and I suspect through most of the timbered sections of the United States, the W. P. A. has carried on certain operations dealing with what is commonly known as blister rust. It has been a recognized activity of W. P. A., and that is particularly true in California, Oregon, Idaho, and Montana.

The purpose of inserting this language is merely to make sure that the handling of blister rust in the forests of the West, especially in the national forests, will not be interfered with, and that it may be continued under W. P. A. operations as a recognized project.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, may we have the amendment stated again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will again be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 20, after the word "insect" it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "plant and fungus."

Mr. BONE. I may say that the language of the measure permits the fighting of insect pests, but the fungus that attacks the trees out there, which is known as blister rust, is not an insect pest.

Mr. McCARRAN. May I ask the Senator from Washington whether or not embraced within the term "fungus" there is contemplated the fungus that attacks other plants aside from the trees in the Northwest?

Mr. BONE. I think the term "fungus" is broad enough to include the entire category of fungi. I would assume that to be true. I think it is broad enough as it would be interpreted to include any legitimate handling of that sort of pests. I do not doubt that it will. I think the language I employ there is sufficiently broad to cover it.

Mr. McCARRAN. What I have in mind, I will say for the purpose of the Record, is that we are throughout the West now contending with a pest known as the alfalfa fungi, and I wondered if the Senator had that in mind when he offered the amendment, or whether he considered that the amendment embraced it.

Mr. BONE. I assume that this work will be done on public lands, and I am not certain whether or not the Senator from Nevada had in mind doing that class of work on private lands. I have in mind the great public forests in the West in which these operations are now being carried on very extensively.

Mr. McCARRAN. I have in mind, I will say to the Senator from Washington, the semi-public land embraced within public or Federal reclamation projects.

Mr. BONE. If it is any form of fungus, I think the language is broad enough to cover it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 11, line 16, it is proposed to strike out "$7,000,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$10,000,000."

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I offer the amendment for the reason that it is in conformity with the request of the Bureau of the Budget, and I recognize the fact that many Senators in the course of the evening's debate have left with us the thought that we ought to be guided to a very great extent by the recommendations of the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Has the Senator from New York followed that program himself?

Mr. MEAD. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that at the time the Senator was making his strong and forceful argument I was in his corner.

Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered increases from $7,000,000 to $10,000,000 the amount of the appropriation for the Puerto Rican Reconstruction Administration. This amount was recommended by the Secretary of the Interior. I read from page 155 of the hearings before the Senate Committee on Appropriations the following statement:

Now, I would like to say just a word in regard to Puerto Rico. The economic situation has become progressively worse in Puerto Rico. The sugar quota has hit Puerto Rico very hard. The trade agreements have hit Puerto Rico very hard, and that leaves a situation for which the Federal Government is responsible.

Secretary Ickes recommends that with the following language:

There is one item I should like to call particular attention to. The Bureau of the Budget set up $10,000,000 for Puerto Rico, for the Puerto Rican Reconstruction Administration. Puerto Rico must depend upon this appropriation not only for its agricultural relief, but for its urban relief as well.

On page 248 of the hearings there is a statement which goes on to relate the experiences of the island in its attempt to obtain works-progress projects.

The following statement was made by one of the witnesses who appeared before the committee:

We have found it impossible to get the W. P. A. to come down into Puerto Rico to set up W. P. A. projects. Governor Winship time and time again asked the W. P. A. to set up projects, and the Administration felt that it could not do so.

Mr. President, this appropriation, recommended as it was by the Secretary of the Interior, recommended as it has been by the Bureau of the Budget, is essential because of depressed economic conditions today in Puerto Rico. This organization is now employing about 35,000 people. The appropriations contained in the joint resolution will effect a reduction of that number to 15,000. Last year this agency had $13,500,000. That sum was made up of the appropriation contained in the legislation, plus the unexpended balance and plus the balance which remained in a revolving fund. Today there is only $150,000 in the unexpended balance, and we are providing only $7,000,000, a reduction of $3,000,000 from the recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget and from the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior.

The Secretary of the Interior attempted to impress the committee with the desperate plight of the island. He pointed out that he was extremely concerned, and wanted the full appropriation, and yet the committee evidently did nothing about it.

So, Mr. President, I offer the amendment; and I trust it will meet with the approval of the Senate.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations heard the testimony of the Secretary. We had the same testimony at a previous hearing. The House committee heard the testimony not only of the Secretary but of the representative of the island, and the appropriation included in the joint resolution was in an amount which the committees of both Houses felt to be adequate.

I think one item in the statement of the Secretary ought to be noted. I think perhaps the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is better equipped to answer the question than I. I refer to the statement that Puerto Rico is suffering by reason of the Sugar Act. As a matter of fact, Puerto Rico is receiving about $10,000,000 a year in benefit payments by reason of the Sugar Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD]. [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, on page 39, under section 34, an amendment was offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] which reads as follows:

This section shall not apply to municipal electrical plants.

That particular paragraph in this measure was put forward by the Appropriations Committee so that no funds should be used in a plant, factory, or mill which might come into competition with private business. I think the amendment was put through in pretty rapid fashion, without due explanation. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

Mr. NORRIS. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, when the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] offered this amendment he said there was doubt that it would prevent the building of a municipal electric-lighting plant if a municipality wanted to build such a plant with assistance from any Federal agency. The fact that the Senator from New Hampshire moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to is a demonstration that the doubt was well-founded.

Mr. President, if the Senate wants to put in a prohibition preventing the use of any instrumentality under this joint resolution, such as the labor which will be employed, in the construction of a municipal lighting plant, municipal water plant, or a municipal sewage-disposal plant, the Senate ought to support the Senator's motion to reconsider.

It is safe to say that the only thing he has in mind is to take the amendment out so that it will be impossible, if his view of the law is correct, to build a municipal lighting plant. What is the difference between a municipality which votes to take advantage of any provision of the law in building a municipal lighting plant and any other agency which seeks to take advantage of the law?

I had intended to offer a similar amendment until I talked with the Senator from Washington, and it was agreed that he should offer it. I talked with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] about it, and he said he would not object to the amendment. It was agreeable to him because the real intent of the language in this section was that it should not apply to a municipal lighting plant. I have entire sympathy with that intention.

The amendment reads:

No funds appropriated in this joint resolution, whether administered by the Federal Government or by the State or local government agency from funds contributed in whole or in part by the Federal Government, shall be used by any Federal, State, or other agency to purchase, establish, relocate, or expand mills, factories—

That far, as I see it, there could be no objection to the prohibition. That far, it would perform a useful service. However, the following words are added:

or plants which would manufacture or produce for sale articles, commodities, or products other than those derived from the first processing of agricultural products, in competition with existing industries.

Some testimony was offered by several representatives of the Government on the question whether or not that language would prohibit building a municipal electric-light plant; or, if a municipality had a privately owned water plant that was supplying water, whether or not the municipality could build a municipally owned plant under this section. The testimony of Mr. Fortas explains it. He says:

Section 301—

That is section 34, the one to which this amendment applies—which is on page 33 of the committee print—

That was a different print from the one we have—and page 35 of the bill as passed by the House, provides that no funds appropriated in this joint resolution shall be used to purchase, establish, or expand mills or factories or plants which will manufacture or produce for sale articles, commodities, or products in competition with existing industries.

Now, it is my understanding that the origin of this provision is in the first deficiency bill passed this year, and that the provision is in a narrower form and that it was made applicable to the W. P. A. to meet a specific situation where the W. P. A. funds were being used to build competing mills and factories, and the Congress desired to stop that.

This language originated in the first deficiency bill of this year. We did not want that situation to continue. We did not want to get into competition with mills and factories privately owned. We did not want this money to be used to go into that kind of business. In the joint resolution the words "or plants" were added. Those words do not add anything. They are unnecessary. The whole idea is expressed without them.

Mr. Fortas continues:

The provision as presently drafted is applicable to P. W. A. and W. P. A.; we could not do any work on any plant that appears in section 301 or in that whole provision.

He goes on to enumerate various things, such as a sewer system, a water system, or a plant which possibly might compete with an existing industry.

For example, if you had a city which had a private water system that was obsolete and the charges were excessively high and they wanted to put in a modern water system, we might not be able to do work under this provision.

And the same is true of public power development.

That is the secret of it. Nobody objects to the rest of it. The words "or plants" would not be in the joint resolution and they would not be defended by the Senator from New Hampshire if there were any necessity for them, or if the language applied to anything else.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment. I wish to finish this reading.

Mr. Fortas continues:

And the same is true of public power developments. It is impossible to tell just exactly what this provision means with the words "or plants" and "or produced." But I think it is clear that it will mean litigation and indirectly increased expenses where funds are appropriated under this bill where a municipality wants to build a water system or wants to improve its water system or build a power plant or improve its power plant.

I concede that it probably never will occur under this joint resolution that that provision will interfere with a water system, because there will not be any built in competition with a privately owned water system; but it will occur all over the United States if the municipalities are to put in publicly owned municipal power plants. If they want to do so, and vote for it, I do not see any reason why Congress should stand in their way.

Farther on in the same testimony, speaking of litigation, somebody asked Secretary Ickes whether or not he would have any objection if they did have litigation. Secretary Ickes said:

We have spent a lot of time in court since 1933—

When they first started out; and I want to tell you that the time spent in court, without any exception, has been when they wanted to build a municipal power plant.

Mr. HOLMAN. How did the words "or plants" get in there?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know. They cannot do any good. They said, in effect, "If you had good lawyers, it would not make any difference if you did have lawsuits." Secretary Ickes said:

But we have spent a lot of time in court since 1933.

He might have added:

We have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in legal and court fees, even though we won the suits in the end.

Mr. President, that being true, since it is a matter only of delay—it is a matter taken up here at 1 o'clock in the morning, when we have once had a vote on it, and adopted this amendment—I move to lay the motion on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the Chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska to lay on the table the motion made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES].

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I want to have it clearly understood what the issue here is. Apparently, the United States Senate tonight wants to go on record as favoring taking relief funds from the poor people of the country to use in building and expanding municipal plants in competition with private industry.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, they will do a great deal of good for the poor people if they do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator suspend while the Chair makes an announcement? There is no question pending before the Senate at this time.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I thought there was a joint resolution pending before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no amendment pending.

Mr. BRIDGES. I have the floor, and there is a joint resolution pending, and I have a right to speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a right to speak on the joint resolution. The Chair meant to say that there was no amendment pending.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I did not intend to prolong this discussion; but since an effort has been made to shut me off, I may take my 15 minutes now. We have stayed here for some time, and we can stay for a while longer.

This issue is pretty clear. I want to point out what the United States Senate is doing tonight. The Members of this body whose hearts bleed for the poor people of the country are tonight voting to use relief money to build municipal power plants and expand municipal power plants, rather than letting the relief money go to the poor people of the Nation. That is what it amounts to.

I realize that there are different philosophies in this country. The Senator from Nebraska is entitled to his opinion and his philosophy on the expansion of public power plants; but this is a question of the use of relief funds. I am very glad to see the issue made so clear; but I want to go on record as one Member of the United States Senate who is not in favor of using relief funds to build power plants in this country. I want to go on record further as being one Member of the United States Senate who is not in favor of building with public funds any type of plants, mills, or factories to compete with private industry.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator has not only gone on record as one Member of the Senate who is trying to save the Nation, but he has gone on record as the one Member outstanding in the Senate of the United States who does just exactly what the Power Trust of America wants done.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BRIDGES addressed the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not want to be recognized. I simply want to make the point of order that the Senator from New Hampshire has exhausted his time on the joint resolution and on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no amendment pending, and the Senator from New Hampshire has spoken on the joint resolution. The point of order is sustained.

The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the joint resolution.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution having been read three times, the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. BARKLEY. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the joint resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. HARRISON. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] are unavoidably detained.

I announce that my colleague [Mr. GIBSON] would vote "yea" if present.

I announce a general pair between the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I am not advised how those Senators would vote if present.

The result was announced—yeas 55, nays 0, as follows:

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution making appropriations for work relief and relief, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940."

Mr. HOLT subsequently said on Thursday morning, June 29, 1939,

Mr. President, I desire the RECORD to show that last night I was advised that there would be no yea-and-nay vote on the relief joint resolution. I left the floor, and before I could return the vote had been taken. Had I been present, I should have voted for the relief joint resolution.

If there is no objection, I desire to have this statement inserted in the permanent RECORD at a point following the roll call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask unanimous consent that the clerks may be authorized to correct the totals in the joint resolution in accordance with the text of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN,

Mr. BYRNES, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

I understood, as I listened to the last remark of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], that he impugned the motives of the Senator from New Hampshire. As I understand, that is against the rules of the United States Senate. A man as old in the service of the Senate as is the Senator from Nebraska should know better than to make such a remark.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, what remark? I did not hear all that the Senator said. What remark does he refer to?

Mr. BRIDGES. I refer to the last remark the Senator made about the Power Trust.

Mr. NORRIS. All right; let the RECORD show what I said. I shall be glad to stand by it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The statement of the Senator from Nebraska will appear in the RECORD, and the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire will also appear in the RECORD.

ADDITIONAL REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

R. 6977) to extend the time within which annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States may be commenced, for the year commencing at 12 o'clock m., July 1, 1938, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 698) thereon.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported favorably the nomination of John M. Carmody, of New York, to be Federal Works Administrator, to be effective July 1, 1939.

Mr. PITTMAN also, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported without reservation Executive N, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, an agreement between the Government of the United States and the Government of the United Kingdom for the exchange of certain stocks of cotton and rubber, signed at London on June 23, 1939, and submitted a report (Ex. Rept. No. 9) thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

For each quarter, beginning with the quarter commencing July 1, 1939, the head of each independent establishment and executive department (other than the Post Office Department) shall submit to the Postmaster General, within 30 days after the close of the quarter, a statement of the weight of the mail matter by classes of mail that the independent establishment or department has transmitted free of postage during such quarter, and he shall also certify to the Postmaster General at the end of each such quarter that nothing was transmitted through the mail free of postage by the independent establishment or department in violation of the provisions of this section: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit the mailing free of postage of lists of agricultural bulletins, lists of public documents which are offered for sale by the Superintendent of Documents, or of announcements of publications of maps, atlases, statistical, and other reports offered for sale by the Federal Power Commission as authorized by section 312 of the Federal Power Act: Provided further, That this prohibition shall not apply to the transmission of such books, reports, periodicals, bulletins, pamphlets, lists, articles, or documents to educational institutions or public libraries, or to Federal, State, or other public authorities."

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 28, 1939

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who maketh the clouds Thy chariot, who walketh on the wings of the wind and maketh Thy ministers a flaming fire, deepen in our hearts the acceptance of the simple words, "Our Father who art in heaven." We pray Thee, in the name of Him who bore the burden and endured the cross, do Thou inspire our lives with the significance of Thy life and the reality of Thy being. Thou who upholdest the world, uphold Thou us; Thou who art the light of the sun, grant us sight of Thy sight; walk with us and replenish our altar fires from above. Call us to that large manhood that includes conscience, honor, sympathy, and aspiration; sanctify in us these instruments of power, and may we ever disown the things that minister to malice and evil. In the holy name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial appearing in the Livingston Enterprise on neutrality legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

STABILIZATION FUND AND ALTERATION OF THE WEIGHT OF THE DOLLAR

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 233.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 233

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the bill H. R. 3325 with Senate amendments thereto be, and the same is hereby, taken from the Speaker's table; that the Senate amendments be, and they are hereby, disagreed to by the House; that the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the said bill be, and hereby is, agreed to by the House; and that the Speaker shall immediately appoint conferees without intervening motion.

Mr. SABATH. Does the gentleman from New York desire any time on the resolution?

Mr. FISH. I would like half the time.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I will yield later 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. Speaker, due to the fact that objection has been raised on the part of some Member to granting unanimous consent to taking the bill H. R. 3325 from the Speaker's desk and sending it to conference, it has become necessary to bring in a special rule.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. For the sake of accuracy, as far as the record is concerned, will the gentleman tell us who did object to granting such consent?

Mr. SABATH. I really do not know.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. As a matter of information, if the gentleman will yield, because I know he wants to be set right on the subject, I may say that no one objected.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Texas, the majority leader.

Mr. RAYBURN. I was informed that there would be objection, so the request was not made.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is a different matter. The gentleman anticipated that there might be objection.

Mr. SABATH. It has been rumored and promised that some gentlemen would object; therefore, it became necessary for the Rules Committee to meet and bring in this rule. The rule will not deprive any Member of any rights. It authorizes the Speaker, as I have stated, to name conferees, as requested by the Senate. As the House has gone on record by a very substantial majority for its bill, the House cannot agree to the Senate amendments. Consequently, the conferees will have to come back to the House for instructions, and, upon so doing, any Member will have the right to offer a preferential motion to agree to any of the Senate amendments. If such a motion is made, I hope it will not be agreed to, because the House bill is a real, constructive measure.

Personally, I cannot quite understand why there should be any objection to the bill being sent to conference, and I do not know of any reason why the House conferees should not be able to convince the other conferees that the House bill, as passed here by a substantial majority, should be made the law of the land.

Personally, I have the highest admiration for some of the gentlemen from the silver States, and I congratulate them, and especially the Democrats, because at all times they are doing everything they can for their people and their section of the country, but, unfortunately, this bill, as it has been emasculated over in the other body, is a bill that I cannot see how they themselves could support or vote for. Therefore, I hope that the rule will be agreed to and the bill will be sent to conference so that early action can be had by the Congress.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TREADWAY. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he knows whether or not this bill, if it goes to conference, will involve in the conference the question of a tax on bullion silver.

Mr. SABATH. As I recall, there was nothing of that sort in the House bill and I do not think there is anything along that line in the emasculated Senate bill. In view of that fact, the conferees would have no jurisdiction to take up any such matter unless it was in the House bill or in the Senate bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. The subject of taxation is brought into the Senate bill and, therefore, would not that particular matter naturally be brought up in conference? Is it not a parliamentary question that the conferees will have to decide?

Mr. SABATH. Yes, it is; but I doubt very much whether that question could be taken up by the conferees. The conferees cannot go any further than the action of the House or the Senate.

Mr. TREADWAY. I realize that fact, but as long as the question of taxation comes into the picture, it seems to me, perhaps, it is a fair parliamentary question to be decided by the conferees.

Mr. SABATH. To be candid, I have not studied the Senate amendment because I did not feel it deserved very much study. I feel that the Senate amendments are unfair, and therefore the bill should go to conference, and the Senate amendment should be eliminated so that final action on the legislation can be had.

Mr. TREADWAY. I hope that question can be brought up in the conference within the limits of what appears in the Senate bill.

Mr. SABATH. I do not think the conferees will have such jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that there are a large number of Members who desire time to speak in favor of the adoption of this rule, I will content myself with what President Roosevelt has to say with respect to the Senate action on this legislation, which appeared in this morning's papers, believing that he has been correctly quoted:

The Senate action would, in effect, be an open invitation to international foreign-exchange speculators to manipulate the dollar with resultant injury to United States foreign trade. The national defense is weakened, he observed, if the national economy is weakened.

Mr. Speaker, whether we are Democrats, Republicans, Independents, or what not, we must concede, if we are honest, that the President has acted prudently and wisely in devaluing the dollar as he has. To take away from him that power, as is contemplated, would be injurious to America, would be injurious to our trade, and injurious to the best interests of our Nation.

It must be conceded, and it is conceded by even the arch enemies of the President, that today the American dollar commands a premium throughout the world. We know that the policy of President Roosevelt, under the act of Congress, has reestablished and increased our export business and at the same time has brought about a credit never before had by our country, a credit whereby under present conditions we can frequently obtain money at one-twentieth of 1 percent. I dispute the charge that the bill will give greater power to the President. It will not give him any greater power than that he has enjoyed since the enactment of the original act in 1934, and which power he has exercised intelligently and effectively to the best interests of our country. I am convinced that this bill which proposes to extend the life of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 is absolutely needed in order to hold the international bankers and money speculators in check. What has been accomplished by this administration should not be destroyed and the President's position should not be weakened. I think the act, as it has been passed here—and I may say many of you Republican gentlemen voted for it—should be extended. Therefore I hope the resolution will be adopted by a unanimous vote of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very important measure, brought up under a rule with only 1 hour of debate. The Members of the House will have the opportunity, if they so desire, to restore the control and regulation of the value of money to the Congress by voting down the previous question.

For the first time in over 150 years Congress surrendered this far-reaching and important power to the President of the United States. We now have an opportunity, by voting down the previous question, to get a direct vote on whether we want to take back this power by instructing our conferees to agree with the action of the Senate.

Article I, section 8, of the Constitution reads as follows:

The Congress shall have power to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures.

That is the constitutional prerogative of the Congress. We have yielded the power of the Congress to the President to devalue the dollar in an emergency. The Senate, in its wisdom, has taken back that power. It will give us an opportunity to express our sentiments if we vote down the previous question.

Furthermore, if we vote down the previous question, we will get an opportunity to agree with the action of the Senate which prohibits from now on the buying of silver from foreign nations. In all sincerity, I do not believe there is a single Member of Congress who wants to continue this fallacy. It is the most absurd of all the wand-waving, crystal-gazing ideas of the New Deal. I do not believe a single Member of Congress will defend it today. We have been buying this silver by the hundreds of millions of dollars from foreign countries at twice the cost of production, and then burying it again in the ground in our own country, where it serves no useful purpose. We might just as well buy seaweed or ocean salt water as to buy silver from foreign lands. Yet we were told at the time that such a silver-purchasing program was the road to recovery and the employment of labor and would increase the price of agricultural products. It is the most gigantic failure of the New Deal, and there is not a single new dealer that I know of who will even defend it today and ask that we continue this policy of throwing American dollars into the sewer to buy silver from foreign lands.

By voting down the previous question we could then get a vote on that. Then comes the other question of whether we want to vote to increase the price of silver in our own country some 10 cents. I do not mind giving a subsidy to our own silver producers so that they can produce more silver in our own country. I am not opposed to that if it gives them protection, and it will only cost some $7,000,000 if the Senate proposal is adopted.

As far as I know, there is no coalition between the Republicans in the House who want to take back from the President the power to regulate the value of money, and those Members from the silver States who want an increase in the price of domestic silver. No one has approached me, but I do know that practically every Republican Member of Congress wants to take back from the President this power, and restore representative government in the United States of America. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, this is just as important now as it was when this bill was before us. At the time this bill was before us for consideration, the committee to study the extraordinary powers of the President made certain recommendations. Those recommendations have largely been written into the Senate amendments, with the exception of the fact that the Senate raised the price which the Treasury would pay for domestic silver from 64.64 to 77.5 cents per ounce.

I want to comment briefly, and I hope without too much partisan rancor, on the statement made by the President yesterday, that the adoption of the Senate amendment would virtually turn the country over to Wall Street. I do not think the President gave very serious consideration to his words when he made that statement.

As the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has said, ours is the duty to coin and regulate the value of money.

For a great many years there have been straw men in America, as there have been straw men in Soviet Russia, in Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy. In Soviet Russia the straw men to be destroyed, to perpetuate dictatorships, are the capitalistic nations. In Fascist Italy, the straw men are the democracies of the world to be destroyed, that dictatorships may be perpetuated. In Nazi Germany the Jews and, in many instances, the Catholics are the straw men, built up to be destroyed in order that dictatorships may be perpetuated. In this country the straw men to be destroyed to perpetuate power are not capitalistic nations, they are not the democracies of the world, and thank heaven they are not the Jews and Catholics, but here the Wall Street bankers, the international bankers, successful businessmen, and farmers who are the straw men to be destroyed in order that power might be perpetuated. That is the reason, I presume, for the statement made yesterday that because certain of the powers which had been delegated to the President were about to be taken away that the country was to be turned over to the Wall Street bankers.

We should not continue to devalue gold, because every economist in the United States worthy of the name has repudiated the theory that the dollar price of commodities follows the dollar price of gold. Professor Warren and Professor Pearson advocated that. Professor Warren has now gone to the Great Beyond, and Professor Pearson I am given to understand is weakening in the light of experience, but if he still clings to the idea that the dollar price of commodities follows the dollar price of gold he stands alone among the economists of the United States in the advocacy of that theory. So we should take the initiative to establish the price of gold, to stabilize somewhere; and the adoption of the Senate amendment stabilizes the price of gold at $35 an ounce. The nations of Europe, Asia, and of the world at large can tie to the American dollar, with the price of gold stabilized; and instead of destroying our trade there will be an incentive toward an increase in trade because of that.

What about silver, what about the purchase of foreign silver? Rene Leon, a great silver expert, appeared before our committee and testified that this would aid our trade with China, that it would give them a purchasing power through which they might buy American goods. What happened? We forced China off the silver standard, we forced her to tie to the British pound sterling; and we should bear in mind the fact that if the United States participates in a war in Asia it will be an economic war to protect the commerce of Great Britain with China. Every purchase which China makes from the United States because of our fallacious silver policy must now be done through the back door of London, England. I was told that by no less an authority than a gentleman connected with the Chinese Treasury Department, who corresponds to the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury in our country.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLCOTT. All of our trade with China must be through the back door of London, England, because of this fallacious silver policy. We should not deplete the monetary stocks of foreign countries by purchasing foreign silver. One of the greatest economists, Dr. Sprague, who was formerly an adviser to the Bank of England, before we entered upon this policy, had advised the Government of Great Britain and the Bank of England that there was too much monetary silver in India, it was wholly out of proportion to the monetary use to which it should be put. The net result of our fallacious silver policy was to bail out Great Britain by purchasing the surplus silver stock of India and thereby helping to stabilize the British pound sterling to the prejudice of the American dollar. In order to continue this policy we must continue to assume that the purchase of silver and the devaluation of gold is necessary to help our foreign trade. It is not. Every economist in the United States worthy of the name has repudiated that theory and is on record as having repudiated it. What we need in foreign exchange today is not a war among the nations to see which one can cheapen its money the most, but it is stability, it is stability in international exchange. [Applause.] I have advocated the freezing of the value of gold at $35 an ounce, as we do in this bill; and I have advocated the discontinuance of the buying of foreign silver, believing very firmly that by doing so we would have stabilized to that extent and that by our example the other nations of the world would stabilize and improve not only our foreign trade but the trade of all the nations of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, we have just heard the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wolcott] compare Wall Street to a straw man, as if we were attacking Wall Street as a straw man when we are trying to keep them from turning the fiscal affairs of this Government over to Wall Street again as they did in 1920 and probably throw this country into another panic with the same results.

He says that Congress should do this, regulating the value of money and not leave it to the President. I am sorry to admit that I have come to the conclusion that Congress either does not have the courage or else does not have the ability to go ahead and regulate the value of our money as the Constitution provides. Some of you sat here in 1929 and saw the country go to the dogs, and never attempted to solve this problem. Was Wall Street a straw man then?

I advocated turning this power over to the President in 1933 because Congress would not exercise it. Something had to be done, and Congress had refused to act.

What is the trouble? We are in a money panic, and have been since 1927. We are gradually nosing out, but if you take this power away from the President and turn it back to Wall Street, to the money changers who now have control of the Federal Reserve System, I shudder to think what will happen to the agricultural people of this country within the next 12 months. Look what happened to them in 1920 and in 1932.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish] asked about increasing the price of domestic silver. He surely is not going to touch that, because it was passed in the Senate by Republican votes; surely he will not touch that ark of the covenant. But he opposes continuing the President's power to devalue the gold dollar. Every country under the shining sun that amounts to anything has long since devalued its gold currency, reduced the amount of gold in its currency more than we have devalued the United States dollar. If you take this power away from the President and deny him the power to issue currency against the gold we have, you are likely to throw this country into a panic in 1940 the like of which has never been seen; and the farmers of this Nation, the producers of this Nation, the toiling masses, and the small-business men will pay the price.

I know it is stated that we bury this gold in the ground.

Mr. KNUTSON rose.

Mr. RANKIN. I trust the gentleman from Minnesota will not interrupt me. He was here in 1929 and never opened his mouth when Wall Street was financing the jamboree on the stock market and the farmers of this country were going bankrupt.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. No; I cannot yield.

Mr. Speaker, they say the President has not exercised this power to issue currency against our gold reserve. I am sorry he has not. I wish he had issued $3,000,000,000 in gold certificates or United States notes and put them in circulation in 1933. If he had done that, in my opinion it would have ended the depression. We would have got out of it long ago; and if he will do that now, it will still do more to restore prosperity than all the legislation we are now passing. If you take this power from him, if you take away from him this power, you turn it over to the international bankers, to Wall Street, the same crowd that brought on the panic in 1920 and in 1929-32.

Mr. Speaker, I trust the previous question will not be voted down, but that this rule will be passed and the bill sent to conference. I hope this power will be retained in the hands of the President to protect us against such calamity as we have experienced in former years. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REED], the ranking Republican member of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. REED of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, several weeks ago when this legislation was up in the House of Representatives for consideration, one of the ablest and most respected Members of this body stated that it was and would be the most important legislation to be considered by this body during the present session of the Congress.

When the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures had this measure under consideration it held hearings which lasted for several weeks. The bill was brought upon the floor of the House and 7 hours of debate were devoted to a discussion of its merits and demerits. The bill as it finally passed the House consisted practically of two propositions. One section of the bill continued in force the existence of the stabilization fund. The other prolonged the power in the President to devalue the dollar. Those were practically the only sections of the bill. They were almost identical with the provisions of the bill that had been enacted 2 years previously and similar to one enacted in 1934.

When the bill under discussion reached the Senate, extensive hearings were held by the Committee on Banking and Currency, which hearings consumed several weeks. Debate on the floor of the Senate occupied several days. The action which the Senate took last Monday leaves one section of the bill practically intact, to wit, the provision continuing for 2 years the existence and operation of the stabilization fund; however, the Senate eliminated that portion of the House bill which gave to the President the power to devalue the dollar and added an amendment providing that the President and the Secretary of the Treasury may purchase domestic newly mined silver for 77 cents per ounce. A further amendment terminates the authority to purchase foreign silver.

It is now up to the House of Representatives to determine whether it will accept the amendments of the Senate or, practically speaking, allow the whole legislation to die a natural death. It will die by operation of law if some action is not taken before Friday night because the existing statutes creating the stabilization fund and the power to devalue contain in themselves a provision that the power and authority therein granted will expire on the 30th day of June this year. I have believed in the existence of this stabilization fund. I believe it should be continued in force. I have my doubts as to the rest of the bill. But I believe the Congress, and this House of Representatives in particular, should stand upon its own feet today and this House should take the opportunity afforded it to instruct its conferees as to its wishes. I am not afraid of the bugaboo that we have heard for so many years that Wall Street is running the United States Government. I have faith in the ability, the intelligence, and the integrity of my fellow Members of the House of Representatives. I believe there is not a man here who is a tool of Wall Street. We are capable of legislating wisely, freely, and constitutionally.

The judgment of 435 Representatives of the people must be sound. The conference committee should have the benefit of that judgment.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will vote down the previous question. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. Voorhis].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, when anybody tries to make people believe that depriving the President of his power to devalue the gold dollar is "restoring" any power whatsoever to the Congress, he is committing a pure act of deception. It does no such thing. Anybody who sincerely wanted to advocate the exercise of monetary powers by the Congress would make such criticism as he made on the ground that we have not utilized as a base for credit or money the metal that has been purchased. He cannot make an argument against the purchase of that metal or against the power of the President to devalue the dollar. Nobody from an agricultural community in this House can possibly afford to have this power shorn from the President. Rather, for the sake of agriculture we might require the President would use his power. The gentleman from Michigan nor anybody else can give us the slightest assurance that any other nation in the world will desist from taking advantage of the action of the United States in freezing the gold content of the dollar to debase their currency and deprive us of such trade as we have left. [Applause.]

Such action on the part of other nations will, in effect, mean that our farmers will be paying the costs of their production with more valuable dollars, in terms of other currencies, than was the case before.

It is, in my opinion, of basic importance that we face this issue exactly as it really is. I think my views on this monetary question are very well known. I firmly believe that we should now, at the very least, make constructive use of such free gold and silver as our Treasury possesses of such metal, with no obligations whatsoever against it. We have over $3,000,000,000 worth. Certainly it could be employed in the retirement of a portion of the public debt, or we could use it as a credit base for the making of the loans provided in the President's proposed lending program. But this has nothing whatsoever to do with the question at issue here today. I cannot see how gentlemen can believe that the right avenue to take is to deprive a governmental official like the President of the United States of the only protection we have under present circumstances against monetary action by foreign nations, and above all things we should not deprive him of his power to further devalue the dollar. When gentlemen talk about stabilizing the currencies of the world by having the United States tie its own hands, they are talking about something that is absolutely beyond the realm of possibility, because that is the very thing that will prevent stabilization of the currencies of the world by making it the evident interest of other nations to devalue further than they have yet done.

Let us face one problem at a time. Let us not get all balled up with a lot of things that have nothing to do with the question at issue. Personally, I should like to see the Congress set up a monetary authority under congressional mandate to be the sole agency in the Nation bringing money into circulation and regulating its value. To such an agency I should like to see all these powers transferred. But pending that time I prefer to have the power in the hands of a Government official such as the President, rather than in the hands of private speculators and international bankers, and I am as convinced as I can be that that is exactly where it would go. [Applause.]

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. The suggestion has been made here that domestic silver and foreign silver are at cross purposes in this issue. Does not the gentleman believe that we might properly continue the purchase of domestic silver and give up the purchase of foreign silver? I am willing to reduce or stop our purchase of foreign silver, but I insist on the continuing purchase of domestic silver at a higher price.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes; I think we certainly can buy domestic silver without obligating ourselves to take all foreign offerings, if we want to do that. I would say, however, once again that the more important thing is to make constructive monetary use of the foreign silver after we have purchased it. And I want to say this one further thing. It has been brought out in this House before that if you want to have foreign commerce you must find some way to get American exchange into the hands of foreign buyers. There are only three ways to do it that I know of. One of them is to pay them for services, another is to import from them, and another is to purchase these metals. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, let none of us on this side of the aisle—Democratic—deceive ourselves. This is a direct attack politically on the President of the United States. When the original bill was passed in 1934 the roll-call vote by which the bill was passed was 360 to 40. Today the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]—and, by the way, he voted against it on that occasion, although the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wolcott] voted for it today—the gentleman from New York said—and, of course, I do not believe any Member accepted his statement on its face value—that there was no coalition between the Republicans and certain other Members of the Senate that put through the amendment in relation to the devaluation of the gold content of the dollar. Everybody knows what happened in the Senate. It is chronicled in the newspapers. Why, it is already being chronicled as one of the most outstanding—I will say it mildly—of coalitions, and I quote the newspapers.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is talking about the august body on the other side of the Capitol, which is contrary to the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts will proceed in order.

Mr. McCORMACK. Quoting what I have read in the newspapers as written by various columnists, why, even Republican Senators—and I quote them from the newspapers, not what they said in the Senate, and if I understand the rules correctly I have a perfect right to quote them when they talk in the press—Senator VANDENBERG admitted that he and two other Republican Senators—

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. McCORMACK. Admitted in the newspapers, in a statement outside of a speech made in the Senate—

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I believe my distinguished and good friend from Massachusetts is in error in his deduction.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that the gentleman is talking about Members of the Senate and the Senate itself, and the actions of the Senate, and he cannot do that in the House.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, certainly no one would contend that a Member of the House cannot refer to a statement or a speech made by a Senator outside the United States Senate, and that is what the gentleman from Massachusetts is now doing.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The rules of the House prevent him from criticizing a Member of another body.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman is not criticizing the Senator, he is criticizing what he said.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read the rule:

It is a breach of order in debate to notice what has been said on the same subject in the other House.

The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. McCORMACK. In order to satisfy the disturbed feelings of my distinguished friend from Massachusetts, whom I admire, and whom I am glad to see is the minority leader, and who would make a good candidate of the Republican Party for President [applause]—and I mean it.

Mr. CLASON. Will the gentleman vote for him?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is not the question. The Republican Party cannot do any better than to put the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] on its national ticket. [Applause.] Do not blame me, Joe, if I have started a Presidential campaign for you.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I am afraid the gentleman has now disarmed me completely.

Mr. McCORMACK. Quoting the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], he said there was no coalition. I contend there was a coalition, and the coalition is for the political purpose of discrediting the President of the United States in the eyes of the American public. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself one-quarter of a minute.

Mr. Speaker, just for the sake of accuracy in the RECORD, I made no reference whatever to a coalition in the Senate. I know nothing about that august body. I merely said there was no coalition in the House.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN].

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat disturbed at the attitude of my good friend from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] and what he had to say in regard to the possibilities should this legislation be repealed. He probably does not remember that in 1934, the first year of the New Deal's monetary policy, the cotton farmers of this country shipped out more than 8,000,000 bales of cotton. During the 4 years when this policy has been in effect the cotton exports have decreased from around 8,000,000 bales to a little over 3,000,000 bales this year, and then the gentleman talks about this legislation helping the farmers of the United States or helping the cotton farmers in his area. Does he recall that the prices on cotton have fallen from over 12 cents a pound in 1934 down to under 9 cents a pound? Does he recall that under this New Deal monetary policy the prices of wheat have fallen from $1.40 a bushel down to 65 cents a bushel in my home State? Does he recall the falling of agricultural prices that have taken place under this New Deal monetary policy?

So, apparently, this policy has not helped American agriculture, but, on the contrary, it has helped the foreign producers and aided them in selling their products in our American market to the detriment of our farmers.

I always want to help the American people. I am not interested in continuing a policy of government that has for its primary purpose the aiding of foreign individuals, and that is all this monetary policy does—to give aid, bounty, and gifts to foreign speculators.

Under this policy and monetary program the United States Treasury has purchased nearly 2,000,000,000 ounces of foreign silver at a cost of around $1,000,000,000. Do you know that under this policy since January 1, 1934, this country of ours has purchased more than $9,000,000,000 of gold, foreign gold, and has paid a premium of nearly $3,600,000,000 on it, an outright gift of nearly $5,000,000,000 from the American people to the people in the foreign countries of the world, mostly foreign gold and silver speculators who are getting the advantage of a good-neighbor policy established by the New Deal administration?

I am for helping American citizens, American workmen, and American farmers, and when I see that a policy is wrong we should be big enough to repeal or change it, and get back to sanity and reason for the benefit of our own American workers and people.

President Roosevelt said yesterday in criticizing the Senate vote on the stabilization and devaluation bill, that its action restored control over money to Wall Street speculators and international bankers.

If the return to Congress of its constitutional right to fix and regulate the value of money means Wall Street control of money, as stated by the President, then the people had better abolish Congress and representative government.

What a sad commentary on the part of the Chief Executive as to the integrity of Congress. His attitude toward the membership of Congress can be briefly stated. When Congress "rubber stamps" his edicts, then it functions properly, but when Congress attempts to exercise its constitutional prerogatives, the President calls it a tool of Wall Street or begins a far-reaching purge.

The right to fix and regulate the value of money, under the Constitution, belongs solely to Congress. Today, we have the opportunity of recapturing that power by voting down the "previous question" on the rule, and concurring in the Senate amendments to the bill before us. The people of the country demand this action today in behalf of constitutional and representative government.

What is the effect of the action taken by the Senate on the stabilization bill as passed by the House in April of this year?

First. Senate action provides for the continuation of stabilization fund as approved by the House.

Second. Senate action takes away from the President, and restores to Congress, the constitutional power to regulate and fix the value of money (gold). Senate vote—ayes 47, noes 31.

Third. Senate action discontinues the purchase of foreign silver by the United States Treasury. No record vote taken in Senate. Vote overwhelming in favor of discontinuance.

Fourth. Senate action provides for the purchase of domestically mined silver at 77.57 cents per ounce. Senate vote—ayes 48, noes 30. The price of 77.57 was paid by the Treasury for domestic silver for several years prior to the present price of 64.64 cents per ounce, which closed many mines in this country and threw thousands of miners out of work.

The concurrence of the House in the Senate amendments will be one step toward the restoration of business confidence and a return of faith of our people in representative government.

It is about time that the American people stop playing Santa Claus to the rest of the world.

Foreign governments owe us more than $12,000,000,000 from the days of the World War. This staggering sum will never be paid and the New Deal administration has made no attempt to collect any of it. The little country of Finland has paid voluntarily, but other foreign governments have declined to meet their obligations.

Despite this enormous obligation, the New Deal has gone out of its way in giving away our domestic markets to cheap foreign production, and in making gifts of goods and money to foreign speculators and producers during the past 6½ years.

Since January 1, 1934, under President Roosevelt's "good neighbor" policy, the Treasury has purchased more than $9,000,000,000 in foreign gold. America's gift to foreign gold miners and speculators on these purchases amounts to more than $3,600,000,000.

Instead of spending this gift for our farm and manufactured products, foreign recipients of New Deal bounty, have piled up more than $7,000,000,000 in bank deposits and security investments in this country. They can break our market or cause a complete collapse any day by making heavy withdrawals of their funds, which are now temporarily in American institutions. In other words, foreign speculators and international bankers now have the American people by the neck.

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC SILVER

Under existing law the President can pay up to $1.29 per ounce for domestic silver. The Treasury has paid as high as 77.57 cents for silver. The Senate amendment requiring the purchase of domestic silver at 77.57 cents per ounce is a small price to pay to domestic producers and workers in order to get rid of the purchase of foreign silver. Domestic production of silver for 1938 approximated 58,000,000 ounces. Maximum production in any year under the New Deal totaled 71,000,000 ounces.

Under the New Deal silver-purchase program the Treasury has purchased nearly 2,000,000,000 ounces of foreign silver at a cost to the American people of approximately $1,000,000,000. This silver is not used for monetary purposes and now lies buried in the ground at West Point. Our King Midas gold hoard of $16,000,000,000 is buried in the hills of Kentucky. In reality, we have made an outright gift to foreign silver speculators of more than $1,000,000,000, as this silver has not been used for monetary or any other purpose and is being piled up to build another mountain of silver. It is no good to us. We cannot sell it or use it.

President Roosevelt has fixed and maintained the price of gold and silver for the entire world, yet he is against fixing and maintaining prices on agricultural commodities produced by American farmers. There would be more sense in maintaining prices on food products.

Power of the President to devalue and purchase foreign silver has nothing to do with the so-called tripartite agreement. This agreement with Great Britain and France, according to Mr. Morgenthau, deals exclusively with the stabilization fund, which is continued in the bill.

The authority of the President under existing law expires at midnight on June 30. The overwhelming vote cast in the Senate for the amendments before us plainly shows that there will be no compromise.

The House should now concur in the Senate amendments to H. R. 3325 and restore to itself its constitutional right to fix and regulate the value of money and to discontinue the pernicious role of playing Santa Claus for foreign speculators and international bankers at the expense of the American people.

I urge you to vote down the previous question so that the House may concur in the Senate amendments now before us. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 216, nays 164, not voting 50, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, at this late date, with the necessity for this bill to get to the White House for signature before the close of the fiscal year, I am not specially disposed to oppose the bill. However, I would feel remiss in my duty if I did not call attention to the fact that the item now pending, on which the House proposes to recede and concur, calls for an appropriation of $250,000 for the first unit of an extensible Weather Bureau building. I have not seen the facilities that are being used by the Weather Bureau at the present time, but I understand they are quite adequate. I simply want to impress upon the House that we are today committing ourselves to the first of a series of expenditures for an extensible building that is going to involve infinitely more money than the $250,000 now carried in the bill. The proposal now pending before you is to recede and concur in the Senate amendment. If you approve it, it means that you place the seal of your approval upon this proposal. If you turn it down, it means that we will further confer on the matter and determine whether or not this unit ought to be undertaken.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Does not the gentleman believe the New Deal ought to have a Weather Bureau to tell which way the wind is blowing?

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to the statement made in the hearings before the House committee on pages 286 and 287 explaining this item. This building is 51 years old. It has been occupied by the Weather Bureau for 40 years. It was constructed for the Mexican Embassy and was never intended for use as an office building. The officials who occupy it are so crowded for space that it is necessary to stack their files in the corridors of the building. Whereas standard regulations require that at least 100 square feet be available for each employee, there are in this building available only 68 square feet per employee.

The total amount involved in the construction of the three units which will be necessary in order to afford this Bureau the facilities it needs is $815,000, of which only $250,000 is being made available by this appropriation if it is agreed to by the House.

The Weather Bureau, according to the evidence before our committee, is the worst-housed of any bureau in the Department of Agriculture. It is today expending several thousand dollars per year in the rental of space outside of this building. There can be no question but that the additional construction sought here is very necessary. I can conceive of no reason why the passage of this bill, which has now been substantially agreed upon in all controversial particulars, should be delayed further by reason of a controversy over an item of this sort. I sincerely hope that the House will agree to the motion, agreed to in conference by all the conferees, as far as I am advised, with the possible exception of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Will the gentleman inform the House what is the total cost of the building we are embarking upon?

Mr. TARVER. I stated that a moment ago, but the gentleman probably did not hear me. It is contemplated to construct three units. This appropriation of $250,000 provides for the first unit. The total cost of construction, to be apportioned over at least 3 years, will be $815,000.

May I point out to the gentleman and to the House that recently the Congress has very substantially increased the appropriations for the Weather Bureau, partly in order to enable it to make meteorological investigations in connection with commercial aviation. The number of its employees and the extent of its activities have been vastly increased. There can be no question but that provision must be made for additional space either by the construction of new buildings to replace these old, worn-out quarters or by the rental of proper quarters elsewhere in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Is not this the identical amendment the House voted down when the report was here before?

Mr. TARVER. Yes. The House voted against receding and concurring in the amendment; but may I say to the gentleman that it would never be possible to secure legislation of the character involved in the passage of an appropriation bill unless one House or the other, with regard to disputed items, should be willing to make concessions. It is not possible for this House of itself alone to pass an appropriation bill, neither is it possible for the Senate to do that. This conference report and the action the committee of conference is recommending on these amendments that are not included in the report represent the judgment of the conferees upon these various disputed items, in an effort to arrive at a conclusion that would be reasonably satisfactory. There is no member of the conference who is absolutely pleased with everything that has been done. We have sought to reach a conclusion, however, that would fairly represent the wishes of the House.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TARVER) there were—ayes 98, noes 82.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 33: On page 22, after line 25, insert "Total, Weather Bureau, $7,181,570."

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TARVER moves that the House further insist upon its amendment to the amendment of the Senate No. 33.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 141: Page 92, after line 11, insert:

"Emergency erosion control, Everglades region, Florida: For research and demonstration work in soil conservation control measures, including fire control and irrigation construction work to eliminate fire hazards, in the Everglades region of Florida, $75,000: Provided, That no expenditures shall be made for these purposes until a sum at least equal to such expenditures shall have been made available by the State of Florida for the same purposes."

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TARVER moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 141, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Emergency erosion control, Everglades region, Florida: For research and demonstration work in soil conservation control measures, including research and demonstration work in fire control and irrigation construction work to eliminate fire hazards, in the Everglades region of Florida, $75,000: Provided, That no expenditures shall be made for these purposes until a sum at least equal to such expenditures shall have been made available by the State of Florida for the same purposes."

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, just to make a record on this proposal, this amendment No. 141 provides $75,000 for fire-control research and demonstration and emergency erosion control in the Everglades of Florida.

The strict fact of the matter is that nobody made any appearance before the House Subcommittee on Appropriations for Agriculture to request this sum. There was no testimony in our hearings. It was not until the matter came to the Senate side that it was presented, and the Senate finally wrote it in with a proviso, of course, that the money had to be matched by the State of Florida. This, of course, is a legislative provision written into the bill by the Senate, and therefore had to come back to the House for a separate vote.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN. The fact that the Legislature of Florida met too late to appropriate its portion was the cause of the delay.

Mr. DIRKSEN. What I wanted to make emphatic, I will say to the gentleman from Florida, is that there has been no estimate for this. There was no testimony in the hearings and there was no request made of the House committee for this item. I appreciate, of course, it only involves $75,000, and I am not disposed to oppose it too emphatically at this time; but I believe in the interest of legislative integrity the House ought to be advised as to what the situation is and how this item got into the bill.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TARVER. My understanding is, and it was so stated by the Senate conferees, that this condition in Florida which necessitated this appropriation arose after the hearings in the House had been concluded, and it was for this reason that the matter was not presented to the House committee.

Mr. DIRKSEN. We were so informed, I will say to the gentleman from Georgia, although that does not appear in the testimony on the House side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN) there were—ayes 87, noes 68.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 142: Page 92, after line 20, strike out "$23,645,-584" and insert "$23,720,584."

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, this simply corrects a total. I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 158: On page 108, line 5, after the parenthesis, insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That no employee of the United States on whose certificate or approval loans under said act of January 29, 1937, as amended, or other acts of the same general character, are or have been made, shall be held personally liable for any loss or deficiency occasioned by the fraud or misrepresentation of applicants or borrowers, if the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration shall determine that such employee has exercised reasonable care in the circumstances, and has complied with the regulations of the Farm Credit Administration in executing such certificate or giving such approval."

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 158, with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TARVER moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 158 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter inserted by said amendment, add the following:

"Notwithstanding any such determination by the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, this provision shall not be construed to prevent any criminal process against any person who was a party to or had guilty knowledge of such fraud or misrepresentation."

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman from Georgia yield to me to offer an amendment?

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, may I say that this is the last item in a bill which has required a great deal of time in conference. This is an amendment which was satisfactory both to the Republican and Democratic conferees, and I do not think the committee on this side should be requested not to follow the usual procedure at this time and allow the offering of a substitute proposition.

This is a proposal that all the conferees have agreed upon.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me 3 minutes?

Mr. TARVER. I will be pleased to yield the gentleman 3 minutes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, this proviso gives to the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration the privilege of determining whether or not any employee should be held liable for any loss that might be occasioned through fraud or misrepresentation on the part of applicants or borrowers.

The House, on various occasions, has given unlimited power to the agencies administering farm measures, even going so far as to permit them to audit their own accounts or to have the last word to say in reference to the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars. As far as I am concerned, if I can prevent it, the House is not going to do this again.

It seems to me some other agency should also pass upon the recommendation of the Farm Credit Administration as to whether these officials should be held liable. If I had been granted the privilege I asked for, I would add to this proviso that the Comptroller General should also approve. We should not be letting spending agencies do their own auditing nor relieve their own officers of shortages that may occur in the administration of laws where they are spending large amounts of money, but there should be a check on them.

I realize that the hour is late to bring up this question, but the conference report has just been called up. I do hope the committee will be extremely careful in the future. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER] knows what happened under the law letting one farm agency audit its own accounts, because there was a hearing before his subcommittee. Fortunately, the Committee on Expenditures was able to settle that matter by getting the General Accounting Office in the picture, and as a result about $500,000 will be returned to the Treasury on June 30 that would otherwise have been wasted. All members of the subcommittee handling the Agriculture appropriation bill agreed to that proposition. Again I say it is wrong to let a spending agency decide for itself whether or not any of its officials have been at fault in the handling of public money. That is what we have a Comptroller General for. He should be consulted and review the cases acted on, and if he finds the official was in no way involved, well and good.

In view of the lateness of the hour, I will not offer any objection to this compromise that the conferees have agreed on; but I serve notice in the future I am going to oppose legislation letting the spending agency settle such proposals. [Applause.]

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

If the House will carefully examine the language of Senate amendment No. 158, they will find that it does not propose to absolve employees of the Farm Credit Administration from responsibility for any fraud or dereliction on their own part. It only relates to their being held responsible for fraud or misrepresentation committed by applicants for loans from the emergency crop and feed loan funds.

Recently the Comptroller General, in a decision which was somewhat surprising to me, because I did not believe, and do not believe now, that it clearly represents the law on the subject, held that an employee of the Farm Credit Administration who, upon the basis of a recommendation made by a county committee on the application of an applicant for a loan, certified to the correctness of the statements made in the application, with no fault on his part and no knowledge that there was any incorrect statement made in the application, was personally liable if the applicant, without his knowledge, had been guilty of fraud. It seems to me that is such a manifestly unfair situation that it ought to be corrected. While we have added some language by amendment to the Senate amendment which will further protect the Government in such matters, the amendment as it is now proposed certainly ought not to attract opposition.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]. I want him to explain his views on this matter.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, of course, every precaution should be taken to prevent fraud. There is no institution within the Government more nearly free from any sort of questionable transaction than the Farm Credit Administration. No agency has operated on a more efficient basis. This amendment does not apply to the regular work of the Farm Credit Administration, but only applies to what is known as the seed and feed loans. That is an appropriation which was made to finance farmers who cannot secure credit elsewhere. The loans usually average less than $100. More than 100,000 of these loans are made each year. They provide just a bare pittance that enables the farmer who cannot get credit elsewhere, to make a crop, when he otherwise could not make it. Many of these loans are made in the drought and flood areas, where there is great need for an immediate small loan. If this application were left so that the disbursing would have to make inquiry and be responsible on a $25 or $50 loan for representations made by local committees or by the farmers, it would make it practically impossible of administration. They are current loans. If a man were going to disburse $50, if he were going to be personally responsible for it, it would be necessary for him to check up on every statement made by every applicant on these several hundred thousand loans. Generally there should be thorough responsibility. But this is a practical matter that calls for practical administration.

These have been very important loans. They have, in many instances, saved the farmers. It would be utterly ridiculous in connection with a $40 or $50 loan to go to the expense of sending somebody out 20 or 30 miles to check up on the individual statements made by the local committee or by the applicant himself.

Here is an interesting thing: There have only been very few cases of fraud in the hundreds of thousands of loans that have been made beginning away back in the twenties when the other party was in power. The loans have proved to be so valuable that both sides have provided for them practically unanimously every year. They are administered by one of the most capable and efficient field organizations to be found anywhere. It would be a tragedy to have their fine work handicapped by regulations that would so delay their work as to make it almost wholly useless.

I hope the House will agree to the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER].

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] such time as he may desire.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I feel that the members of the conference committees of the House and Senate are entitled to the thanks of the Members of the House and richly deserve the sincere gratitude of the farmers of the Nation for the time and effort they have expended in bringing this agricultural appropriation bill to a successful conclusion. In view of my deep interest in the funds carried in this bill, I have kept in constant contact with the members of the conference committees and can testify to the devotion which they have shown to those millions who till the soil.

Of course, it is pleasing to me that a Senator and Representative from my own State were permitted to participate in these conferences, and I am convinced that many of the items carried in this bill are the result of their individual efforts. The junior Senator from Georgia, Hon. RICHARD B. RUSSELL, was the chairman of the conference committee in the Senate, and the Representative from the Seventh Congressional District of Georgia, Hon. M. C. TARVER, was the second ranking member of the committee on the part of the House. Working with Senator RUSSELL was Senator JOHN H. BANKHEAD, of Alabama, whose interest in our agricultural problems has been an inspiration to me. Their untiring efforts have contributed a great deal in securing the successful passage of this bill. Of course, I am equally grateful to the other members of the conference committees for their efforts in behalf of the 32,000,000 people of this Nation who look to agriculture for a livelihood.

Now ready for final passage, the bill carries $225,000,000 for parity payments to the producers of cotton, corn, wheat, rice, and tobacco in 1940. It will be recalled that in the last session we secured an appropriation of $212,000,000 for parity payments for this year, and which the Department advises me will be distributed in August or September. This bill also carries $203,000,000 for use by the Secretary of Agriculture in the purchase and distribution of surplus agricultural commodities. I believe that this appropriation is going to prove very helpful in solving one of our most distressing problems—that is, in finding a market for the surplus crops and meeting the need of those in want. Most of this fund will be expended in handling those crops with the greatest surplus, particularly cotton, wheat, citrus fruits, peanuts, and dairy products.

In my section, peanuts have become a major crop. Last year, the Department of Agriculture authorized a peanut diversion program and it produced magnificent returns to the peanut producers. While the program cost over $3,000,000, it increased the receipts of the peanut producers by approximately $20,000,000, and I do not know of any Government program that has shown as fine returns for the amount invested. In the program last year the price of peanuts was fixed at $65 per ton and I understand there has been some doubt in the minds of officials of the Department of Agriculture as to whether they would be able to maintain that price for the crop this year. It was for that reason that many of us worked so vigorously for this $203,000,000, so as to be sure that ample funds would be available for another peanut diversion program and at a price at least as good if not better than the price fixed last year.

In this connection, I think it should be understood by all that this $203,000,000 appropriated in this bill for the handling of surplus agricultural commodities, including cotton and peanuts, is taken from customs receipts paid at our ports on foreign goods shipped into this country under our tariff laws.

The tariff has been a burden to the farmers for 150 years and I feel that the Congress is fully justified in appropriating for use by the farmers not only this $203,000,000, but the full amount received as customs receipts under our tariff laws.

It is also pleasing to me that we have been able to write into this bill an appropriation of $40,000,000 for the farm-tenant purchase program. Many of us have worked for weeks to make the amount $50,000,000, and I think that amount should have been appropriated, and we intend to insist upon that amount next year, but for the present have consented to accept the $40,000,000 agreed upon by the conference committee, for which Senator RUSSELL and Senator BANKHEAD have worked so diligently. I believe this farm-tenant purchase program is going to mean a great deal in the future for the farming population of this Nation. I can think of no life more discouraging than that faced by a tenant farmer—to be required to move from year to year, to change schools, churches, and friends, and never know what tomorrow will bring forth. I can think of no finer contribution to American citizenship than to provide a method whereby deserving tenants can buy a farm of their own, to be permanently established and have a home to love, to work for and to fight for.

The newspapers of the Nation have repeatedly printed articles with reference to this bill to the effect that it was a $1,200,000,000 bill for the farmers, and I think it is time that this impression was corrected. It is true that the money appropriated in this bill totals nearly $1,200,000,000, but if you will examine the bill carefully, you will find many items that cannot be regarded as of direct benefit to the people on the farm or treated as an agricultural appropriation. For instance, this bill appropriates $191,000,000 to the Bureau of Public Roads for the building of paved roads in every part of the Nation. Certainly, it should not be said that this $191,000,000 is for the sole benefit of the farmers, for industry and the general public receive just as much or more benefit from these paved roads than does the farmer. Also the bill appropriates $17,000,000 for the purchase of forest lands and $14,000,000 for the building of roads and trails through the forests. None of this should be charged to the farmer. The bill carries $7,000,000 for the Weather Bureau, and certainly the city man, the railroads, the shipping interests, the air lines and the general public receive more important benefits from this appropriation than does the farmer.

I have taken the time to go through the bill carefully and here are the items carried in this bill which should not be charged against the farmers of the Nation, totaling $253,000,000, and which brings the appropriations for the direct benefit of the farmers under $1,000,000,000:

Weather Bureau .....	$7,181,570

Beltville Center	90,000

Total	253,242,134

May I say in conclusion that I hope the day will soon come when it will not be necessary to draw upon the United States Treasury to supplement the income of the farmers of this Nation; but the Congress has passed numerous laws favoring industry and other classes of our population which have had the effect of reducing the returns from farm commodities, and until this inequality is corrected I feel fully justified in asking and expecting the Congress to make provision for the farmers of this Nation, who are in fact the foundation of our democracy.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point and to include a paragraph from a report by the House Committee on Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered. There was no objection.

AGRICULTURE EXTENSION SERVICE

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I rise briefly to thank the conferees for the consideration given to the item of $203,000 for the Agriculture Extension Service. The purpose of this appropriation was fully covered in the debate on the original conference report in the House last week.

The amount originally requested was $300,000; that was the amount authorized by S. 518 which was adopted by Congress a few weeks ago. Of that amount, $97,000 was to increase the agricultural extension work with settlers on Federal reclamation projects, as recommended by the Repayment Commission, appointed by the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to a direction of the Congress. That is a worthy item and I hope that it may be included when next appropriations are made for a new fiscal year.

The remaining $203,000, the amount in the supplementary conference report adopted today, is the amount needed to maintain the regular extension service of county agents and home extension workers in 21 States at the level they have had for many years. Members will remember that authorization was given in S. 518 adopted by this Congress after the original agriculture appropriation bill had been considered.

The full $300,000 was then added to the appropriation bill by the Senate. The agreement on the $203,000 compromise will be appreciated by the farmers and farmers' wives who recognize the county agent and home extension work as a truly constructive service to agriculture.

Assuming the acceptance of the $203,000 figure means that the item as it now stands is for the regular extension work, I insert at this point the allotments to States concerned indicated in the report of the House Agriculture Committee on S. 518 (H. Rept. 384, 76th Cong., 1st sess.):

Arizona	$6,954.81
Colorado	15,430.86
Connecticut	8,038.48
Florida	8,463.97
Idaho	9,452.27
Maine	3,842.36
Maryland	3,742.21
Massachusetts	7,130.11
Montana	19,672.10
Nebraska	6,683.54
Nevada	12,426.57
New Hampshire	4,151.71
New Jersey	13,949.41
New Mexico	8,330.89
North Dakota	6,418.37
Oregon	16,784.58
South Dakota	21,409.07
Utah	8,735.46
Vermont	1,521.83
Washington	906.24
Wyoming	18,996.48

The report further says:

These 21 States have received practically no increases in Federal funds for extension work since the initial Bankhead-Jones appropriation for the fiscal year 1936, while the remaining 27 States and Hawaii, because their shares of Bankhead-Jones increases exceeded reductions made in the other two funds, have received net increases each year.

Mr. THORKEKELSON rose.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] such time as he may desire.

Mr. THORKEKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] is recognized.

Mr. THORKEKELSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THORKEKELSON. May I ask why I am not recognized to submit a request to extend my remarks?

The SPEAKER. Time in consideration of this amendment is under the control of the gentleman from Georgia. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] is recognized.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I desire to join other Members in congratulating the conferees and the House committee on reaching an agreement with the conferees of the Senate that appears to be generally satisfactory. I assume, of course, that there will be no serious objection to this particular motion. I agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] that this is really a very important matter. It is money well spent, and so far as I know, there has been little or no objection to it.

While I am on the floor, permit me to say that I am especially pleased that this House, a few moments ago, approved the compromise agreement reached by our House conferees with conferees from the other body to appropriate $40,000,000 the next fiscal year to continue the splendid farm-tenant program under the Bankhead-Jones Act.

Of course, I am disappointed that the farm-tenant program is to be cut $10,000,000 below the amount authorized by the Congress for the next year. It just occurs to me that any cut below what has been definitely promised during the ensuing year in this important program cannot possibly be justified. But I am sure many will rejoice that a final agreement has been reached and acted upon by this House. I predict that every dollar of the $40,000,000 will be wisely loaned to deserving farmers during the coming year, and that all of it will come back to the Treasury with interest.

May I add that I am glad to have had a part in the fight to continue the farm-tenant program in the United States. It has been no small struggle to secure adequate funds to carry out the provisions of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act. Many appear to be under the misapprehension that this is an outright gift instead of a self-liquidating loan. May I express the hope that this great worth-while program will expand until every deserving tenant farmer of Oklahoma, as well as in other States where farm tenancy has grown to be a problem, who really desires to own his own farm, may have the opportunity of proudly becoming a home owner. [Applause.]

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, once more, to preserve the integrity of the RECORD, let me say that as the bill left the House it included $25,000,000 for farm-tenancy loans. The Senate added a like amount—not the whole amount but merely another $25,000,000. In the final conference the amount was reduced to $40,000,000 instead of $50,000,000. I could not let this opportunity go by without expressing my views on the matter; and I did so vote in conference. I voted so because the testimony before the House committee showed that 40,000 farmers were either slipping into tenancy or had been dispossessed and were on the road to tenancy every year. Now, we come along and vote a very substantial amount of money to be used for the purpose of reducing farm tenancy, rehabilitating perhaps 4,000 or 5,000 farmers every year when 40,000 are being reduced to tenancy.

My objection to the program and my objection to the proposal made by the President in the recent spend-lend letter to Senator BYRNES relative to more money for farm tenancy is that we are barging out into a problem that is of astronomical proportions. I am not willing to commit myself, or my people, or this Congress, to that kind of program that will end not in $100,000,000 but in the billions if you follow it through logically. My basic opposition lies in the fact that it is a huge problem of which we can only scratch the surface. I do not believe, in spite of the fact that several votes have been had on this question in recent years, that the Congress quite knows what it is getting into in this farm-tenancy program.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman knows that the House has gone on record several times and voted the full amount; and just a few moments ago the House confirmed the amount of $40,000,000 in this bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am not unmindful of the fact that we have voted on it several times, but in spite of that I express the feeling that perhaps a great many Members did not quite see through this program or understand its full implications or perhaps the way in which this money was distributed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DIRKSEN. With pleasure.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. In view of the vote just a few moments ago, approving the $40,000,000, does not the gentleman think that is confirmation of this program by the House at this time?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I know they voted approval, but I can only reiterate what I have said that any measure the House has proposed is merely a scratch on the surface of this tremendous problem.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does the gentleman recall that Secretary Wallace testified before the Committee on Agriculture just as the gentleman stated that 40,000 farmers are being reduced to tenancy each year?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman is correct.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON].

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the subject under discussion.

Mr. THORKEKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana objects.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON] such time as he may desire.

Mr. MAHON. As a Member of the House and as a member of the Appropriations Committee, I have been very much interested in the item which the House has just approved regarding farm tenancy. When this matter was presented to the House several days ago, I fully supported the motion of my good friend, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] which provided that we appropriate the whole $50,000,000 which Congress had previously authorized for this work next year. Failing to secure the $50,000,000, I am glad we at least have $40,000,000. This ought to provide for a substantial increase in the farm-tenancy program next year.

Certainly nothing could be much more important to the stability of the Nation than widespread rural-home ownership. Two out of every three farmers in many of our agricultural areas are tenants. This is a bad situation, and I feel that it is the duty of Congress to do everything possible to assist the program of home ownership on the farms. Home ownership promotes good citizenship, it promotes soil conservation and rural stability, it promotes most of those virtues upon which this Nation must rely for its future security.

Mind you, under this legislation we merely lend money at a low-interest rate to deserving farmers for the purpose of assisting them in the purchase of farm homes. The selections are made by the Farm Security Administration with the greatest care, and I am positively convinced that these loans will be repaid to the Treasury. In fact the purchasers paid last year 138 percent of the amount of maturities.

Every incentive to home ownership must be promoted. Nobody is deceived into believing that this appropriation of $40,000,000 will enable every farm family to own a home. But it will give further encouragement to our rural population and help in providing a solution to one of our major farm problems.

As long as I serve in Congress I shall do everything in my power to increase the farm income and to promote home ownership. I know something about the weary road that many of those who seek to live by tilling the soil must follow. The Government cannot provide a substitute for hard work, but the Government can well afford to encourage home ownership through this farm-tenancy program. I am for it strong. I am hoping we can do a much more extensive and a much better job of it in the future.

Mr. THORKEKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] 2 minutes.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise in opposition, but I do wish to remark, following the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], that often I have recited on the floor of the House that the Treasury report lists as assets the notes of farmers dating back to 1921 for seed loans. It does not appear that they have ever marked off a loss, but still carry them as assets.

I cannot help but doubt that they have ever tried to enforce reimbursement on anybody if fraud on the part of the applicant had been proven. I simply reiterate these so-called assets, and I do wish that some committee would take action to mark off these losses. I do not think anybody wants to continue carrying losses as assets.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, how do you go about it, under the rules, to get a minute to talk on this thing?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. You do not unless the gentleman from Georgia yields.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is what you call arbitrary control?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I thank you.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I may say that the gentleman from Michigan has not requested any time.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; I did a minute ago.

Mr. TARVER. I am sorry. The gentleman usually is sufficiently vociferous that I can hear him very easily, but I did not hear him.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY] is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I guess I will rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman cannot do that now. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY] has been recognized.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I call your attention to the fact that I have been here 6 months and I have spent pretty nearly all of that time studying these various agricultural matters. I do not believe there is a Member in this room or on this floor who can stand up here and tell us what the Farm Security Administration has done with the money that has been appropriated to them already or what it is going to do with what it gets under this bill. I do not think there is a Member here today who would want to vote for the Farm Security Administration starting new farmers off with farms and giving them the money for 40 years at 3 percent and then go to the average farmer and expect him to vote for you next time when that farmer knows you are charging him 4 percent for the same money that the other farmer gets at 3 percent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Then the gentleman feels that the average farmer takes the position of the dog in the manger. If he has to pay 4 or 5 percent he does not want his brother farmer to get anything for 3 percent?

Mr. MURRAY. If it is not, it should be that way.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON].

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I did not sign the big conference report. This is a bill that exceeds in appropriations for agriculture any that we have ever had before. It was testified in the hearings by the Secretary of Agriculture that the total income of the farmers for the Nation was about $8,000,000,000. The appropriation for the Department of Agriculture is about one-eighth of the total income of the farmers of the United States. This does not include appropriations made by the State departments and aid to land-grant colleges. This just gives you an idea of what the percentage of the total farm income is that is appropriated in this bill.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]. [Applause.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, permit me, with proper humility, to thank the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER] for his graciousness and generosity in yielding to me 1 minute of the time which he controls.

Bear with me, please, while appreciation of the applause which just greeted me is expressed and let me convey to you the thought that there is a realization on my part that a part of it at least was at my expense, rather than as a tribute.

However, he who frequently and frankly states his views on highly controversial questions with more than the usual degree of positiveness should expect that others will follow a similar course.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER] a few moments ago, when I was seeking information as to the method of obtaining time to speak on this occasion, somewhat facetiously said, in substance, that I speak frequently and vociferously. He was correct in that statement.

Those talks have at least one merit. They usually are limited to 1 minute. The vociferousness may be due in part to the difficulty of making one's self heard while audible conversation is being carried on by the Members of the House; in part, to the sincerity of my convictions.

The frequency of those utterances may be accounted for by the fact that day after day numerous complaints come to me from the men who ordinarily provide the jobs in this country and at this time would give employment, and as well from men who want to work, who would work, at the jobs which industry under ordinary circumstances would be able to provide, but who cannot work because of the National Labor Relations Act and the manner in which it is interpreted and administered by the National Labor Relations Board.

Sometimes, too, in these 1-minute talks I but act as the mouthpiece of some Member of the majority who conveys to me a thought or an unfortunate or a disagreeable experience which has happened to an employee or an employer in his own district, with the suggestion that I bring it to the attention of the House. Always am I glad to give utterance to these complaints. I realize that, under the present administration, even though experiences of constituents of Members on the majority side lead the Members irresistibly to the conviction that the N. L. R. A. must be amended and no matter how courageous the complaining Member may be, in view of the purge put on during the last campaign and the ever-increasing power and vindictiveness of the administration, many a man who would otherwise express his convictions on the floor knows that the exercise of discretion is the better course; that any other course might lead to his defeat, to his replacement by a less competent, less patriotic man.

It is regrettable that such a situation exists. It exists only because of misplaced trust, and it is my hope that after the next election no longer will the man who then sits in the White House be able to follow a policy of rule or ruin; that after 1940 the good old American custom of being permitted to express an opinion on the floor of the House without political reprisal will again be the privilege of Congressmen.

The country is asking, the country is demanding, that the Wagner law, so-called, be either repealed or drastically amended. Until the House takes up for consideration and disposes of this question of repeal or amendment of the Wagner law it is my present intention to, as often as may be permissible, call the attention of the House to the intolerable situation.

With reference to this farm proposition Secretary Wallace, testifying before the Agriculture Committee, said in substance that each year saw the failure of some 40,000 farmers; that each year some 40,000 farmers, if they continued to follow their occupation, became tenants instead of farm owners. If that be true, and the Secretary should know what he is talking about, where then is the logic or the good sense in appropriating some $40,000,000 to purchase farms to put men with their families into an occupation when we know that the end of each year will see more men fail at that occupation than we are able to put back into it?

Why ask men, men with families, to engage in an occupation before we have removed the causes which each year bring about the failure of 40,000 farmers? [Applause.]

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, the hearings indicate that while 40,000 tenant farmers are being added to the tenant population of the country annually, that is not occasioned altogether by the loss of ownership of farms, but is brought about by the coming to majority of young men of the tenant-farmer class, who themselves become tenant farmers after arriving at manhood. This does not mean that the tenant population of the country has been materially increased by reason of the loss of farms by those who have theretofore been landowners.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER].

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the votes by which the various motions were agreed to was laid on the table.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. St. Claire, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill

(H. R. 5610) entitled "An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 15, 39, 41, 55, 75, 122, and 127; further insists upon its amendments Nos. 1, 59 to 71, inclusive, and 101 to the foregoing bill, disagreed to by the House; requests a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. OVERTON, Mr. GLASS, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. BURKE, Mr. KING, Mr. NYE, and Mr. BRIDGES to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

NEUTRALITY ACT OF 1939

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House Joint Resolution 306.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House Joint Resolution 306, with Mr. CLARK in the Chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JARMAN].

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am in thorough accord with the statement repeatedly made heretofore on this floor to the effect that the whole people of America are keenly desirous of remaining aloof from war. I cannot conceive of any responsible group of our people not sharing that ambition. I believe that is the unanimous attitude of the Members of this body and of the body across yonder. There is certainly no one of us who would wish to bring on a general world war or the participation of the United States in it should it occur, the only difference of opinion being the difference in ideas as to the proper approach to that end, and these ideas are quite varied, indeed. This is by no means a partisan question. Every man and woman is entitled to his or her opinion. I concede to everyone the belief that his or her attitude, if carried out, would bring about that end.

What is the situation which confronts this Congress? It has been mentioned several times on the floor that we now have a piecemeal neutrality law but, as far as I have heard, reference has not been made to the fact that the Congress has never attempted to pass an ironclad, permanent neutrality law. I am sure this applies as well to yesteryears, since the laws and policies formulated then are not still in force, as it does to recent years.

In 1935, as you who were here will recall, the Congress passed the first modern neutrality law. The first section of that law was an embargo against the shipment of arms, ammunition, and implements of war. But was that a permanent provision? No; at the end of it there was the requirement that the section cease to exist on February 29, 1936. On that very day, February 29, 1936, the Congress amended the neutrality law and in doing so stipulated that that provision should expire on May 1, 1937, I believe, showing very plainly that the embargo against the shipment of arms was never intended to be a permanent part of the law of our land.

In 1937 the Congress passed an entirely new neutrality law and added to and coupled with that embargo a cash-and-carry feature, new at that time. At the end of that paragraph appeared the provision that the cash-and-carry feature should expire on May 1, 1939, again indicating that there was nothing sacred about the law, and not only that it was not sacred but that it was not intended as permanent legislation. So we were confronted this year with the knowledge that the cash-and-carry feature would expire automatically on May 1 of this year, and with the knowledge that when that happened we would be left with a piece of a neutrality law—a piecemeal law which was very dangerous as it was left.

Consequently the Committees on Foreign Affairs of both the Houses and the other body arranged to hold, and did hold, very extended hearings—open hearings—to which all concerned were invited. Everyone who had any idea about neutrality legislation was welcomed before that committee in the House, and I am sure the same was true in the Senate.

The hearings continued for approximately 30 days, as I recall, in an effort to do what? First, to remedy the situation resulting from the expiration of a part of this temporary neutrality law; and, second, to create a law which we propose as the first permanent law the Congress has ever passed on the subject of neutrality, and which we hope will tend to keep us out of war should war come.

I say permanent because it will be the first neutrality law without a provision for the expiration of some phase of it. Of course, changed conditions may prompt some future Congress to change it. And bear in mind that it is being proposed at a time when the countries of the world are at least ostensibly at peace. I am impressed with the thought that no one can legitimately charge that this proposed change in a temporary law before war occurs would indicate a desire on our country's part to favor one country or another in any prospective war. On the other hand, we are trying to establish permanent rules of the game now before war occurs so that in the event it does, we hope it will not prove necessary to change the rules in the midst of the game and thereby indulge in an unneutral act toward the country such change does not seem to favor.

After these hearings a bill was dropped in the hopper by the acting chairman of our committee. Something was said here yesterday about whether or not that was his bill. I wish first to pay tribute to the very excellent and able way in which the acting chairman of our committee, in my opinion, has handled the very difficult situation which confronted him. He has been indefatigable in his efforts, and always eager to be fair, absolutely fair, to everyone concerned. I want to go on record as being of the opinion that he has done a difficult task well. He introduced this bill and, as I say, the question was raised whether it was his bill or the bill of the State Department. I have not asked Chairman BLOOM who wrote that bill. It bears his name. But I do say this: If I had in mind introducing a neutrality bill, I certainly would not ask the advice of the Treasury Department or the Department of Justice or the Agriculture Department about how I should formulate it, just as I would not consult the doctor about a legal case or an attorney if I had typhoid fever. On the other hand, I would go to those professionally versed, those technically experienced in that peculiar line of endeavor, those familiar with foreign affairs. I presume that Chairman BLOOM in his good judgment did that very thing.

Every one of us fully realizes that with a body of 435 Members here and 96 Members across the building it is absolutely impossible for anyone to be entirely familiar, and it is ridiculous for one to claim that with all of his multitudinous duties he can be thoroughly familiar, with all phases of everything that is happening here.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. JARMAN. Consequently, we must trust to the leadership and guidance of someone familiar with foreign affairs. It is natural to look to the Secretary of State, just as it is natural in connection with other matters to turn to the heads of the departments concerned, or others professionally and technically qualified. For my part, I am perfectly willing to trust in matters of foreign affairs that very distinguished gentleman who so long and so ably served in this body, who served similarly in the other body for a number of years, and who, in my opinion, will go down in history as one of the great Secretaries of State of this Nation. [Applause.] I am perfectly willing to follow the suggestions of Secretary of State Cordell Hull in such matters, particularly at a time so serious as we fear this to be. I say further that if Secretary Stimson were Secretary of State when an important matter such as this was involved, I would feel the same way. I do not believe we have ever had a Secretary of State or a President of the United States who would deliberately lead us down the road to war for an ulterior purpose. I do not think President Roosevelt would do it; I do not think President Coolidge would have done it, President Hoover, Harding, Wilson, or any other President. As a matter of fact, my confidence in the American people is such that I just do not believe men of that type, who would deliberately involve us in war against the wishes of our people, ever become President or Secretary of State. At any rate, this bill, no matter who authored it, we think in the committee is a good bill, which will contribute toward the peace of America.

Time is not available for me to discuss the details of the measure. Suffice it to say that it does, and very naturally so, I think, in the main carry out the ideas of the State Department. In case of war it requires a proclamation naming the states involved in it; the restriction of travel by American citizens on belligerent vessels; transfer of title before departure of goods destined for belligerents; continuation of existing legislation restricting loans and credit; regulation of solicitation and collection in this country of funds for belligerents; continuation of National Munitions Control Board and system of arms export and import licenses. In other words, it is practically the same as the present legislation with the exception that it drops the arms embargo in section 1 and substitutes what is tantamount to cash for the cash-and-carry provision which expired on May 1, but for the elimination of section 3 which has recently been agreed to, there would have remained much of the carry provision, but as it is, it only eliminates the embargo and retains the cash of the cash-and-carry.

Now, with what reception has the proposed legislation met in the country? As I read the press of the Nation, the responsible press, I think it has met with rather universal commendation. I read a paragraph from the June 15 issue of the Providence (R. I.) Journal. I do not know whether it is a Democratic or a Republican publication. I do not care, for this is not a partisan matter. I think it is rather typical of the press comment which has occurred:

The neutrality bill, favorably reported by the House Foreign Affairs Committee, is not the best measure Congress could adopt, but it is so much better than the existing law that it should be passed at the earliest opportunity. It is, at best, a compromise, but a compromise in the right direction, for, as a fixed legislative neutrality policy, it would be infinitely safer and more effective than the present law.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JARMAN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MAHON. I am very much interested in this legislation. There is one point I would like for the gentleman to discuss for my benefit and that is the cash-and-carry provision. If this bill passes and it would transfer title at the water's edge if the belligerent nations want to buy our goods, what will be the status of the ships that carry this contraband of war, say it is carried in American vessels?

Mr. JARMAN. They will do so at their own risk in accordance with international law.

Mr. MAHON. Is there any legislation that states that or is that on the basis of international law only?

Mr. JARMAN. International law, insofar as the vessels are concerned. Section 2 after the proposed amendment will stipulate that citizens of the United States shall travel on belligerent vessels only at their own risk but it makes no reference to American vessels.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Alabama 1 additional minute.

Mr. JARMAN. In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I hope that my dear, old friend, Dr. EATON, beside whom it is my pleasure to greatly enjoy sitting on the committee, and those who have given expression to a similar attitude, are correct in the belief that it matters not what legislation we pass here this week. I hope that no war is in the picture, no general war, and if one occurs I, above all, hope that America will not become involved in it. I must confess, however, that it is impossible for me to view the situation so optimistically. On the other hand, I feel that the situation confronting us here is probably one of the most serious ones which has confronted the Congress since World War days, and that the vote you will cast in a day or two will probably be the most important one that you gentlemen who were here in 1918 have cast since that time and certainly the most important one that we younger Members have ever cast. Consequently, I beseech you to have in mind when contemplating that vote only the best interests of this great country and people of ours. Please do not consider whether a certain vote would be beneficial to the Democratic or Republican Party, for or against President Roosevelt, or for or against Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy or any other country. I cannot too strongly urge you to have in mind only the performance of your duty under the oath you took in January to serve our country to the best of your ability. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER].

IS NEUTRALITY FOR PEACE OR FOR WAR?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, as I have listened to the debate on this neutrality bill, House Joint Resolution 306, I have been more and more impressed with the thought that the problem of neutrality is just a matter of exercising common sense and good judgment. That is what George Washington did, likewise James Monroe and other Presidents who were faced with the problem of foreign wars and international entanglements. Did they have any neutrality laws to guide them? No; they had only their fine, inherent, American common sense, and that is mainly what we need today.

We do not need to pass a so-called neutrality law. We do not need to continue year after year and Congress after Congress to take up our time and waste our energy in considering and debating bills of this sort which are of a very negative and questionable value.

The fallacy and ineffectiveness of such a pursuit is shown by the results of such attempts during the World War. Also, I have searched the pages of history for the past 300 years, and in every case where neutrality was sought to be invoked as a national program as a safeguard of peace, or as a guaranty against war, it failed. Either war resulted as an effect of the plans evolved, such as in the case of Catherine, Empress of Russia, back in the eighteenth century, or the international situation became so involved that it was necessary to resort to the most extreme measures to avoid more disastrous results.

Not that the ideal of neutrality as such is not a worthy one, and not that it would not be highly desirable and effective, if it could be applied according to the rule laid down in the dictionary. But rules governing human relations, and especially relations of an international character such as war, cannot be either so precisely defined or exactly applied as the ideal expressed by Webster's Dictionary.

His definition says "it is the condition of being uninvolved in contests or controversies between others—the state of refraining from taking part on either side."

By the nature of things, especially from the angle of business and nationalities in this country, we are not able to be neutral, and we cannot fit that definition. We are already taking sides in a real or in an imaginary war in Europe. We are already to a large degree either pro-British or pro-German in this country. We were in 1917. There must be something wrong with our national mind, including our so-called leaders of thought and action, when we can continue to mislead ourselves by talking about neutrality year after year as a means to such a highly desirable end as peace is.

WHAT IS THE TROUBLE WITH OUR THINKING?

What is the trouble with our thinking on this subject? The main trouble is, if you want my opinion, that we make the mistake of considering that the variable-meaning word

"neutrality" is synonymous with peace. History proves that it is not so at all. And in the United States today there are at least three main kinds of neutrality. To one person neutrality means one thing and to another it is still a different thing; but to us who are unsuspecting and who like nice-sounding catchwords and phrases it means peace, or at least a way to peace.

The three main kinds of neutrality in America indicate easily and clearly that at least two of the proponents of their type of neutrality are as far apart as the East is from the West, which condition certainly by no stretch of the imagination can be said to be conducive to or synonymous with peace. There is the dictionary kind of neutrality, which I have already pointed out we do not have in a nation so constituted as ours; secondly, there is the pro-English type of neutrality; and thirdly, the anti-English type. Which one are you for? This bill, expressing, as it does, the cash-and-carry theory of neutrality, is said to be the pro-British type. I assume that it is also, therefore, pro-Japanese, since these two nations alone in the world, except for the United States, are most able to buy goods, ship it on their own boats, and provide naval armament for the protection of their purchases in transit as provided for under cash-and-carry neutrality.

Is it not evident that any neutrality which favors one side or one nation over another is, by the very nature of the thing, not neutrality? What will the other side to which the act is detrimental say and do? No, such neutrality is neither synonymous with peace nor is it properly termed "neutrality." It might more appropriately be termed a "plan for war."

What we need in this country is not a neutrality act of this sort in the guise of peace but rather a constructive movement for peace. The people of this Nation want peace, and their democratic demands should be heard. Those who place their hopes for peace on any neutrality measure which the various factions in this Nation will make into law are due to be disappointed, I anticipate, for it will be only a vain hope, a snare, and an illusion, like a mirage beckoning a lost and thirsty traveler across an endless desert. And the end will be only the same—death, dried bones, destruction, and desolation.

Perhaps we could take a lesson in such problems from Holland, Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, who kept out of the World War, although they were much closer to it than we were, and who also had to stay neutral. They really did it, and thereby set for us an example. In delving into their problem and trying to ascertain the secret of their success in that respect, I found that they lost large numbers of ships and of people, but still they persisted in real neutrality. For instance, little Holland lost 290 vessels, with 201,797 gross tons, or 16 percent of the total tonnage of their fleet. They lost 1,025 men, leaving 568 widows, 1,648 children, 125 fathers and mothers, and 40 other dependent relatives, or 3,281 people altogether. We lost 343,090 tons; so Holland lost almost as much as we did, but she did not go to war. Norway lost 976,576 tons; Denmark, 210,880; Sweden, 180,415; but they used their common sense.

It has been said in the course of the debate on this bill that it is impossible to magnify the importance of this bill. That may be true; but there, again, the speakers are insinuating or making the bill connote peace. Ask yourself, "Is neutrality as in this bill really neutrality, and, therefore, is it really peace? Is this bill aimed at preventing or at heading off war?" No. An examination of it indicates that it is aimed at exactly the opposite; that is, at participation, by trade, in war—at aiding and abetting war. I presume, for that reason, it is very acceptable to the war profiteers and war mongers. In fact, all neutrality legislation has always aimed at aiding in the prosecution of war. In other words, the assumption of the proponents of neutrality legislation is that there will be a war; and they are making plans, if not to profit handsomely by it, then at least to take as much advantage as possible out of it.

In fact, I think it might be generally stated that the trouble with all or most of our peace plans and war preventatives is that they are not war preventatives; they are only peace plans of a selfish, introvert type to be utilized after war has broken out and the carnage rages.

OUR REAL PROBLEM NOT CONSIDERED

Another aspect of this whole matter of war and peace is entirely left out of consideration in this bill, and it seems to me that it is a much more important and serious matter as far as we are concerned. That is the situation in the Orient—the Far East—where we need to watch our step, not only because of our interest in China but also because of our interest and stake in the Philippines. Apparently the sponsors of this bill are contemplating only the European aspects. In other words, putting out the fire in the shed while the barn burns down. Any neutrality legislation to be worth while must attack and solve the Japanese problem. We need never become involved in Europe—but we are already involved in the Pacific with our $840,000,000 of investments in the Philippines and our sovereignty over those very rich islands, which, under the present law, is to continue until 1946.

Much has been said in the past about an impending Pacific era. Few of our people now realize that with Japan's invasion of China, which is in fact one of the most momentous events in all history, the Pacific era has been ushered in. It is here. Henceforth, what may transpire in this section of the world is likely to be of even greater concern to us as a nation than what may happen on the other side of the Atlantic.

America is essentially more of a Pacific than an Atlantic power. It is feasible to construct a bridge across the Behring Straits whereby it may be possible to drive our motor cars across onto the Asiatic Continent. In fact, the shortest distance from St. Louis, in the Mississippi Valley, to Hankow, in the Yangtze Valley, is along the great circle traversing the Behring Straits. Furthermore, we have a greater Pacific coast line than has any other occidental nation.

Modern means of communications have brought our Asiatic neighbors into a stone's throw of us. We can now hail them across the water. We cannot any longer build up walls of isolation shutting us away from the rest of the world. The Pacific Ocean is no longer a formidable barrier separating us from the Far East—better now called the Far West.

Because of the pull of destiny, we have spent hundreds of millions of dollars and sent tens of thousands of our nationals to China and Japan in efforts to carry American ideals and ideas to the Far East. Millions of Chinese and Japanese speak, read, and write English, and understand us and our institutions. How many Americans are there who possess a substantial knowledge of China and Japan and understand the psychology of the Chinese and Japanese?

Many Americans with little background in things Japanese but prominent in our business, industrial, professional, and other walks of life have visited Japan, and their Japanese hosts found it easy to fit them with Japanese glasses and ear trumpets, which enable them to see and hear the Japanese versions of far eastern matters. Some of these, after returning to America, continue to wear these Japanese glasses and ear trumpets, indicating quite clearly that our whole educational system is at fault in not furnishing our people with the means of a good education in the fundamentals of the civilizations and institutions of these important Asiatic people.

Japan moved into Manchuria, a territory larger than Germany and France combined, and now threatens to occupy an area greater than the United States with a population nearly three times larger, yet we show more concern over the taking of a few hundred square miles in Europe by a European power than we manifest toward what constitutes a major threat to our entire civilization.

If Japan succeeds in its conquest of China, it will not stop there. Japan's occupation of Hainan Island and the Spratly Islands indicates that it has greater ambitions. It aims to set itself up as master of the Pacific. With 150,000 Japanese in the Hawaiian Islands, how long will it be before it will demand that the Japanese flag be hoisted over this important American outpost in the Pacific?

Japan has exhibited a persistent interest in the rich fishing resources in the Alaskan waters. How long will it be, should it succeed in its ambitions on the Asiatic Continent, before Japan pushes its fishing fleet into our northern waters and begins colonization in Alaska?

With a Japanized China, here is where America will be hoodwinked into believing that it is going to get some good business. Exact long-term credits, the Japanese will take American machinery, but only to build up industries whereby they may use Chinese labor on mere subsistence wages, so as to outdo the rest of the world in production costs and then flood the world with their cheap manufactured products. We shall then be faced with a real "yellow peril." Thus we shall be invited to furnish capital and equipment to help Japan undermine our wage scales and standards of living. Furthermore, Japan will be especially concerned with building up war industries on the Asiatic Continent, so that we shall be asked to help finance these, as we have been helping Japan to build up war industries in Manchuria. What sort of investments will these present for American capital? And still we seek to pass a neutrality law which fails to take this situation into consideration.

And so in conclusion, let us beware, beware of placing our hope in false cures, in neutrality which is not neutral according to a definition of common sense, and in peace measures which are really war abettors, for the day will surely come if we do not, when we will be weighed in the scales and found wanting. Unless we do an about face in these great problems, our people will continue to cry "Peace! Peace!" and there will be no peace. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS].

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this is an example of an all too prevalent American idea that you can do anything you want by merely passing a law. Peace cannot be guaranteed by law. No neutrality act we can pass can keep us out of war, if our foreign policy is unneutral. Congress cannot limit the constitutional powers of the President of the United States in foreign affairs. Congress can, however, keep from him additional powers to be unneutral, such as are granted him by the Bloom bill.

It has been said that no new powers are granted under this bill. Under the Bloom bill, with the four amendments that have been suggested, the President can sell arms to one belligerent on credit and require another belligerent to pay cash. Under this bill he can bar shipments of arms or other supplies—get that—other supplies to any belligerent when he suspects, but cannot prove, that they are going to be transferred to a tender or supply ship, whatever that is, by requiring a prohibitive bond under section 7, while permitting shipments of arms to go to another belligerent in American vessels.

These powers are given because this law consists of 2 new sections and 14 sections from the old law, which contemplated an arms embargo. With the arms embargo in the law, the other sections fit. With the arms embargo out, the bill becomes a new means for unneutral acts on the part of the President, if he desires to be unneutral.

The psychological effect of this bill may be enormous. I, for one, hope that consideration of this bill will not take the form of a referendum as to whether we are pro-British or pro-Hitler. I hope that our consideration of this bill will tell to our people and to the world that we are against war; that we are for peace; that we are pro-American and not pro anything else; and that we are united.

I want to suggest that if this bill is disposed of one way or the other by a close vote it will show an apparent division in our people and on this floor that does not in fact exist.

The real issue in this bill arises from a fundamental difference as to the way to peace. The President's policy is to use the threat of our power to preserve a balance of power in Europe. Opposed to this is the traditional American belief that the way to peace is for us to be neutral, not biased; friendly, and not threatening. The President's theory is that if we stop war from starting we will not get into war.

If we make a strong enough bluff we can prevent war from starting. The President has no more intention of taking us into war than he had 6 years ago of taking us into debt; but we have learned that despite good intentions, if you spend enough you get into debt, and if you threaten enough you get into war. [Applause.]

The road to war is paved with threats.

I have two criticisms to make of this policy. First, we have no assurance that the threat of our force will be sufficient to stop war in Europe. No one can give us that assurance.

Second, if the bluff does not work, we will inevitably go into war. When any international incident takes place on the faith of our promise to one side or threat to the other, the pressure to make good our bluff, to back up our commitment will be irresistible. If you think that our eventual entry into the next war is inevitable, then vote for the Bloom bill as is. The Nazis say it is going to be total war or total peace. If you believe that and believe we are going in if it starts—arms, ammunition, ships, and men—then vote for the Bloom bill as a desperate attempt to stop the starting of our war by a threat to one side and a promise to the other that if it starts "we're coming over, and we won't come back till it's over over there." But do not fool yourselves or our people or foreign nations. If we make this threat and it does not work, if our bluff is called, if this warlike bid for peace fails, if in spite of our threats or because of our promises, war starts, then we will never back up and we will never back down. That is the chance you take in the administration's gamble.

Now, I am opposed to taking that gamble. I think the way to peace is not to promise or threaten to fight anybody or help fight anybody. We cannot decide what other nations will do. But no matter what they do, we are not going over to the next war. They will have to bring it over here before we fight. [Applause.]

We cannot guarantee peace to the world. We cannot even guarantee that our policy will keep us out of war, but if you think that our entry into the next war is not inevitable, but is a possibility that you want to resist with all your might, early and late, vote against the Bloom bill as is. If you believe we have a duty toward world peace, and that duty is to stay out of war and war economy and war psychology, so that when other nations are exhausted, either by war or by frenzied preparation for war, to the state that they are ready to sit down around the table again and try to restore international peace and order and justice, we can then go to that table as the strong and neutral and friendly big brother of them all, and not the weakened and biased and hateful partner of one side—if that is what you believe, then vote against the Bloom bill as is. [Applause.]

The test will come on restoring the arms embargo. America has come to believe that the sale of arms to belligerents is immoral, un-Christian, and leads to war. Most experts on international law favor retention of the arms embargo. For instance, Professor Borchard, Dr. Lage, Walsh and Healey, of the School of Foreign Affairs, and Charles A. Beard, the eminent historian. Mr. Hull says that he can see no difference between the selling of arms to belligerents and the selling of anything else they may need. That is because he thinks of neutrality in terms of helping or hindering some other nation and not in terms of helping ourselves. [Applause.]

I emphasize this particularly: There is no principle of international law that requires us to sell arms to anybody.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. SHANLEY. Did I understand the gentleman to say that Professor Borchard is against the arms and ammunition embargo?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. He is in favor of the arms and ammunition embargo.

Mr. SHANLEY. Has the gentleman authority for that statement?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. One of my colleagues will give the gentleman the authority for the statement.

Remember, Mr. Chairman, there is no principle of international law that requires us to sell arms to anybody in order to be neutral. There is a principle that requires us, if we sell anything, to do it impartially, and if we sell arms there is one way of getting into trouble.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, in view of the very compelling speech the gentleman is making I yield him 5 additional minutes.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Hull admits, however, that under international law arms are "absolute contraband"—I quote him—"subject to seizure by a belligerent."

Everyone admits that the international law of search and seizure has been repealed by the airplane and the submarine.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. By what authority may the airplane or the submarine repeal international law.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I shall state the answer.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the gentleman realize that that statement involves an entire surrender of all the ideals of civilization?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I do.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am astounded at that statement.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Every expert who has appeared before our committee has admitted that the airplane and the submarine completely change the law of search and seizure, because you cannot search and seize a surface vessel from the air or from under water. If you know it is a neutral vessel not carrying means of murder but a peaceful cargo, you will hesitate to molest it and offend a neutral. If, on the other hand, you know it is laden with arms, "cooperating with similarly minded governments," to use the President's term, you will sink it, for you will know you have nothing to lose, you will not be offending a real neutral, and you will be sinking absolute contraband.

There is a clear distinction between the selling of arms, which can only be used for murder, and other commerce which may be helpful to belligerents for peace or war. Everyone recognizes the difference in law and in morals between the sale of whisky by a saloonkeeper and the sale of a load of corn by a farmer, even though whisky can be made out of corn. That is the distinction between the sale of arms and the sale of anything else. Our purpose in an arms embargo is not to help or hurt any other nation but to protect ourselves, to keep ourselves at peace.

Mr. Hull and some of our colleagues apparently feel that we should arm the victims of aggressors. I feel that we should stop arming aggressors. The results of Mr. Hull's mistaken policy are apparent in the Orient where the evasion of our arms embargo law has resulted in the arming of Japan. I think we are making a great mistake trying to determine our possible conduct in a future war in Europe before we determine our present conduct in a present struggle in the Orient. [Applause.] We have let our excitement about what may happen to our remote interests in Europe blind us to what is happening to our immediate interests in the Orient, where our treaty rights are being violated daily. We should stop arming Japan instead of planning to arm Europe. [Applause.]

We have been told that the reason for repealing the arms embargo is that Germany has taken over 27 munition plants in Austria and 11 plus the Skoda works in Czechoslovakia. This argument came to us from the State Department and through administration spokesmen on this floor. Does that mean that we are to become the arsenal of Europe? I am going to vote against that.

There was no evidence before our committee that any nation wanted us to do this. The embroiled nations of Europe have changed their economy so as to produce all the arms they need. Within the past few days Chamberlain and Daladier have spoken of their tremendous capacity to produce arms. I think we should not change our peace economy into a war economy. We should furnish to all nations the products of peace and assert our rights as a friendly neutral to do so. We should furnish to no nation the means of murder in wartime. [Applause.] There is no proof that our munitions industry needs the stimulus of such a foreign war boom for our national defense. That sort of boom was described by our President in 1936 as "fool's gold" when he said:

To resist the clamor of that greed, if war should come, would require the unswerving support of all Americans who love peace.

Let us use these words of our President from 1936 to defeat the warlike policy of our President of 1939. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. SCHIFFLER].

Mr. SCHIFFLER. Mr. Chairman, we have before us for consideration at this time House Joint Resolution 306. We are called upon by this resolution to repeal and modify the existing law relating to neutrality. I am convinced that every Member of Congress is deeply conscious of the responsibility involved in dealing with this important subject. I also want to feel that every Member of the House is sincere in his or her convictions. Neutrality is something that cannot be invented, neither can it, in its strictest sense, be completely legislated. True neutrality comes from the enactment of clear-cut, unequivocal declarations of the policy and laws of a nation, impartially and unbiasedly executed by its Executive.

In the light of our past experience and with our knowledge of human nature, our unbiased and impartial conduct is highly essential to a conscientious discharge of our solemn obligations. Let us forget partisanship; let us forget every "ism" and every nation, save and except Americanism and America. Having turned our eyes heavenward for guidance at this momentous time and cleansing our thoughts of every unclean emotion, we must dedicate ourselves to the task at hand with utmost sincerity. I have implicit faith that we can legislate in a truly American manner. To allow fear, prejudice, partiality, or any other emotionalism to control our conduct, rather than calm judicious reasoning, is to be unfaithful to our trust.

I regard Judge John Bassett Moore and Prof. Edwin Borchard as the outstanding American authorities on international law and neutrality and want to quote the words of Prof. Edwin Borchard relating to neutrality. These views in the main are supported by Judge Moore. Speaking upon the subject of neutrality, Professor Borchard said:

After 1914 a marked change occurred, especially in relation to Europe. For a variety of causes set out in numerous books, America lost its bearings. The magnitude of the European contest, association of cultural and economic interests with one side, and extraordinary ineptness in dealing with the legal problems involved, ultimately induced a state of hysteria which plunged the Nation into war. The European feud, more senseless than its predecessors of earlier centuries, was pictured as a struggle between morality and immorality, and in the search for an explanation to the American public for the country's departure from its fundamental traditions, there was invented at the last minute that curious battle cry of making the world "safe for democracy." This must have surprised some of the Allied Governments. It was in that era that there was born the ideal of allied force in the service of righteousness, later called "collective security," which has done so much to prolong the world's misery by viewing the world through the doctrinaire spectacles of political theology instead of with the open-minded detachment of a physician seeking a correct diagnosis of a social disease. The war produced a psychosis, continued in the Treaty of Versailles and its aftermath, of which articles 10 and 16 of the Covenant were an exemplification rather than an antidote. Historians and psychologists will in due course explain why some of the principal governments of the western world so long divorced themselves from reason and experience and immersed in illusions, permitted the corrosion of the political and economic structure.

For it is an unfortunate fact that the attempt to maintain the adventitious status quo of 1919 through devices of the Covenant and by more formal military alliance resulted in an intensification of nationalism almost unprecedented. At the same time, the less informed were led to believe that phrases such as "collective security" interpreted by the League of Nations, manifested a growing internationalism and disposition to adopt peaceful processes in the adjustment of international differences. The disintegration, however, was a fact, the pacification but a fiction. When we consider the progress that had been made in the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries in the development of arbitration and conciliation, it seems deplorable that since 1917 the world's moving forces should have come under the domination of a psychology which encouraged treaties and pacts signally devoid of conditions essential to international appeasement, while cherishing the delusion that peace was being promoted by arrangements for the use of combined force against any revolter against the status quo, vilified in advance by the opprobrious name of "aggressors." Of this process perhaps the most unfortunate phase was the popular illusion that peace might be assured by bestowing seductive names such as "collective security," "preventing war," "international co-operation," on contrivances, like sanctions, which were hostile and warlike in character. In defense of this form of deception, it can only be said that it was not new. Article 47 of the Treaty of Westphalia, 1648, embodied a similar device. As Judge John Bassett Moore has said, all human history is characterized by the tendency to seek salvation in phrases rather than in acts.

We were told during the Great War that the balance of power and military alliances were the source of the world's ills and that these ills could be cured by replacing alliances with a league of nations—once inadvertently called a "disentangling alliance." But just as an alliance is a combination of two or more nations seeking certain common ends, so the "collective security" of the League was marked by an identical characteristic—it sought the attainment of common ends by the use of coercion and military force. But it is to be feared that the education of men's minds to be compulsive features of "collective security" has had disastrous effects. It has diminished appreciation and respect for the less dramatic peaceful processes of effecting change and settling disputes.

But is it a fact that the destructiveness of modern war makes it more important than ever to avoid its recurrence. What has been done since 1917 is no contribution to that end. The interdependence of a narrowing world might have been remembered at Versailles. If the constant danger of war is to be surmounted, thought should be given to the revival of the well-tried methods of restoring trust among the nations and then working to develop the existing institutions for cooperative effort to appease, conciliate, and adjust conflicting claims. The task is now infinitely more difficult than it was before April 6, 1917, when the United States officially abandoned neutrality.

In the revision of the Neutrality Act, which will probably be undertaken in the January 1939 session of Congress, it is believed that Congress should either (a) repeal the entire act and depend on the rules of international law, the existing neutrality statutes, and the constitutional duty of the President not to involve the United States in a foreign war, or (b) reserving to itself, with the President, the privilege of determining the existence of a "state of war," Congress should retain the present act, amending it in the particulars above mentioned only. The second alternative is preferable.

I am firmly convinced of the wisdom of Professor Borah's views. I do not believe that we can substitute anything more sound and advantageous to the United States.

The resolution, as presented to us, omits the arms embargo. This has been considered vital and necessary by this administration for the past 4 years. What, if any, reason exists for its abolition at this time? The only reason thus far appearing and advanced by those sponsoring the dropping of the embargo is that the Berlin-Rome axis is superior in armaments and also superior in capacity to produce armaments and munitions of war. This is a matter of testimony before the Committee on Foreign Affairs. We have also been told in that committee that Britain and France cannot meet the present armaments of the Berlin-Rome axis, nor the productive capacity of the munition plants now in possession of such axis. To my mind this does not present a sufficient reason for the United States to become involved. In view of this expressed attitude, it amounts to an outright alliance with the so-called democracies of Europe. Is this justifiable? Is it neutral? I say to you that every conscientious American citizen who knows the importance of such action and of its consequent outright alliance with the so-called democracies of Europe is unalterably opposed to the repeal of our arms embargo law. I most firmly and unalterably oppose the repeal of our arms embargo law. We have deep sympathies in this country, much sympathy at this time for those of many nations. It is regrettable that conditions over the world are so chaotic and with so much hatred prevalent. Shall we become involved in this seething mass of distraction and ultimate destruction?

Never in the history of the United States have the words of our first President advising against meddling and entangling alliances been more valued and applicable than today. No American boy, with my vote, will ever cross the seas to engage in another futile war. My motto is, and has been, "not one drop of American blood shed elsewhere than in defense of America on American soil, and the last drop of blood of every American for the preservation of American ideals, institutions, and country."

As one of the family of nations today, we recognize certain obligations to all others within that family. This cannot be discharged by the mere shrugging of shoulders at what occurs in the world, neither can it be discharged by becoming involved. Our potential value lies in the fact that by remaining neutral, strictly neutral, and in exerting our continued efforts in behalf of peace, we may mediate as an impartial arbiter the troubles of others, but such mediation can only come, and our greatest value be utilized, when and if we approach all involved nations as their mutual friend.

Granting that ambitions exist in Europe, and granting further, whether or not they are justifiable, is it not far better that we, as one of the signatories of the Kellogg and Nine Power Pacts, and as the leading uninvolved nation can render far more valuable service to civilization by remaining absolutely neutral and placing ourselves in a position to offer peaceable settlement? Would it not be better to ascertain the objectives of Japan as well as the objectives of Germany, of Italy, and of all other so-called war desiring nations, and most carefully weigh the result of such inquiries and ascertain their reasonableness and prospects of amicable settlements? Is the world today without reason? Is the world without competent leadership to strive to attain such peace by logical and reasonable methods? Must the nations of the world continue to look upon war as inevitable, well knowing that in the end war utterly destroys and is the creature of impotent hatred, illogical and unnecessary? Our position, if we stop long enough to appraise it, is the favored. We are blessed with the opportunity of being the peacemaker. Shall we cast aside our opportunity?

The law we seek to enact is neutrality and impartiality, not an alliance and partnership that will inevitably lead us to a war soon after such becomes a reality. Not a single, sane, American citizen, notwithstanding that his or her sympathy may be with one or more of foreign countries, will ever again involve this Nation in a war, other than for defense of American soil, or in defense of our Territories, and in support of our obligations under the Monroe Doctrine.

I have not heard a single, sound, sensible, or patriotic reason suggested for the change of our law at this time. My sympathy goes to the unfortunates in other parts of the world. I am deeply sorry for them and regret that circumstances and conditions, in many instances, beyond the control of the affected individual, causes them to suffer. As a friendly Nation, interested in the preservation of the peace of the world, and manifesting as an indication of good faith, our impartiality and neutrality in its every constructive phase, we can and should use that good influence throughout the world to maintain such peace. The proposed resolution would utterly destroy for us every advantage we now have of this character. It is unnecessary for me to say that the next major war will carry civilization back hundreds of years, and, when ended, leave the world prostrate, impotent, and humiliated in the sight of our God. It is unpardonable. Our acts, motivated by the noblest intentions, can and should prevent such from occurring.

I am quite firmly convinced that we should approach this legislation calmly, patiently, and with the purest of motives, bringing into use our highest intelligence and seeking the light that will give to us the most highly satisfactory result.

I shall introduce an amendment to the pending resolution. That amendment will provide for the reenactment of the so-called cash-and-carry provision of our existing neutrality law, and which provision is the only one that expired May 1 of this year, and which will leave, as the same now exists upon the statute books, our neutrality law. This is done with the sincere hope that after calm and unemotional deliberation, we of the House will have done our duty in a manner that best befits the honor and integrity of our country.

I urge you at this momentous time to give of your very best intelligence and judgment to this proposition.

Mr. MASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHIFFLER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. Does the statement the gentleman read from Professor Borchard state clearly that it is his view that we should retain the present embargo upon arms which is in the present act and not, as has been suggested, throw it away?

Mr. SCHIFFLER. His language is that the Congress should retain the present act, amending it in the particulars above mentioned, he says, reserving to itself with the President the privilege of determining the existence of a state of war.

Mr. SHANLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHIFFLER. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. SHANLEY. Has the gentleman the entire speech there?

Mr. SCHIFFLER. I have not all of it.

Mr. SHANLEY. There is another sentence. May I use your time to make this statement?

Mr. SCHIFFLER. No; I cannot yield for that.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute to answer a question.

Mr. SHANLEY. I happen to have had correspondence from Professor Borchard and I certainly do not want to put it in the RECORD without his express permission. I think I can enlighten the gentleman. The quotation the gentleman has given is correct, because I have a copy of it here. May I say, though, I will give the House the benefit, if I can obtain permission from Professor Borchard, of exactly how he feels on the present neutrality bill, the Bloom bill, and also the amendments. I trust that his general thought on embargoes, which I am trying to express, his long-range policies, divorced from all outside things, will be driven home to the Members of the House by the statement I just made. Later on I will develop that thought. I sincerely thank the gentleman for allowing me to take his time.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHIFFLER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. The gentleman will remember that Professor Borchard in 1936 appeared before the Foreign Affairs Committee, and in speaking about the neutrality law said, "It will contain an arms embargo provision as well as a prohibition of loans."

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS] such time as he may desire.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, this particular legislation now before the House of Representatives is not a neutrality bill. On the contrary, it embodies two adverse principles. In the first place, it repeals the arms embargo. In other words, the munition makers of the United States are definitely interested in this bill to the end that they might sell implements of death and mass murder to the nations of the world. In the second place, it is a delegation of further powers to the President.

It has been well said that "in this short bill there are 29 places in which we find such phrases as 'when the President deems it wise,' or 'when the President proclaims,' or 'when the President shall find.'"

Section 1 of the bill begins with these words:

That whenever the President shall find.

Section 2 of the bill contains this language:

Except in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe.

Section 3 contains a like statement. Section 4 deals with bonds, securities, and other obligations of the government of any state involved in war, and it ends with this proviso:

Provided, That if the President shall find that such action will serve to protect the commercial or other interest of the United States, he may, at his discretion, and to such extent and under such regulations as he may prescribe, except from the operation of this section ordinary commercial credit and short-time obligations in aid of legal transactions and of the character customarily used in normal peacetime commercial transactions.

Said section 4 contains two further delegations of the President to make rules and regulations.

Section 5 authorized the President to make such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe. Section 6 merely excepts American republics from the act.

Section 7 of the bill contains this language:

If the President, or any person thereunto authorized by him, shall find, * * * he may prohibit.

Section 8 begins with these words:

Whenever during any war in which the United States is neutral, the President shall find.

And the same section carries a provision that exceptions may be made by the President.

Sections 9 and 10 grant no specific authority to the President, but section 11 begins with these words:

The President may from time to time promulgate such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with law, as may be necessary to properly carry out any of the provisions of this joint resolution.

The remaining sections of the bill deal with the penalties, definitions, appropriations, and repeal of the prior act.

While the proponents of this bill flatly deny that this is a delegation of power to the President, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN] attempted to encourage us with these words:

I would rather, however, have the destiny of this Nation and its foreign affairs in the hands of Franklin D. Roosevelt than in the hands of Adolph Hitler, Benito Mussolini, or that son of heaven over in the Orient.

This is, indeed, encouraging, and I want to thank the gentleman for calling it to our attention.

That same gentleman from Pennsylvania did make a statement with which I can agree 100 percent. He said:

Neutrality is a matter of human behavior.

I wonder how he would classify the behavior of the President of the United States and some of the members of his Cabinet in some of their recent statements, wherein they have preached a doctrine of hate against certain European nations. I wonder how he would classify the behavior of the proponents of this bill, who repeatedly have taken the floor and with passion kindled the fires of hate against Germany, Japan, and other nations of the world. That same gentleman bemoans the fact that the arms embargo is an aid to aggressor nations. I, then, assume that by his behavior he has already selected the aggressors. Yet in another breath he says that it is not our fault that some nations of the world do not have a navy with which to come and buy arms and ammunition. But in that case it is all right to aid and assist the nations who do control the seas. He contends that it is unneutral to create a situation which aids a nation with a large army, but a neutral act to aid a nation that has a large navy. That gentleman, in commenting upon the aid that this bill will give to Great Britain, said:

I prefer indirectly to aid those nations which have demonstrated a friendly attitude toward us than to abet the onward march of totalitarian powers.

If neutrality is a matter of human behavior, is such a declaration a neutral one?

It is well that we ponder the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] when he said—

If communistic Russia enters into an alliance with Great Britain, as now seems probable, the bill becomes also a Russian munitions bill.

We are at peace with all nations. I contend that our attitude should be one of peace toward all nations including Germany, Japan, Italy, France, and England, and all the rest of them. The people of those countries are all good people. It is the people who fight the wars not the governments. Admitting that modern transportation and communication have brought the world close together, we should take a lesson from those great, far-seeing, Christian nations of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway who steered clear of the folly of the last World War. I hope that the Congress will pursue a policy of peace toward all nations and will reject this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTON].

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire at the outset to depart for a moment from my prepared remarks in order to refer to a matter which is germane to the present discussion and of vital importance. We are here considering a bill by which we hope to contribute to the unity of the people of the United States, and to secure for them the blessings of peace. There can be no effective unity and no promise of permanent peace that does not rest upon tolerance, mutual respect, and the broadest possible friendship among all classes and groups of Americans, regardless of race, creed, or color.

This morning my attention was called to certain remarks on the subject of communism which were inserted in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 2804, by a Member of my own side of the House. In the course of his address, and with no apparent relevance of justification, he proceeded to read off a list of the names of committee chairmen who are members of the Jewish faith. I quote the paragraph:

The leaders in Congress are well known, but the chairmen of the committees often remain in obscurity. We have the following distinguished gentlemen occupying the following important positions as chairmen and ranking members of committees: The gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM], now acting chairman of Foreign Affairs Committee; the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], chairman of the Rules Committee; the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN], chairman of the Immigration and Naturalization Committee; the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH], chairman of the Patents Committee and ranking member on the Civil Service and Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committees; and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], ranking member on the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Chairman, I cheerfully acquit my colleague of any intent to question the patriotic character of these our fellow Members or to infer that they are in any way associated with or sympathetic to any "ism" of whatever kind or description. Such a suggestion would be infamous. Yet even the gentleman will admit that his reference, taken in relation to its context, lends itself to a shockingly untrue and cruel inference. Even the shadow of that inference must be removed. Some voice of protest and apology must be raised from my side of the aisle.

I have the honor to be one of the Representatives of the greatest cosmopolitan city in the world. It owes its creation, its prosperity, its character, and its infinite variety to the fact that people of every race, creed, and color have contributed to it their industry and peculiar genius. In my own district I last year had occasion to deliver a high-school commencement address to a class of 450 pupils, and I was told by the principal that it included representatives of 59 nationalities. Fifty-nine different racial cultures, but all Americans. Picturing the lands from which the parents of those boys and girls had come, the hope and joy with which they had turned their eyes toward these shores of freedom and opportunity, I felt that that was the most inspiring audience I had ever faced. It was an epitome of America; a symbol of our country at its best.

Among the 22 Members of this House who represent that great city I am the only Republican. I am, I believe, the only Protestant. I would be unworthy of my city, untrue to the confidence of the people who sent me here, if I did not take this occasion to utter on behalf of these colleagues of ours, most of them from New York, the profound regret which I know is in the hearts of us all. The glory of America is that in a world of intolerance and hate we here have kept bright the torch of tolerance. In this House sit men of every creed and color, and this is not true of any other great legislative body in the world. We glory in this distinction. That any remark, however innocently intended, should stain the pages of our CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by seeming even remotely to countenance race or religious intolerance, is an occurrence which must have brought to all of us a sense of profound regret and sorrow. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, if I may, I will address myself very briefly to the bill.

Nearly 50 earnest patriotic Americans, including recognized authorities on international law and leaders of organizations devoted to peace, appeared before the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Whatever the views of any Member of the House may be on neutrality legislation, he can find in the printed volume of the committee hearings eminent authority to support his position. If you favor the Neutrality Act now on the statute books, you are in distinguished company. If you prefer the bill here proposed, you need feel no embarrassment; leading international lawyers agree with you. If you would have no Neutrality Act at all, wise and famous folk are on your side. An eminent professor of international law who poured into our ears 30 minutes of fervid appeal for the act of 1937 was followed immediately by an equally eminent scholar who flatly contradicted everything the first gentleman had said.

Where the doctors so violently disagree the layman may be pardoned if he approaches the whole question in a spirit of humility and with a certain degree of skepticism. Let us consider briefly what common-sense facts there are on which we might all agree.

First, we are certainly unanimous in the conviction that never again must American boys be sent across the sea to fight on foreign soil. That certainly is a unanimous sentiment in both Houses of this Congress. The World War cured us permanently of any naive belief that we can by war effect a permanent peace. It was said on this floor yesterday that we ask nothing as a result of the war and got exactly what we asked for. Eugene Debs expressed it better. He said all we got out of the war was influenza and the income tax. He was right and was sent to jail for it. [Laughter.]

Second, we are confronted with the fact that we are not here weighing the merits of the proposed bill against a perfect neutrality act. There can be no perfect neutrality act. We are considering the proposed bill against the law now on the statute books—a law providing a mandatory embargo without the cash-and-carry provision. If we vote down the proposed bill, the present act will continue to be the law.

It has been said again and again that the operation of the present act does not result in neutrality.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTON].

Mr. BARTON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I repeat, the operation of the present act does not result in neutrality.

It favors strong nations as against weaker nations, and warlike nations against peace-seeking nations. The strong warlike nations are already armed and supplied with munitions. Under international law the weaker or peace-seeking nations have a right to purchase their means of defense in the markets of the world, our own included. The present law denies them that right. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] observed in his testimony before the committee, if France had had a similar act during the struggle of our American colonies for independence, that struggle would probably have been lost.

The first question to be decided, therefore, is this: Do we want this session to Congress to adjourn with the present Neutrality Act on the books, knowing that it is not a real neutrality act at all but is, in fact, a law that makes us a silent partner of nations that have prearmed?

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the honorable Representative from New York yield?

Mr. BARTON. I shall be happy to yield after I conclude the main part of my statement.

This is my second question, and I would like the members of the Committee to favor me with their special attention on this: Is not the proposed act, the act which we are now considering, after all, a much more realistic thing than the law now on the books? I do not see how we can get anywhere if we are not frank about these matters. Let me give you an illustration that I advanced in the committee hearings. It takes into account a new factor in the international situation to which little reference has been made but a factor with which I have been familiar for many years in my own business activity; I refer to the radio. Have you ever stopped to think that if another world war were to come it would not be fought alone on Flanders fields but would be fought in every home, apartment house, and farmhouse in America? We would not see it with our eyes but we would hear it. Thirty million radios would bring it to our very firesides.

Suppose that this Congress should adjourn on August 1. Suppose that on August 2 London or Paris should be bombed from the air. I am not naming any aggressor nation. Just suppose that either of those beautiful historic capitals were suddenly and without warning attacked. Suppose that out of our 30,000,000 radios should come the crash of the dome of St. Paul's Cathedral or the tower of Notre Dame. Imagine the screams of women and the cries of children piercing the air of our living rooms. Does anyone in this House believe that any mere statute could stand a single day against the tidal wave of moral indignation that would sweep across our land? Would not an outraged public opinion compel the President to call us into immediate emergency session for the repeal of section 1 of the present law? Is not this a realistic appraisal of the situation? [Applause.] If it is realistic, if the odds are overwhelming that we would be called upon to repeal section 1 after hostilities started, why is it not wiser to effect the repeal now before any hostilities begin and while our action may perhaps serve in some small measure to prevent their beginning? If we wait until the war has started, our action becomes an act of war. Will that not more seriously threaten our peace than as though we face the facts and act now?

The amendments mentioned yesterday will remove certain objections which might have compelled many of us to oppose the bill. I congratulate the majority members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs on their wisdom and open-mindedness toward suggestions from the minority. There is one other amendment which I understand may be offered tomorrow, and which, I hope, will have the thoughtful consideration of the Committee. It will propose a modified embargo, relating not to the broad classifications of "arms, munitions, and implements of war," which are phrases that can be stretched to include almost any product or material, but limited only to "lethal weapons."

What our people object to principally is the manufacture and shipment of the guns and shells with which slaughter is accomplished. They object for two reasons. First, they do not want to be partners directly in the shedding of human blood. Second, they do not want to dislocate their own economy to build up a huge industry in the manufacture of ammunition and arms. Now we are speaking frankly, and I think honestly there is not the same general objection to the purchase by foreigners of our airplanes, trucks, automobiles, petroleum, cotton, or even scrap iron, though it is recognized that these are essential to the successful conduct of war. These are not primarily lethal weapons. An embargo limited to lethal weapons might well satisfy the desires of those of our fellow citizens to whom the embargo idea has become a symbol and a hope. On the other hand, the foreign nations which may find themselves attacked are not short of lethal weapons. They have already dislocated their economy to erect vast plants for the making of guns and ammunition. What they need are the other materials and products that we have in abundance.

If a compromise is possible on the middle ground of a modified embargo, it would surely represent a consummation devoutly to be hoped for. It would comfort our own people. It would be an adequate warning to aggressor nations, and at least a partial reassurance to nations likely to be attacked. It would render obsolete 3 months of high-powered oratory which has already been manufactured for discharge in another body. An atmosphere of peace and goodwill would descend upon the Capitol and we could all go home.

I earnestly commend this further compromise to the majority members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Yesterday, along with many other able speeches, we were enlightened and inspired by the remarks of the genial gentleman from New Jersey, Dr. EATON. I gathered from his observations that he regards all neutrality laws as a delusion, but as between two evils he would choose the lesser. I am happy to find myself in such distinguished fellowship, for his views and mine are much alike. My chief objection to so-called neutrality legislation is that it tends to lull the Nation into a false sense of security. The habit has grown in the past 6 years of deluding our people with the notion that age-old problems can be waved away by the too simple expedient of passing a law. A good test of any proposed piece of legislation is this: Does it offer an easy solution to a problem rooted deep in human nature and human experience? If the answer is yes, the proposal is probably of little or no real value. Expedients such as manipulating the currency, increasing public debt, and price fixing by bureaucratic decree have all been tried again and again. They seek to substitute legislative legerdemain for sound thought, hard work, and a realistic facing of the facts. Inevitably, they fail.

The same criticism lies against so-called neutrality laws. They offer too much at too cheap a price. The real price of peace is eternal vigilance against propaganda, foreign or domestic, and a stern determination to resist all waves of mass hysteria.

To this must be added a willingness on the part of the American people to sacrifice time, thought, and effort for the election of representatives whose devotion to peace is beyond all doubt. Said the President on August 14, 1936:

The effective maintenance of American neutrality depends today, as in the past, on the wisdom and determination of whoever at the moment occupy the offices of President and the Secretary of State.

These are true words and no legislation can change them. Peace should be an issue in every national campaign. The true safeguard of peace is not to seek to tie the hands of the people's elected representatives but to elect representatives whose judgment and self-control the people are not afraid to trust. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, the honorable Representative from New York is well aware that the situation in Europe has developed to the point that there are two groups of nations, "axes," as they are called in modern parlance—Moscow-Paris-London and Rome-Berlin-Tokyo. The gentleman says that the President should have as much authority as possible.

Mr. BARTON. I say the President does have.

Mr. TINKHAM. Does have.

Mr. BARTON. Under the Constitution.

Mr. TINKHAM. Under the Constitution. Laws can be passed, however, which can curtail some of the powers. What I desire to ask the gentleman is this: Has not the President reiterated statements, and has not the Secretary of State likewise stated, where their position is and with what axis it is?

Mr. BARTON. I do not so interpret the messages of the President. I am willing to go along to the point of believing that every President of the United States, whether he has come from our side of the House or the other side of the House [applause]—

Mr. TINKHAM. That makes no difference.

Mr. BARTON. Has sought to keep this country out of war.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTON. I yield.

Mr. BARRY. The President of the United States made a speech at Chicago in which he wanted to quarantine certain nations.

Mr. BARTON. I think he did.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman made a statement in which he said he thought that there would be reaction on the part of people listening to the radio in case Paris or London was bombed. Would not the same thing happen if St. Peter's in Rome or the Vatican was bombed?

Mr. BARTON. I think there would be the same reaction. I think that when you are here trying to enact an embargo with the idea that it can stand up against an outraged public opinion, manufactured through 30,000,000 radios, you are dealing in something utterly unrealistic.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER], a distinguished World War veteran.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, it is rather difficult to intelligently discuss this neutrality bill, inasmuch as we have been informed that the bill as it will be finally presented is not the bill now before the Committee. Apparently it has been agreed to accept four rather important amendments. May I say to the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut, so that he will not be misled by the applause from the Republican side, that we are not unanimous over here that we want to go back to international law if by so doing it means going back to international world conditions as they existed from 1914 to 1917.

At the outset may I state that I do not pose as an authority on international law. I am not even a common garden variety of lawyer, but I am here as a Representative of 421,000 men, women, and children now residing in Hartford County, State of Connecticut. As the Representative of those people, I consider it my solemn duty to aid in the enactment of any law that will lessen the likelihood of our becoming involved in any future war, and the opposition to the enactment of any law that increases the likelihood of our becoming involved in a foreign war.

I am convinced that the enactment of House Joint Resolution 306, now before us, will definitely increase our chances of participating in another war, and for that reason alone I shall vote against this resolution. In the first place, it is my sincere belief that if we enact this resolution we will have placed our country right back where it was in 1914. We will have made of the United States a huge ammunitions dump. What have we left from that great crusade of 1917? We entered the World War to fight a war to end all wars—to make the world safe for democracy. We won the war but lost the peace; we failed to carry our objective. Hence, all we have left to our advantage is the lesson we should have learned from our past experiences, especially our experience during 1914 to 1919.

I say to the Members of the House that if we today are going to forget the lesson of the World War, then the sacrifices of those who participated in that war will have been in vain. Who is there here today who will say that the shipping of munitions and other supplies to Europe was not a factor in our becoming involved in the World War. Within my district are many manufacturers of munitions and war materials; that industry is a perfectly legal one, employing hundreds of men and women, but I feel confident that if they felt that selling munitions to a foreign country which was engaged in a war would increase the danger of our becoming involved in a war, they would not want to sell such munitions. The owners and employees of those factories are loyal peace-loving Americans, but they are not war mongers.

In any discussion of the question of neutrality it is essential that one bear in mind the strict definition of the word itself. A standard dictionary defines neutrality as "that state of being a neutral nation during a war. Neutrals may not lend money to either side, guarantee a loan, or allow the passage of belligerent troops through their borders. A neutral refrains from interference in a contest; is friendly to each of two or more belligerents or at least does not take the part of either or any belligerent." Such is real neutrality, and if we are to be successful in drafting a bill which will maintain such neutrality, we must keep this definition always before us.

It is my opinion that our neutrality law should act automatically to prohibit the sale of war materials to both belligerents in the event of either a declared or undeclared war, and should even extend, in essential cases, to the complete cessation of all trade with belligerents. Our neutrality law should not empower any one person to determine the existence of a state of war, as the Bloom bill would do, for immediately thereby the idea of neutrality may be nullified by an unneutral personality. In this regard, I would amend section 1 (a) of the Bloom bill, which now reads—

That whenever the President shall find that there exists a state of war between foreign states—to read—

That whenever there exists a state of war between foreign states.

And for the purpose of clear definition, a state of war should mean not only aggression and active combat but the more subtle modern type of invasion whereby troops of one power invade and possess territory of another power, overpowering resistance.

I earnestly feel that an effective neutrality law can be drafted only if that law strictly prohibits commerce with belligerents, and financial aid, either directly or indirectly. In this regard I would make only the exception of permitting traffic in medical supplies with belligerents. For purposes of regulation, the authority to determine the application of a neutrality law should be automatic and should not be left to the discretion of any individual. The act should be so drafted, and all terms should be so defined that an embargo would immediately become effective on war materials, general commerce and travel would be prohibited, and all financial dealings with each belligerent would be prohibited.

As a signatory of the Kellogg Pact to outlaw war, the United States pledged itself to deny aggression as a means to the settlement of international disputes. In this regard then, is it not compatible with the American spirit that we draft a neutrality law providing for the severance of trade relations with belligerent nations? Only by a complete withdrawal of American interests from foreign disputes can we preserve an American neutrality. It is purely a question of gambling the loss of dollars in trade against the loss of life, morale, and property as a sacrifice for neutrality.

It would appear that the entire crux of the question is centered in the idea of control—whether or not it is wise to place the power to regulate the application of neutrality in the hands of any one person. There may have been a time when it was wise and necessary for Congress to give broad discretionary powers to the President, but the need of granting such powers certainly does not exist today. In case of emergency Congress, with our rapid transportation, can be assembled within 36 hours. If we are to have a neutrality act which is to function for the avowed purpose of keeping America out of war, would it not be better to frame an act which would be automatic, which would function of itself, and would thereby eliminate the element of personal control? Human nature is fallible, and to leave within the power of any one person complete control over the lives of the citizens of a nation is an idea which has been alien to the American system of democracy and government throughout its history. Would it not be better to frame an act which definitely limits and defines the ideas which the American people wish to see put forth as a basis for the establishment of this country as a neutral nation? It is not a question of politics or personalities but it is a question of vital importance to the future of our country and the well-being of our people. If we can legislate in a manner to preserve peace for our Nation, let us so legislate as to be certain of the accomplishment of our aim. If the day ever comes when the democracies of the world are threatened, let the President come before Congress and say just what nations he wants to aid and to what extent.

Certainly our country has gained little from its participation in the World War. We have profited not at all either materially or spiritually, and it is a sad commentary if we should prove by our actions here at this time that we have not even profited by the experience. Victimized by rampant propaganda and carried forward by enthusiasm of expanding trade and commerce, we found ourselves involved in 1917 in a war which was not of our making. If, 22 years later, we have not learned to recognize those elements which embroiled us at that time, and if we cannot so regulate our actions as to prevent a repetition of the tragedy of 1917, then our participation in the World War can be written off only as a complete loss.

Neutrality is by very nature a spiritual quality, intangible but real. By this very fact it might seem fallacious to attempt legislation to control neutrality. However, by the very passage of a sound and reasonable neutrality act, one which contains within itself adequate provisions and limitations of a strictly defined nature, we would crystallize and give expression to the preponderant spirit of the American people. It would seem only logical, therefore, that the power to interpret and regulate the application of any neutrality legislation should be preserved to Congress itself, to those persons who by their very position are in close touch with the spirit of the average American citizen.

I should like to see a neutrality act which would carry of itself specific authority and regulation of our commerce, our financial relations, and the general attitude and actions of our citizens with respect to belligerent countries. Such an act should definitely limit to the extent of complete curtailment all trade and financial assistance to any and all belligerents in the event of either a declared or undeclared war. I would even go so far as to provide that all passports issued for travel in countries in a state of war or endangered by war should carry the proviso that such travel is completely at the risk of the individual and his protection will not be guaranteed by this Government. These provisions might be criticized as being too stringent, but we must bear in mind that most wars arise from the so-called "international incident," and that strangely enough it is often the curiosity of John Doe traveling in foreign countries with the bland assurance that as a citizen of the United States he is secure in all circumstances that bring about these incidents.

There is no question in my mind but what this is the most important and far-reaching legislation that we will be called upon to consider during this session. I have had hundreds of letters from constituents and, almost without exception, they have urged me to vote against this so-called Bloom bill. These letters do not come from an organized minority, they come from average citizens—men and women who vividly recall the heartaches they endured during the World War; fathers and mothers who have sons now of military age, and who have no desire to see those sons called upon to participate in a foreign war. I am convinced that the citizens of the United States long years ago determined that never again should our young men be called upon to fight on a foreign battlefield. If the adoption of this bill increases the possibility of our becoming involved in a war, then certainly every Member of this House is justified in voting to defeat the measure. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER). The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-one Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the hour is growing late and I appreciate fully that many members of the committee desire to go to their offices, complete the work of the day, then go to their homes. Of course, under the time limitation it would be impossible for me to discuss this whole matter thoroughly, but under these peculiar circumstances I do not regret the time limitation because it would be an imposition upon the Members of this body to demand that they stay here for any great length of time at this late hour.

Mr. Chairman, the present so-called Neutrality Act reached the statute books in 1937. On March 18 of that year the measure was debated on the floor of the House. I took part in that debate and registered my profound conviction that the portion of the act which has to do with the embargo against the exportation of munitions would inevitably place the United States in an embarrassing position in the future, that it would inevitably ally the United States, unwittingly of course, with the more powerful and aggressor nations as against the weak and struggling and that in such a situation lay a grave danger to the peace of the United States. I spoke as best I could in that tone and expressed my regret at the inevitable passage of the bill at that time. Upon the roll call I was one of 13 Members of the House to vote against it. I am still of that opinion. I believe the existence of that embargo against the exportation of munitions in the permanent law is a source of danger. With all my heart I hope it will be eliminated.

If certain highly objectionable features of this bill now pending before the Committee, especially that feature known as section 3 having to do with the area of combat operations, are removed from this bill, and the repeal of the embargo provision still remains in it, I shall vote for the bill.

That attitude is not a new one upon my part. Perhaps I am justified in repeating it on this occasion, because at least it can be said to be consistent with my record in the past.

Mr. Chairman, I desire, if I can in my inadequate way, to bring certain considerations before the members of the Committee. Frankly, I have never had any faith in the ability of the Congress to write into the statutes of our country a rule of conduct which will be proof against all future events. I think it impossible for us to do so, although I am willing to admit there is a body of public opinion that seems to believe it can be done—that by the mere passage of a law the country can be kept out of war.

No two wars have sprung from the same origin. History teaches us that. Nor have any two wars ever proceeded along parallel lines. Each had its own peculiar outstanding characteristics and sudden and unexpected developments. No two wars have ever been confined to the same geographical area. Sudden departures from war-torn areas occur and the scene shifts to new areas hitherto free from the curse of war. It is beyond our power to judge the future with sufficient accuracy to warrant us stating in a statute just exactly what the United States will do in the face of all events to come.

From the beginning of all these discussions, commencing in 1935, I have entertained that conviction, and upon more than one occasion in public and in private have ventured to express it. It is a dangerous thing for us to write down a rule of conduct binding and inflexible and then to find, as we inevitably will find when some unexpected and unpredictable crisis overtakes us, that our rule is out of date and worthless; indeed, dangerous; and, finding that, change the rule by our own act. The change will inevitably inure to the advantage of one belligerent and the disadvantage of his opponents. We may not intend it so, but it will be so. And when we change the rule—and in this respect I do not quite agree with the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHANLEY]—when we change a rule that we ourselves have made, after the game starts, then we have done an unneutral act.

I am not speaking about the rules of international law. I am speaking about the rules that we propose to adopt to govern our own conduct, our own rules. When we change those after the conflict starts we are in grave danger of getting into trouble.

Much has been said about the function of the President in the conduct of foreign relations. It is superfluous to remind you that the President speaks for the Nation in the face of the world. Under the Constitution he is the only one who can do so officially. True, every wise President consults not only those in his Cabinet but leaders in the Congress before he makes some tremendously important utterance. But it is his utterance, and in the power to make those utterances he possesses under our Constitution a very great power over our destiny and over the destiny, perhaps, of the world itself, in view of the position to which we have now risen in the family of nations.

I have been opposed from the beginning to the delegation of discretionary powers to the President in these so-called neutrality acts.

Perhaps my reason for this opposition may seem a little unusual; at least, it has not been emphasized in the debate up to this point. It is not because I distrust American Presidents that I dislike seeing extraconstitutional powers delegated to them in these neutrality acts, but it is rather because I have such a regard for the Presidency and fear so greatly that by these thoughtless delegations of power we shall undermine the integrity of the Presidential office in the face of the nations of the earth.

What do I mean by that? I mean just this. All these bills we have been having here for the last 4 years have sought to delegate and have delegated discretionary powers to the President; in fact, I think it impossible to draw a so-called neutrality act without delegating such powers. I cannot quite agree with the gentleman who preceded me in this debate, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER], that we can draw an act that will enforce itself automatically. I do not believe that can be done. I think it is an impossibility as a matter of bill drafting. If we are to have neutrality acts, we cannot avoid depositing power with the Chief Executive to invoke their rules and regulations, and that is the granting of a discretionary power which I think is bad for the Presidency.

Whoever occupies the White House in a time of world trouble undergoes a terrific strain. His mind should be clear. Of course he thinks first of his country. Yes, first, last, and all the time he thinks of his country, his country as one unit. He knows that when he speaks not only his home country listens but all the nations of the earth listen.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, place upon the President of the United States some of these extraordinary discretionary powers and, according to my way of thinking, you put him upon a spot not only before his own people but before the peoples of the earth. You say to him in one of these neutrality acts, "You may use your discretion as to whether or not a state of war exists upon some spot of the earth. If you think a war exists, then an embargo goes into effect. If you do not think it exists, an embargo does not go into effect." You say to him that under certain circumstances which the Congress recites, "If you make up your mind that your act will inure to the peace or the neutrality of the United States you may invoke certain cash-and-carry rules and regulations covering the commerce of the United States."

It has even been suggested, although it is not contained in this legislation, that the President of the United States be authorized to select the aggressor, to name the aggressor. I am against that as I am against all the other delegations of discretionary power, for once you force the President into possession of discretionary power extraconstitutional in character you open up the way for him to be pulled and hauled in every conceivable direction by warring groups and factions. [Applause.] You open up the way for propaganda, domestic and foreign, propaganda moving through devious channels, with plausible motives, propaganda all designed to reach the White House and get the President. And he must stand there in the gaze of all mankind, a mankind that knows he possesses these extraordinary powers, these discretionary powers, with everybody waiting to see which way he will jump. I tell you it is an unhealthy thing for the Presidential office, as well as being an extraconstitutional power and contrary to the spirit of our institutions.

The President of the United States should not be subjected to any such strain. He carries a heavy enough burden as it is, God knows, when the world is afire. We should not add to that burden by forcing him, through the passage of legislation such as certain provisions of this bill, to make decisions all alone, which decisions may have the most profound effect not only upon the history of his country, but the history of the world.

I am a great admirer of the Presidential office in the American scheme of government. It was a blessed thought on the part of the men who wrote the Constitution of the United States to establish such an office, under the Constitution, and for 150 years its occupants have performed their constitutional duty with respect to foreign relations and have enjoyed the respect of mankind. Let us never legislate in any such fashion as will even tend to undermine the integrity and the influence, world-wide, if you please, of the Presidency of the United States. [Applause.] This is my principal reason for opposing the delegation of discretionary powers, as I said a moment ago, not because I distrust the motives of Presidents, but because I have such a deep concern for the integrity and influence of that great office.

It may not seem to you to be analogous, but may I remind you for a few moments of the battle that occurred in the United States Senate in connection with the proposal that the United States become a member of the League of Nations under a covenant. I opposed the United States going into the League of Nations under the terms of that covenant, because I wanted my country to be free to do what was best for the United States come what may, unbound by any agreement or contract, implied, direct, or indirect. I feel just the same way about these so-called neutrality acts. The thing that disturbs me most about them is the fact that when we pass them we are deliberately, to the extent proposed in the law which we do pass, tying the hands of the Government of the United States. We are announcing in advance that we will do a certain thing under circumstances which we cannot anticipate. We try to describe those circumstances in the act, but we cannot come anywhere near it, and yet we give assurance to the world in these acts that we will do a certain thing. I do not think that we should ever promise the world to do a certain specific thing in advance of an unpredictable crisis. [Applause.]

Many people are of the belief, and I honor their beliefs, that in neutrality laws lies safety. I disagree. I think the safety and the peace of the people of the United States lie in their retention of the right to do what is best for America when the time comes. [Applause.] My plea is for freedom of action, and that is all. Freedom to do what is best for us, no binding rules, no inflexible regulations, maintain our self-respect, work our best for peace, but be forever free.

I feel that way about these neutrality acts, just as I did about the Covenant of the League of Nations. That was a proposal to take away from America a portion of her freedom of action, and these neutrality acts, by implication at least, propose that we shall announce in advance that we no longer demand or shall exercise complete freedom of action.

I would welcome the proposal of an amendment upon this floor to this bill striking out the whole of the bill except the last section [applause], repealing all existing neutrality acts and declining to enact any additional ones, and go back to the principles of international law which the whole world understands and under which we maintain our freedom to do what is best for us and our destiny.

This is not a partisan question. By no means is it a partisan question. It is a question which may affect the destiny of the greatest Nation upon the face of the earth—the last great Nation—perhaps there are one or two others, in which the institutions of liberty are still secure; and the best way, in my humble judgment, to keep our free institutions secure is to maintain our freedom to act as we think best for those institutions. So I make my plea, which I have done upon many an occasion in the past, that we acknowledge our inability to write a neutrality act with any degree of faith in us that it will work.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 6 additional minutes.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the honorable gentleman answer a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In just a moment.

I have faith in our people. I have faith in our Congress. I have faith in the occupants of the White House as they have come and gone. I believe we can use our best judgment when we see exactly what is facing us, but I challenge the assertion that we can use accurate judgment with respect to the unpredictable, and that is what these neutrality acts invite us to do. Which is the sounder judgment, the judgment reached by the Congress and the President jointly in the face of an emergency, the whole dimensions of which we can measure at the moment, or the judgment of the Congress far in advance of unpredictable emergencies? If we have faith in ourselves, faith in our people, we will abandon these attempts, and we will do just what we did prior to 1935, and maintain for ourselves freedom of action. True, we may make mistakes from time to time, but what human being does not, and what group of human beings does not? But that is the American way. The freedom of America is the thing we have at heart, and we cannot gain it, neither can we sustain it by bartering it away by suggestions, direct or implied, that such-and-such a neutrality policy will help one country as against another.

Already we have heard in this debate that this bill is to the advantage of a certain group of countries and to the disadvantage of another group of countries. That is a poisonous suggestion to come before the Congress; yet it is inevitable if you are going to proceed with neutrality laws. If we had no neutrality laws, that issue would not come before the Congress of the United States. When it fails to come, when we keep it out of these doors, we are a free people—free to govern our own destiny. That is all I have to say. [Applause.]

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. TINKHAM. I want to ask only one question of the honorable Representative from New York. In view of his statement, is he opposed to the proposed law now before us?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I stated at the beginning of my remarks that if section 3, which is the area of combat operations provision, which I regard as highly dangerous and a perfect example of unwise delegation of discretionary power, against which I have been inveighing—if that is taken out I shall then rejoice that the embargo section, the embargo against the exportation of munitions, is repealed. I have always been against that embargo.

Mr. TINKHAM. But you will vote—

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will vote for the bill.

Mr. TINKHAM. You will vote for a neutrality bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. May I enlarge upon that?

Mr. TINKHAM. Yes; I wish you would. I think you are inconsistent.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think I have made it plain that with section 3 out of the bill and the repeal of the embargo left in the bill I shall vote for it, but I have always made it plain that I do not think even what is left will serve the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Under the conditions which the gentleman has named, with section 3 out and the other three amendments that have been suggested in the bill, it would then be possible for our President to permit the sale of arms on credit to one belligerent and require cash from another; to prohibit, by means of a prohibitory bond, the shipment of supplies to one belligerent when he suspects that it is going by way of a tender, while permitting such supplies and arms to go on American ships to another belligerent. No such powers have ever before, even under existing neutrality legislation, been given to a President. Does the gentleman feel that such responsibilities should be placed upon the occupant of the Presidential chair by voting for this bill after the amendments have been placed in the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not believe that the President should have those powers; no. It is a question in my mind of weighing the advantage of getting the embargo out of the law and having less dangerous features remain in the law. If I had my way I would wipe out the whole thing.

Mr. TINKHAM. Why not vote against it, then?

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. BARRY. The gentleman has said that if section 16, which repeals all neutrality law, were substituted for the entire bill, he would be for it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. BARRY. Has the gentleman any objection to offering that, which I believe will carry in this House?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am a great believer, even in this case which I regard as nonpartisan, in majority responsibility, and personally I would prefer to see such an amendment offered by a gentleman on your side of the House. I will certainly support it. [Applause.]

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. DWORSHAK. From 1914 until 1917 billions of dollars worth of munitions and war supplies were shipped by the United States to the Allies in the World War. Was that policy in any way responsible for our final participation in that war?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is divided opinion upon that. Some people say "yes." The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] believes that that and similar things dragged us into the war. Others believe that was not the reason for our going in. I am one of those. But we can do anything we please about it, when the time comes if you do not bind yourselves in advance. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM].

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, for many years I have been watching the current of international affairs. For 50 years I have visited Europe, and in 1912 I predicted a great war between England and Germany.

I was educated to be a professor and writer of history. I am thoroughly convinced, with my 50 years' experience in Europe and my reading of history, that if this bill is approved by this House and finally becomes law it means war for the United States. [Applause.]

For more than a year and a half the President has been talking constantly of war. First came his so-called "quarantine speech" at Chicago in October of 1937, in which he said that there was no escape for the United States through mere "isolation or neutrality." Then he went on to say that the "peace-loving nations must make a concerted effort to quarantine and stop aggressors."

Last January, in a message to the Congress, President Roosevelt stated that whereas words were futile, there were many methods of bringing aggressor nations to account. He failed to explain, however, how hostile methods could be kept from provoking war.

A few weeks later, at a secret meeting at the White House of members of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, the President was reported to have said that America's first line of defense was in France. Was that unneutral or was it not? Was it looking to war or was it not? Was this not a complete abandonment of the American traditional policy of no entangling alliances and of no intervention in the political affairs of Europe?

In April, on his return from Warm Springs, Ga., as a sequel to his widely quoted remark: "I'll be back in the fall if we don't have a war," the President publicly adopted an editorial in the Washington Post as stating "exactly" his foreign policy.

This editorial which he adopted as stating "exactly" his foreign policy:

By "we" he undoubtedly meant western civilization. * * * In using the collective "we" the President told Hitler and Mussolini that the tremendous force of the United States must be a factor in their current thinking.

Was that a suggestion of neutrality?

During all this time President Roosevelt and members of his Cabinet have been deliberately attempting to implant in the minds of the American people a hatred of certain foreign nations with which we are at peace, and are doing their best to foster the belief that if Great Britain or France were attacked, the United States would have to take part to save the democracies of the world. He made no reference to Russia, of course; yet Russia is allied with France, and France is allied with England, and it now seems highly probable that Russia will become directly allied with England. The United States would not be fighting for democracy with Russia an ally of France and of England. And how long would the country support a Congress that placed at this disposal of communistic Russia the resources, the blood, and the treasure of the United States to maintain the communistic system of government and the communistic political power?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. TINKHAM. I yield to the honorable Representative from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is it not a fact that only a few months ago the French Government was in complete control of the Communist-Socialist coalition under Mr. Blum, spelled B-l-u-m?

Mr. TINKHAM. That is true; but they have since changed to a dictatorship. They have appointed a Premier to have full authority. They have surrendered parliamentary control to a dictator. They are no longer a democracy.

I say to this House that the issue of war is now before us and that we should not allow ourselves to be deluded by fallacious arguments into taking absolutely wrong positions as we did 20 years ago. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, why should the United States arm the rest of the world? I should like that question answered.

Why should the United States give belligerent power to Russia? If Russia is in alliance with England and England controls the sea, then Russian boats can come here and get war supplies if you repeal the salutary provision in the present neutrality law which forbids the exportation of such supplies.

Why should we consider the interests of any other country except our own? The one question to be answered is, Is it in the interest of the United States and of United States peace, of the integrity of our country and of her institutions, that we send arms and ammunition abroad?

The sale of arms and ammunition was the first long step taken by the United States toward our involvement in the World War in 1917. If permitted again it may well once more involve the United States in a European war.

As a matter of common sense and rationality, we know that the elimination of the arms embargo cannot promote our peace.

It has been repeatedly argued that there is no distinction between the sale of arms and ammunition to belligerent nations and the sale of many other materials which can be made into arms and ammunition. The following article which recently appeared in the press answers such arguments completely:

In recent public statements regarding the administration's amendment of the Neutrality Act to permit the sale of arms and ammunition to belligerent nations, administration spokesmen such as Secretary Hull and Senator PITTMAN have advanced the argument that there is no logical difference between the selling of such articles as high explosives and machine guns and the selling of commodities like wheat, cotton, motorcars, or typewriters.

Therefore, they say, unless we are prepared to forego exporting our cotton and our wheat, logic compels us to abandon our present policy of regarding the sale of arms to belligerents as unneutral and to adopt instead a policy of selling arms to belligerents just as we would permit the sale to them of cotton shirting, wheat flour, or canned peaches.

This argument, it is submitted, is specious, sophistical, and dangerous nonsense. It is based on a premise which is false in history and false in fact.

The fact is that arms and ammunition are by their nature highly specialized commodities, which are specifically and primarily designed for the destruction of human life and the destruction of property, and which are adaptable to very little else. As such they have a very special status in commerce, a status which is fundamentally different from that of the ordinary objects of trade which are useful in peace as well as in war.

This fundamental difference of character between arms and other objects of trade has been recognized throughout the history of international law in the form of the distinction made between absolute contraband and conditional contraband of war. A neutral shipping arms to a belligerent has always done so at his own risk. The arms he ships are subject to seizure and forfeiture as absolute contraband of war by other belligerents. His government is unable to protest such seizure without incurring the charge that by seeking to protect the unneutral conduct of one of its citizens it is itself acting unneutrally.

All the more fully is this charge incurred when the Government itself is the moving force in the shipment of arms. In such cases a government which seeks to arm one belligerent as against another is generally regarded as acting unneutrally and as inviting by its own act the possibility of warlike reprisal on the part of the offended nation. As in 1917, a nation which falls in the performance of its neutral duties may well find itself involved in a war which a more meticulous observance of neutrality might have avoided, a danger which will not be escaped by trick transfers of title which deceive no one.

Against this, the right of a neutral to ship ordinary articles of commerce to belligerent nations has always existed on an entirely different footing. In theory, such shipments are immune from seizure, provided it can be shown they are not destined for use by the armed forces of a belligerent. And in practice neutrals have been successful in maintaining this right, depending on their military and naval strength and their determination to assert their rights as neutrals. Mr. Hull himself has justified a recent loan to invaded China on the ground that it would not be used for belligerent purposes and has apparently succeeded in imposing his point of view upon Japan in this instance.

It is true that in recent years the development of war on a "total" scale has largely obliterated most outward distinctions in the treatment of absolute contraband and that of conditional contraband. Nevertheless, the mere fact that absolute and conditional contraband are often treated alike in modern warfare does not make them alike in fact or affect the fundamental difference in their nature.

Arms and ammunition are fundamentally different from other articles of commerce, no matter how the contraband lists of warring nations may read. To maintain that they are not is to ignore both history and common sense; as well say that a bushel of grain and a quart of rye whisky are essentially one and the same thing. They are not the same thing by nature and cannot be made so by fiat with any profitable result.

Secretary Hull and Senator PITTMAN presumably know this; to think otherwise would be to insult their intelligence. But if they do know it, surely they should not allow themselves to be used to confuse our thinking at a time when we are weighing the grave issues of war and peace which are involved in the administration's current attempt to scrap neutrality as an effective national policy of the United States.

A very serious alteration of national policy is under consideration. It should be decided on the basis of truth and facts, not upon glib demonstrations that black is white.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS].

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, because of the condition of my throat I am unable to address the Committee. I therefore ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GORE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, isolation is an institution for impotent nations. The road which leads to this institution is a one-way road and over its gates should be engraved these words of Dante, "Abandon all hope, ye who enter here." If we ever permit ourselves to be committed to this institution, either by a domestic policy begotten of ignorance, short-sightedness, or timidity, or if we allow foreign influences born of an avaricious desire for economic supremacy to force us into it, then we are lost as a nation. In either case, if we are confined within the somber bounds of isolation, we will fall a speedy victim to the cancer of internal disorders.

There are powerful influences from without, which are endeavoring by every possible means to neutralize our influence in the world, either in peace or in war. These influences have been active with their propaganda ever since the World War, seeking to sell the idea to the American people that our participation in the World War was actuated by unworthy motives. To this one they say, we were duped into the war to pull Great Britain's chestnuts out of the fire. To another they say we went to war to save our international bankers. To another they say that France was the aggressor nation. They even dupe some of our own prominent citizens into making the charge that our munitions manufacturers dragged us into the war in order to provide a market for their lethal appliances.

Although they have never produced one iota of proof in support of this statement, it has through much repetition been accepted as truth by many of our overcredulous citizens, and incidentally has been a fertile source of revenue for some of its proponents. The debts owed us by France and Great Britain have been kept fresh in the minds of the American taxpayer; but the debts owed us by Germany and nations under German influence have been discreetly kept in the background.

For all that has been said regarding our entry into the World War, in the light of recent events in Europe, there should be little doubt in the mind of anyone what would be the conditions in Europe today if Germany had been the victor in that struggle. If we had not entered the war, there is no doubt but that Europe would have been under the iron heel of Germany these last 20 years. Germany made no effort to conceal the fact that her intention was to make France pay the cost of the war and to reduce her to a state of slavery. It was also her intention to demand the surrender of the British Fleet and thereby bring England into a state of subjection. Can we now doubt that she would have used this fleet to impose her will upon every nation within its cruising radius and would have soon come into conflict with the Monroe Doctrine?

What the fate of the other conquered nations would have been is made clear by the Treaty of Brest Litovsk after the collapse of Russia in 1917. This was the most ruthless treaty of modern times, the conditions of which were ended only by the Allies' victory on the western front. By this treaty the Ukraine, from which Russia receives 70 percent of her iron and coal and 50 percent of her wheat, was taken from Russia and required to furnish the Central Powers 1,000,000 tons of foodstuffs annually. The indemnities and territorial seizures of the Franco-Prussian War are also matters of history. The terms of the treaty following that victory of German arms was for its time many times more severe than the terms of the Treaty of Versailles, but they were met by the French without tears or pleas for mercy.

Her declaration of February 1, 1917, that any ship of any nationality found within 100 miles at sea from the British coast would be torpedoed without warning, was what brought the United States into the war. This meant that we were not privileged to carry on trade with any of the neutral nations of Europe. It meant a restriction of our rights as a neutral nation. We were denied access to the markets of a portion of the world.

Six months before we entered the war German submarines sank four foreign vessels off the coast of Massachusetts. The real facts of those days have been forgotten, while the misstatement of the propagandist has been remembered. The many acts of sabotage committed in our own territory against our own industrial plants seem to have been forgotten, as well as her brazen attempts to endanger our relations with Mexico.

It was too much. The press, the church, the overwhelming mass of our citizens demanded the protection of our national rights and war was declared. For anyone to maintain that such was not the case, is a confession of ignorance or an admission of a disregard for the truth and an insult to the good judgment, the integrity, and patriotism of the overwhelming majority of both Houses of Congress who voted to declare war.

Some of those engaged in promoting this theory of an isolated Utopia have the audacity to say that we would have been better off if Germany had won the World War. Some even make the statement that we entered the war on the wrong side. With them it is not a matter of peace or war; isolation or commercial intercourse; but a matter of "whose ox was gored." There can, however, be no doubt in the mind of any responsible student of international affairs, either past or present, that life in the United States would have been radically altered if we had not intervened in the World War.

Then, of course, under our very liberal laws and more liberal attitude of tolerance, organizations have sprung up which seek to bind racial groups together for purposes which, to say the least, are of a very questionable nature.

Organizations have been very cleverly brought into being for the purpose of arousing antagonism in this Nation against our citizens of Jewish extraction, with the hope of justifying the actions of other nations in their barbarous treatment of these people. They have been materially aided in this program by the activities of some members of the Jewish race in promoting subversive doctrines; which has prompted counter activities from some of our citizens, who having finished their careers find time hanging heavy on their hands and are more burdened with patriotism than they are with sound judgment.

I must say that this propaganda seems to have been widely accepted, at its face value, without any attempt on the part of its credulous acceptors to analyze either the propaganda or the motives or the extent of the knowledge of those who distribute it. Apparently it is circulated to keep this Nation out of war. If its instigators were sincere and unselfish, their efforts would be commendable. Their intention, however, is to cripple this Nation in order that we will be unable to protect our national interests and our lawful rights, either in peace or in war. They know, what the average citizen too often forgets, that the purpose of war is not war as such; but only as a means to an end. That end is the control of markets, sources of raw material, and the trade lanes leading to them. Wars are but commercial contests grown out of normal control.

These propagandists seek to leave the impression that any effort to protect our commercial interests is a blot upon our national escutcheon. They would instill into the American mind the idea that trade is a low-down occupation, something akin to procuring or dope peddling and unworthy of national protection.

They coin the phrase "dollar diplomacy" and weep about the fancied defacement of the American flag with the dollar sign. The fact of the matter is, we are a commercial nation and we live by commerce. Commercial considerations guided the hands which wrote the Declaration of Independence; steadied the eyes which sighted the guns at Saratoga, Trenton, and Yorktown, and inspired the brains which drafted our Constitution. Commerce is as American as corn mush, bourbon whisky, turkey and cranberries, or well-cared-for teeth.

The commerce of the Nation is the commerce of the people of the Nation. It is the commerce of those who labor in the mines, in the mills, and on the farms, as well as that of the bankers, the importers, and exporters. It is not alone the commerce of Wall Street; but just as much that of Main Street and the streets across the railroad tracks. It is the commerce of the Smiths and the Joneses, the Murphys, and the Cohens, the Strobinskis and the Picolonics, and also that of the Morgans, the Schwabs, and the Grundys. If we permit our commerce to be destroyed, or even to be restricted, either by propaganda or by the sword, our whole people will suffer; but those who will suffer the most severely will be those who labor with their hands. Their standard of living will fall as it fell when our own tariff destroyed our foreign trade and they will revert to status of the peasants of medieval Europe.

There was a day when the American clipper ship carried the trade of the world. The far corners of the globe and the smallest islands of the lonely seas saw the Stars and Stripes flying over holds filled with the products of American farms and mills. These ships brought back to our shores in exchange the products of distant lands which contributed to the upbuilding of this Nation. Those were the days when an infant nation sent its few ships half way across the world to force the Barbary pirates to respect our commercial rights on the Mediterranean Sea. A few years later we refused to allow either a timid domestic or a hostile foreign policy to curtail our freedom of the seas, and our sailors, cutlass in hand, carried the issue to the decks of the British Navy and won.

For a hundred years our right to the freedom of the seas was never questioned. No nation had the hardihood to challenge it. The attitude of this Nation toward the protection of commerce was too well known. We were a healthy growing nation and our people were too occupied to be ashamed of their commercial instincts. The slavery question had absorbed the minds of the professional reformers until after the Civil War; their attention was then focused on the question of equal rights for the freed Negroes for the next 20 years and then came the noble experiment.

Never looking behind to observe the failure of their achievements, these self-appointed guardians of the public conscience flew into the peace-at-any-price movement with all of their customary contempt for either truth or fact. A new crusade was on. From across the seas various influences having axes to grind sensed the willingness of strong arms to turn the grindstones. Among these influences, those which for obvious reasons wished to discredit our entrance into the World War were quick to take advantage of the situation. An unholy alliance sprang up between the advocates of subversive doctrines and many of the advocates of the gospel. Each desired disarmament for a different reason, but the desire was a common denominator which brought about a disregard for the real interest of the Nation.

Then comes the proselyte preaching the virtues of those systems of government from which every vestige of democracy has been eradicated. Supposedly they advocate a policy of national self-sufficiency arrived at by a rigid system of regimentation which has wiped out the individual in thought, action, or desire, and which will achieve a national economic security which will enable a nation to live indefinitely, as a hibernating bear lives over winter—on its own fat. Such an economic security may be attained by destroying the freedom of the individual, but such security would be a reversion to the serfdom of the Dark Ages, and we hope America is headed forward. A policy of isolation would result in a similar loss of individual liberty to our citizens.

We are by no means a self-sufficient nation either in war or in peace, and we can only become so by the surrender of many of those commodities which we hold to be essential today. We are the world's largest consumer of tin, but produce none. Manganese, tungsten, chromium, nickel, and many other essential metals are almost in the same class. Coffee, tea, silk, and many of our drugs must be imported. If we are to procure those commodities which we lack, we must export commodities to pay for them. Such a simple, fundamental axiom of economics should be apparent to everyone.

It is high time that the American people began to think for themselves. It is high time that they exert themselves enough to shove aside the veil of propaganda and review the history of their Nation for the past 150 years. There they will see what influences contributed to the unprecedented upbuilding of this Nation. Ahead of us is a future as brilliant as is the past—providing we do not heed the siren call of the propaganda-inspired isolationist, who believes that the solution of all of our problems, foreign and domestic, is to be found in an ostrichlike policy of isolation.

We cannot solve our international obligations by a policy of isolation any more than an individual can satisfy his creditors by evading them. We can, of course, adopt the policy of the man who, having lost his ambition or desire to face the responsibilities of citizenship and desiring to shun them, becomes a hermit. It is doubtful, however, if we would be allowed to pursue such a policy in peace, if we were to adopt it. We did not allow Japan to do so, and many other like examples exist in the history of the world. If we are to keep step with the march of progress and advance in the scale of civilization, we must associate ourselves with those nations whose institutions, political philosophy, and social customs are compatible with our own. As opposed to the theory that "right makes might," which can do nothing except foment strife in this world, we must express our intention to assist those nations which stand for international as well as national justice.

If we wish to be an influence for good in this world, we cannot be so unless we are free to act to protect our interests as the occasion may demand. We cannot be in position to do this if we are committed in advance to any certain method of procedure. For our own protection, we should always be in position to retain the initiative. We cannot do so if we are bound by so-called neutrality laws. We existed as a nation for a century and a half without such laws. We grew and prospered during that time. I therefore propose an outright repeal of all of our present laws relating to neutrality, in order that we may once again be free, unhampered, and uncommitted in this respect.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 11 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I confess a feeling of very great humility in coming before this body to discuss a most important issue, and especially in view of the remarkable and able presentation by both sides on this question. I am sure that every Member who has been on the floor of the House this afternoon has had a very liberal education in the subject of neutrality and in international law.

I am simply going to take this occasion to introduce a few thoughts in reference to neutrality, to make some comparisons that perhaps will throw a little light on the path we are traveling in enacting or attempting to enact this so-called neutrality legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the people of the United States are opposed to any legislation that takes from the Congress the power by which it alone may decide whether the Nation shall enter war or remain at peace. It was the intention of those who framed the Constitution that the power of Congress "to declare war" should exclude all power on the part of the Executive to make war; otherwise, the provision is meaningless.

Abraham Lincoln recognized the wisdom of the purpose of those who framed the Constitution that the power to declare war or to make war should never be entrusted to one man but, on the contrary, should be vested in the Congress. I quote what Lincoln had to say on this point:

The provision of the Constitution giving the war-making power to Congress was dictated, as I understand it, by the following reasons: Kings had always been involving and impoverishing their people in wars, pretending generally, if not always, that the good of the people was the object. This our Convention understood to be the most oppressive of all kingly oppressions, and they resolved so to frame the Constitution that no man should hold the power of bringing this oppression upon us.

President Wilson, speaking at Chicago, January 31, 1916, gave expression to the same doctrine in these words:

This war (the World War) was brought on by rulers, not by the people, and thank God that there is no man in America who has the authority to bring on war without the consent of the people.

Again on the following night, at Des Moines, he reiterated more at length the same thought:

I was saying the other night that I know of no case where one people made war upon another people. No government can make war in the United States. The people make war through their representatives. The Constitution of the United States does not give the President even a participating part in the making of war. War can be declared only by Congress, by an action which the President does not take part in and cannot veto. I am literally, by constitutional arrangement, the mere servant of the people's representatives.

Mr. Chairman, it is one thing for an Executive to enunciate a doctrine and quite another for him to adhere strictly to it. I am sure that the membership of the House will recall that long before President Wilson had uttered the words which I have quoted he had said in a letter to Floor Leader Underwood that—

The foreign policy of the Government * * * lies outside the field of legislation.

This communication was directed to Floor Leader Underwood in October 1914.

Mr. Chairman, he stated a fact and he stated the law. I say, without disrespect or partisan bias, that neutrality is far safer in the hands of the Congress, where the Constitution places it, than it can be if entrusted to the power and discretion of any Executive. It is far easier for nations at war to bring pressure and influence to bear on one man than it is to make it felt upon 531 House and Senate legislators, registering the will of 130,000,000 peace-loving people.

I say without fear of successful contradiction that once a President yields to the influence of foreign propaganda and assumes an unneutral attitude, all the executive propaganda agencies reflect and react to it and immediately swing into action in support of the position taken by their Chief. The facilities of education and communication now under the control of the executive branch of the Government, and financed largely by the public, for the manufacture of public opinion surpass that of any propaganda agency in the world. This power, unless wisely and discreetly used, constitutes a serious threat to the safety of the Republic, and if used to foment a spirit of war under powers delegated to one man, the consequences to free government and to harmonious relations with foreign governments are not pleasant to contemplate.

It was Henry Clay, I believe, who once said:

Either Congress or the President must have the right to determine upon the objects for which a war shall be prosecuted. There is no other alternative. If the President possess it * * * where is the difference between our free government and that of any other nation, which may be governed by an absolute czar, emperor, or king?

Mr. Chairman, this so-called Bloom neutrality bill disclosed the real purpose of the Executive as it was first drawn, but which has recently been modified to quiet the fears it has aroused in the minds of thoughtful persons throughout the land. The light of experience should guide this House, never losing sight of the beacon light of the Constitution which, when followed, has marked the course of safety for the Republic.

I have referred to the power of foreign war propaganda as a source of danger and, therefore, a warning against Congress attempting to delegate one iota of its power to declare war or make war to the President of the United States.

Do the Members of this House not recall that President Wilson, speaking in Milwaukee in 1916, assured his audience of his peaceful intentions in these stirring words:

I pledge you that, God helping me, I will keep you out of war.

I believe then as I believe now that he voiced the sentiment and the hope of the vast majority of the people of this country.

I remind the Members of the House that as late as January 30, 1916, President Wilson, in an address to the New York Press Club, interpreted the prevailing sentiment when he said:

I get letters from unknown men, from humble women, from people whose names have never been heard and will never be recorded, and there is but one prayer in all of these letters: "Mr. President, do not allow anybody to persuade you that the people of this country want war with anybody."

This, please remember, was the state of public opinion 9 months and 7 days prior to a declaration of war by the Congress. Throughout all this period foreign propaganda was doing its deadly work and it was chiefly centered upon the executive branch of the Government.

In Paris, July 4, 1917, Lloyd George in an interview made the statement:

We not only desired the entrance of the United States into the war; we solicited it.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the pacific utterances of President Wilson in the early part of 1916, it is interesting to trace the psychological change that took place under the pressure and influence and solicitation from abroad. When President Wilson saw the various attacks by German submarines on American vessels and felt the effects of the intensive propaganda of the Allies he laid the groundwork for the declaration of war by Congress.

In support of this statement let me quote from the speeches made by President Wilson in the 1916 preparedness campaign. Here is the argument he used in a speech made in Pittsburgh.

Please do not misunderstand me. I make the statement now that President Wilson, I believe, was acting in the best of faith. I am of the opinion that he sacrificed his health and his life in what he assumed was a patriotic cause; but he was not infallible, any more than any other President has been or is likely to be. He was simply a fallible man, the victim of foreign propaganda and persuasive, persevering diplomacy. Here is what President Wilson said at Pittsburgh:

I should feel that I was guilty of an unpardonable omission if I did not go out and tell my fellow countrymen that new circumstances have arisen which make it absolutely necessary that this country should prepare herself.

Mr. Chairman, does this have a familiar ring to it? Have recent preparedness authorizations and appropriations been made as a result of a similar appeal? There is something familiar about recent utterances emanating from the White House and the statement made by President Wilson in Kansas City in 1916 when he warned:

I cannot tell 24 hours at a time whether there is going to be trouble or not.

Have we heard anything within recent months from administration sources relative to protecting our commerce from aggressor nations? You will recall that as the war spirit gathered momentum in 1916 our commerce and its preservation entered the picture. At St. Louis President Wilson appealed to the interests of that area of the country in terms of commerce in these significant words:

One commander of a submarine * * * might set the world on fire. * * * There are cargoes of cotton on the seas; there are cargoes of manufactured articles on the seas; and any one of the cargoes may be the point of ignition.

Again at Topeka, Kans., he made a direct appeal to the self-interest of the wheat farmers and also to the cotton farmers. President Wilson's approach to the subject of commerce, as now stressed by the administration, causes me to quote him briefly:

There is one thing Kansas ought to be interested in, and that is that we must maintain our rights to sell our products to any neutral country anywhere in the world. We should be allowed to send the wheat that grows in the Kansas fields and this cotton in our Southern States to neutrals who need them, without interference from any of the warring nations.

If I may be permitted to inject a thought here, I shall remind the House that not long ago the trade agreements were to restore permanent peace, good will, and prosperity among nations, but now, as in 1916, we hear it proclaimed vociferously and belligerently that our rapidly declining export trade must be expanded and our foreign markets protected from penetration and domination by aggressor nations.

I do not want to see the alleged interference with foreign commerce used as an excuse for any unneutral act on the part of this Government as it was in 1917. I believe the course for this Nation to pursue in the event of a foreign war is one of strict neutrality under international law. All powers relating to this subject should remain in the hands of Congress. The Congress should guard against any delegation of power to the Executive by which he can make war.

If there is any doubt in the mind of any Member of this House that foreign propaganda directed at one man, clothed with uncurbed power, can lead a peaceful people into war, then I respectfully submit additional proof of the fact.

Mr. Chairman, there were three speeches made in the British Parliament April 18, 1917, lauding President Wilson and acclaiming the participation of the United States in the War:

Earl Curzon said:

A twice elected President, representing 100,000,000 people of the most peace-loving and least aggressive nation of the earth, has summoned his people to arms with a trumpet call.

Mr. Asquith in his speech said:

What, then, has enabled the President, after waiting with the patience which Pitt described as the first virtue of statesmanship—to carry with him a united nation into the hazards and horrors of the greatest war in history?

John Dillon, speaking on the same occasion and to the same point, said:

The difficulties with which President Wilson has been confronted in the last 2½ years have not been sufficiently appreciated in this country. He had to keep the Nation united and bring it united into this war. He had to deal with a people who had a deep-seated and ineradicable hatred of war. To bring the United States into the war was to make them go against the deepest instincts of the soul of the race.

Mr. Chairman, the Bloom bill before us, even in its present deleted form, ought not to be enacted into law. It should be recommitted.

I repeat that this bill should be recommitted and that Congress should deal with the subject of neutrality when and if a foreign war develops. At present this Republic is at peace with every nation in the world. But, unfortunately, unneutral and highly inflammatory statements have been made by some of the high officials of this Government and by the Chief Executive as well, which will cause those nations so criticized and condemned to question the sincerity of the professions of impartiality on the part of the United States Government toward them in the event of their becoming involved in war.

The unfriendly and belligerent sentiment expressed by the executive branch of the Government toward nations with which the United States enjoys peaceful relations will subject every word and every delegation of power in the Bloom bill to the closest scrutiny to ascertain wherein its provisions favor one nation against the interest of another.

The efforts of the Congress to enact neutrality legislation has been frustrated, made utterly futile by the reckless public utterances of the very officials this bill proposes to clothe with powers to execute and enforce its provisions. I deplore the fact that the Congress should be placed in such an embarrassing position; but such being the situation, I firmly believe that if Congress feels impelled to speak on the subject, then a declaration by the Congress to adhere to the rules of neutrality under international law would be the only safe, fair, open, and above-board course to follow. This, at least, would be notice to all nations that the House of Representatives, reflecting the sentiment of 130,000,000 people, proposes that the United States, impelled by the traditions of the past, convinced by the logic of experience, and actuated by the hope that eventually nations will build upon the foundations of law and not force—that the United States will hold itself apart from conflicts that may arise among nations with which this Republic is at peace. This would be a contribution to a better feeling among nations.

It is impossible to enact this legislation, tainted as it is with an effort to yield the issue of impartiality into biased and hostile hands, without placing the United States in a most compromising position. Under the Bloom bill the President is given unlimited power. It gives him dictatorial power to decide the issue of peace or war. If the House is determined to pass the Bloom proposal for the purpose of Executive appeasement, then the measure should be amended by adding provisions to keep this country out of war. I would not give the President power to decide combat areas or the issue of war or peace, but if such a provision is to be included, then let it be defined, for example, "when and if armed forces cross the boundaries of another country." The President acted on that fact in Ethiopia but he did not so act upon the same fact in the case of China.

Let it be provided in the bill that Americans who sail on belligerent ships do so at their own risk and provide that this be written into their passports. If the membership of this House shall insist that this Nation shall become the arsenal for favored belligerents, then provide that all contraband goods shall be sold on a cash-and-carry basis.

I repeat again that this Bloom bill should be recommitted. The closing days of a session of Congress is not the time to hurriedly formulate and rush through legislation of such transcendent and far-reaching importance.

I would respectfully remind my colleagues that much of the distress to which this Nation has been subjected had its inception in our departure, during the World War, from the traditional policy of neutrality under international law. I wish to fix the exact time and the circumstances when the Government took this fatal step. If you will examine the Democratic Congressional Campaign Book of 1914 you will find an explanation by Secretary of State William J. Bryan of the Wilson position on neutrality. Here is what Secretary Bryan said:

It is inconsistent with the spirit of neutrality for a neutral nation to make loans to belligerent nations, for money is the worst of contrabands—it commands all other things. A very forcible illustration has been used in support of this proposition, namely, that, as a neutral government does all in its power to discourage its citizens from enlisting in the armies of other countries, it should discourage those who by loaning money, would do more harm than they could do by enlisting. The Government withdraws the protection of citizenship from those who enlist under other flags—why should it give protection to money when it enters into foreign military service? There is only one answer.

This position on neutrality, taken in 1914, was abandoned in 1915 when President Wilson gave his consent to the first Anglo-French loan. I say here and now that the essence of neutrality is the equal treatment of the opposing sides, and whenever a nation that assumes to be neutral deviates from this course it sooner or later becomes involved as one of the belligerents.

The only escape the people have from participating in a foreign war is to preserve strict neutrality, and the constitutional means to that end is through the legislative branch of the Government. I hope this House will today assume its full constitutional responsibility as the guardian of the peace of this country. This can be done by the defeat of the Bloom bill or by its recommitment to insure a return to our traditional practice of insisting upon neutrality as defined and enforced by international law. I am opposed to the Bloom bill as a dangerous departure from real neutrality.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRANT].

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. GRANT]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, 20 years ago today the Treaty of Versailles was signed. It was erroneously called a treaty of peace, a settlement of the war "to make the world safe for democracy," the "war to end wars." After the signing of the treaty Woodrow Wilson cabled the American people that the treaty would be "the charter for a new order of affairs in the world." He envisioned the United States as a member of the League of Nations, thereby binding our country to help enforce the provisions of that treaty that was founded, not on peace, but upon the hatred and the conflicts that had been a part of the life of the nations of the Old World for more than a thousand years.

During the time of the writing of this treaty, and during the controversy in the Senate of the United States over its ratification, President Roosevelt was a part of the Wilson administration in the capacity of an Assistant Secretary of the Navy. Then too he occupied that position in the administration during the fight to drag the United States into the League of Nations. As a candidate for Vice President in 1920 he advocated our entrance into the League.

Today, as President of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt carries on the theorist's dream that would make us a part of the jealousies and strife of the Old World.

The pending so-called neutrality resolution is known to have the support of the administration. It was reported favorably by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, with the recommendation that the resolution be passed.

Section 3 of the resolution provides, as follows:

Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 (a)—

Finding that there exists a state of war between foreign states, and so forth—and he shall thereafter find that the protection of citizens of the United States so requires, he shall issue a proclamation, whereupon it shall be unlawful, except under such limitations not inconsistent with the provisions of this joint resolution as the President may prescribe, for citizens of the United States or vessels flying the flag of the United States to proceed through any areas defined from time to time by the President to be areas of combat operations and as specified in his proclamation.

As is pointed out in the minority report of the committee:

Under this authority the President may also prescribe any limitations or exceptions he may desire upon the travel of American citizens or vessels any place in the world, outside an American republic. This power is without precedent in American history; with this power the President can effectively quarantine an aggressor from American ships and citizens by simply naming the aggressor as a "combat area."

We well remember that speeches in which talk of "determining the aggressor" and threats of "quarantine" and resort to "methods short of war" were heard. We all know that economic war can be just as deadly and end just as disastrously as any war begun with bullets. The policy of the administration to the contrary notwithstanding, the United States and especially its President, whether he be Woodrow Wilson or Franklin D. Roosevelt, or whoever he may be, is not destined to superimpose any judgment on foreign nations in their age-old controversies and, further, has no commission—except perhaps self-styled—to play the role of policeman to the world.

Mr. Chairman, we want no part of the dictatorships of the Old World. May the day never come in America when any one man, be he ever so great and ever so good, shall have the power, lonehanded, to involve us in a conflict that will only end with the marching off to slaughter of the youth of America.

We cannot assure neutrality for America by the mere enactment of laws. It is not possible to write a neutrality law that will keep us out of war if our foreign policy is unneutral, if we continue to talk of and endeavor to put into operation "economic sanctions," "quarantine," and "methods short of war."

Wars do not begin in these days by formal declarations. Rather they begin with the movement of troops and the crack of rifles. If we involve ourselves in the controversies of foreign nations we will have a war, despite all our efforts at writing neutrality laws, and all the strifes and controversies of Europe and Asia combined are not worth the shedding of the blood of American men and women.

We will have more at stake in the next war than the loss of physical assets—even more than the loss of lives of those men and women who would answer the call when their country called. Democracy is on trial. Since the close of the World War more than 20 democracies have "folded up." The future of democracy depends upon its success in the United States. We can do more for the peace and the happiness of the world by making democracy work at home than by assuming the role of policeman for the world and in so doing jeopardize those very rights and liberties that some seem anxious to have us fight to preserve.

More than added laws on our statute books, America needs men in public office who will not throw bitter epithets across the seas—men who realize their own limitations and do not feel the impulse to rule the world—men who are endowed with a little of that sense of brotherhood and respect for the rights and opinions of others that are so essential to the realization of peace, not only in the world, but here at home as well. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOLLES].

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Bloom neutrality bill inviting us to get into another world war. I voice the protest of practically every citizen of my district. Not one has asked me to support it. I have here scores of letters and a list of 870 names of people who have written me, and I may say these letters have come in within the past 2 days, all opposing this bill. Not one single soul in the State of Wisconsin has written asking me to support this bill.

I speak for more than that. The voiceless lips and silent tongues of 50,000 American soldiers and sailor dead call to me to oppose this bill leading us into war.

We do not check depredations of international outlaws by reading them statutory homilies on neutrality. This law would be ineffective and as impotent as was the Covenant of the League of Nations—the world's greatest gesture at a neutrality law—to save Manchuria, to preserve Ethiopia, to guaranty the territorial integrity of Czechoslovakia, or to hold back the bloody surgery of Japan in its dismemberment of China.

Why give up our own to stand on foreign ground?

On this question of neutrality there is a saving grace from casuistry, sophistry, and fatal promise, in the words of James Madison:

We are always to keep in mind that it is safer to trust the consequences of a right principle than reassurances in support of a bad one.

In our relations with foreign nations we have a right principle, international law; the bad one, un-American in its conception, useless in its application, statutory neutrality.

I may here call the attention of the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee to the singular fact that his quotations from Washington, which he read to bolster his support of his bill, referred basically to the international code and to no statutory regulations. President Washington was speaking in an advisory capacity as well. The treatises of Grotius had been written a hundred years. That was the first attempt to set down international law in orderly form.

Mr. Chairman, I have here a volume of the United States Statutes of the Thirteenth and Seventeenth Congresses, from 1813 to 1823. On page 447 you will find a neutrality law, which is the law of 1818. It had to do with the shipment of arms. It was an embargo against the shipment of arms and was the statutory law of the United States on neutrality until 1937, although, may I say, it was scrapped by President Wilson in order to provide him with an excuse to get into the World War in 1917.

Diplomacy and its code—international law—are the outgrowth of the conflict of nations in recent centuries, the slow but steady development and triumph of justice and the principles of humanity over tyranny and force, resulting in the amelioration of the horrors of war and the greater reign of reason. Diplomatic history treats of high motives and the progress of just principles, and in recent times the wars of the nations and their political disputes have resulted in the evolution of a recognized code of universal and impartial justice as applied to the governments of the world. There is no more striking illustration of this fact than the diplomatic history of the United States. A new nation in a new world, untrammelled by the traditions and institutions of past ages, born to power and greatness almost in a day—from the beginning of its political existence it made itself the champion of a freer commerce, of a sincere and genuine neutrality, of respect for private property in war, of the most advanced ideas of natural rights and justice; and in its brief existence of a century, by its example and its persistent diplomatic advocacy, it has exerted a greater influence in the recognition of these elevated principles than any other nation of the world.

Before the Constitution was adopted Benjamin Franklin had long advocated principles of neutrality, which was to mind our own business. He advocated an end to privateering and the exemption of private property on the sea from confiscation in war. It was called "a beautiful abstraction," "a dream of the philosopher who thought to mitigate the cruelties of war." These provisions were incorporated in our first treaty with Prussia in 1785. When the treaty came to be renewed in 1799, these provisions were omitted.

In the declaration of Paris in 1856, adopted by the great powers of Europe, privateering was abolished. We advocated at that time as an amendment that private property of belligerents at sea be exempt from capture. Because of refusal of the great powers to admit that principle, the adhesion of the United States to the Paris declaration was withheld. While many treaties were adopted before the Constitution, they have strong influence upon our early diplomacy and relationship with other nations. We were willing to consecrate these advanced principles with greater guaranties and privileges to commerce and the recognition of a genuine neutrality not born of statute law but as a measure instigated by a recognition of international rights and to alleviate the horrors of war with restraint upon its destructive propensities.

We began in this world as a new Nation, with a definitely declared idea that difficulties between nations involving ourselves might better be settled by arbitration.

Suddenly the United States was confronted with its first and greatest decision. The new nation must either become an ally of a nation in Europe or choose isolation without entangling foreign alliances. It was a critical moment. France in war with most of Europe demanded we discharge our obligation under the treaty of 1778. Great Britain said if we did it would be tantamount to a war against her. Enter then the people. There was a great popular cry to support their friend of the Revolution.

But a change came. The bloody excesses of the French Revolution smeared the treaty of 1778 and blotted it out. Jefferson alone stood for keeping our obligation. The conflict raged. Washington thereupon issued a proclamation of neutrality. What the chairman of the committee read here yesterday as that proclamation was written by Attorney General Edmund Randolph. It was not produced under any statutory law but under international law as a base, but also molding a new structure and having a greater influence on international law than any single document in a hundred years. It was the first neutrality proclamation ever issued by any head of any nation in the world's history.

And there was no Bloom bill to guide either Edmund Randolph or George Washington.

Madison expressed his extreme regret at the President's action and declared:

The proclamation was in truth a most unfortunate error. * * * It will be a millstone which would sink any other character.

Jefferson expressed his disgust at the proclamation.

The power of the President to issue such a proclamation, without any domestic legislation respecting offenses against neutrality, was seriously questioned, and the next year, in 1794, an act was passed defining what were offenses against neutrality. That was our first real neutrality act. It had its foundation on international law. It was carefully revised in 1818 and remained unaltered until the passage of the neutrality law of 1936.

This law forbids any person to enlist within the United States to serve against a country at peace with the United States; to fit out or aid in fitting out vessels; or to set on foot, or prepare the means to set on foot, any military expedition against a friendly nation. It, however, does not prohibit the sale and shipment of arms or warlike supplies, this being recognized as a legitimate commercial enterprise, but such articles become subject to confiscation by the belligerents as contraband of war.

During this period of 100 years since 1818 to 1918 Europe fought a score of wars. We got into none of them. Territories were annexed, boundaries changed, kingdoms were absorbed; Poland and Hungary, Greece and Italy, Spain and France, Prussia and Austria, Russia and Turkey, all were in wars. Schleswig-Holstein was lost to Denmark, Alsace-Lorraine to France.

Did the White House issue letters or proclamations? No. We minded our own business, kept our home fires burning, busy in building the greatest Nation since God said, "Let there be light."

The Holy Alliance died, the flags of Spain and Portugal were hauled down from the flagstaffs of the American Continent, the Monroe Doctrine was born.

Our ships sailed the seven seas carrying our commerce. We kept our fingers out of the international buzz saw.

Only once did we go out with our Navy to do police duty. The daring Decatur, glamorous figure of our Navy, with a few soldiers and sailors brought the Barbary pirates to their knees and halted for all time the exaction of tribute.

Having these pages of history in mind, having the picture of the utter failure of our neutrality in the World War—even the law of 1818—and since the adoption of the present law, why proceed to the reassurances of a questionable law?

Neutrality is a question of national honor. You cannot legislate honor into anybody. You may incite enmity or establish fear—not honor.

Neutrality is no remedy for war. It will not stop war. It is more likely to incite war when written into statute law and power be given to an Executive to administer it.

It is appalling to know that from the day Christ was crucified on Calvary there has never been a year without a conflict of arms, either a civil war, international duel, or one involving many nations; and the two moving causes of war have been attributes of human nature expressed in individuals and spread to groups and later to be all-embracing for all peoples. They are: Greed—to get what others have; self-defense—to hold what one has and get more if possible.

Greed has been the impulse of war. It conquered and enslaved. It hitched human beings to chariot wheels. It looted cities and carried off women and slew the men. It made armies and navies. It filled a room full of gold belonging to the Incas and treacherously slew the giver. It stole from savage Indian and cheated him in payments. It tortured and squeezed and trampled, ravaged, and raped, steaming its face in the hot blood of a thousand million victims. It died as it lived, perished as it performed, by the sword. It made Alexander weep and filled Caesar with ambition. Greed is like the Illinois farmer who said he wanted no more land, "only what j'ined his'n." On the other hand, the nation attacked summoned its array and defended frequently to make sortie, win a war, and levy tribute on the aggressor.

Let us expand these two causes of war and see if there is a justification for any war that has been fought, if we can visualize the aggressor and the other party to war.

- (1) Desire for power and territory.
- (2) Desire for plunder and loot.
- (3) Ambition to rule in place of another.
- (4) Religious wars—Moslem and Christian.
- (5) Desire for greater self-expression culminating in revolution.
- (6) Support of a ruling family in some nation other than the one making wars.
- (7) No just cause but under treaty contract to become an ally.
- (8) Desire for trade monopoly.
- (9) Protection of a nation's interests in another country.
- (10) Protection of concessions made by one nation to another.
- (11) Pique, pride, and egotism.

I know of no other causes that are not expansions of these 12. All are based on the original two I have named. We have written our histories in blood. The procession of the years has pages blotted with sanguinary illustration. We have apotheosized heroes of conflict until we have forgotten about the common people. I want to know more about those masses, those great populations who toiled and staggered under taxation to make armor and armies. I want to know how these men and women with families, sordid and simple, it is true as they were, filled with superstition and fear—how they looked upon war. I would like to know how this common man liked the toil of march and the terror of battle. Did he welcome death as a release? Did he rejoice in conquest as his leader did—in drunkenness and debauchery and lechery, his exploits sung by a court fool to the music of the lyre. I do not know that he was awed by every natural phenomena and omens and signs were his daily portion. What matter now that we have reduced to mathematical formulas those things that were considered manifestations of a Jehovah or of a demon. We are still afraid. We have made war more terrible. Saul slew his thousands, David his ten thousands, but modern mechanized war slays its millions. It is this fear of war that brings war and so long as there is that physical fear we shall in wisdom be prepared to fend off an enemy.

Fear served its purpose during our colonial days. We joined in the wars which ravaged Europe by fighting for England in America. We went forth on the high seas as privateers seeking Spanish galleons and were just a little short of piracy in the law of admiralty. We fought the French and Indians because they were allies against Britain. We took scalps because that was a token of our prowess. We became as savage as the savage because of war's brutalities. We did heroic, dangerous, and daring things for that was in our blood to so perform. We met treachery with honesty. We wore our own home-made uniforms and fought for King William and Queen Anne and King George. We helped make a present of Canada to the British to have and to hold forever, but we also opened the way to the Ohio for Yankee pioneers by saving Braddock's army from utter rout.

Napoleon said, in his cold blood, that one could not make an omelet without breaking eggs. We could not have peace, independence, a constitution, or a government over here unless we had fought the war of the American Revolution. The alternative was being a subject people and there was little in the atmosphere here which would permit such an existence.

I am not apologizing for that war. I say that if there is any glory in being a citizen of the United States, it came from that war. It wrote something into the minds of the people that had never been there before. It was the expression, "We the people." Magna Carta wrested from King John by the barons of England did not have that as an expression meaning what it did after Yorktown. That war lighted the lamp of liberty, set it on a high hill, a beacon to all nations. "Take hope," it said to all outraged people. "The star of liberty is shining for you. There will come a day when you can think and speak and not be sent to prison or executed." From that day to this mankind has been traveling upward with plodding though often with weary feet to the establishment of freedom for humanity. Often we have seen only "as through a glass darkly" but some day we shall be face to face. And we fought another war to preserve the geography as well as the principles of that nation so ordained.

I am opposed to war as a settlement of any question arising between established nations. Any such war can be settled by peaceful arbitration.

For any of these purposes before recited a nation starting a war will be guilty per se of international offenses. How can a nation be stopped if in its management it desires war? What will stop it? It cannot be done by a neutrality law. There are responsible nations as well as irresponsible ones. Nations are exactly like people in every community. When human beings are perfect, when man no longer is selfish, when Christ's Golden Rule animates the human race, when we have erased poverty and greed and stupendous riches that flaunt themselves in the faces of the poor and capable, when we have given greater time to giving than we have to getting, we may be able to shout to nations spread all over the world that we want peace and intend to have it, for in peace we have the highest expression of man's spiritual elevation and Christ-like interpretation of consideration for the rights of others.

Until then there will always be danger of war somewhere. When the footsteps of man are walking, the path lighted from the incandescence of the Holy Grail, we shall have no more wars. When we can sleep without policemen we shall have no wars. When bandits cease to rob and kill we shall have no more war. When thieves no longer break through and steal we shall have no more war. When we are willing to live with neighbors without lawsuits we shall have no more war. When we are more concerned with giving than grabbing we shall have peace. Not until then—never. Until then we shall always have the danger hanging over us. There are reckless drivers on the international highways even as there are reckless ones on the roads of America.

Our answer must be an America for Americans. Every letter I receive, hundreds of them, plead with me to give the President no more power for war. They cry out to let Congress and the people decide.

I shall vote to support the people and George Washington. Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Maine [Mr. OLIVER] such time as he may desire.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I am unalterably and unequivocally opposed to this bill. I am opposed to it because it is not a neutrality bill but rather is it an un-American, 10 Downing Street bill. It is a most brazen attempt to write into law a policy of intervention in the existing international racket of finance and munitions manufacturing. It is a deliberate and considered legislative proposal which will lead this Nation into the snare and the delusion of British political and financial chicanery and treachery. It is a practical legislative answer to the prayer of British propagandists that we repeal or effectively annul the present barriers to American involvement in the European mire once again. Mark me well, Mr. Chairman, the next British proposal to this House, and in the near future, will be a play for debt settlement on the basis of a dime on the dollar. First, this British attempt to make the United States an arms and munitions hell for her own purposes and then the next logical step will develop whereby we shall be asked to soften the provision of the Johnson Act to finance our poor, innocent British cousins in their struggle to continue their position of domination in world trade and world finance. I am not going to be a sucker for the devilish intrigue and propaganda now being dished out to us once again as window dressing for the purpose of a repeat sale of the 1917 gold brick.

In conformity with this attitude, on the 6th of June I introduced in this House a bill to amend the so-called Johnson Act, an act entitled "An act to prohibit financial transactions with any foreign government in default on its obligations to the United States." The purpose of my bill was twofold. First, it defined the term "default" by inserting under section 2 of the aforesaid act the following new subsection:

(b) For the purposes of this act, a foreign government, political subdivision, organization, or association shall be deemed to be in default in the payment of its obligations to the United States whenever any amount of principal or interest of any such obligation is due and unpaid according to the terms of such obligation. Such default shall not be deemed to be cured or to have been cured by renewal, adjustment, waiver, part or token payment, or any other act constituting less than full and complete payment of such obligation according to its terms.

Secondly, my bill proposes further to amend such act by inserting at the end thereof the following new section:

SEC. 3. In the event that any foreign government or political subdivision thereof or any organization or association acting for or on behalf of a foreign government or political subdivision thereof which is in default in the payment of its obligations or any part thereof to the Government of the United States, cures such default as provided for in subsection (b) of section 2 as hereinabove amended, the provisions of section 1 of the act entitled "An act to prohibit financial transactions with any foreign government in default on its obligations to the United States," approved April 13, 1934, as herein amended, shall continue to apply until a period of time, equal to the period of time between the original date of default and the date of curing such default as hereinabove provided for, shall have elapsed subsequent to such curing of default.

The purpose of my proposed amendments to the so-called Johnson Act, Mr. Chairman, is to insure that no financial legerdemain be performed by schemers at home or abroad to tear down the protection of that act by paying pennies where dollars are due, and to provide that these long-forgetful but now suddenly penitent foreign debt defaulters, should they, in any way, shape, or manner, make settlement of these debts to us, be made to wait as long thereafter to borrow from us as they waited to pay after existing debts were due. The intent is to let them make settlement, if they will, and then permit them to prove the sincerity of their new-found honesty by waiting awhile before again attempting to make suckers of the people of the United States.

My bill is now in the hands of the Committee on Foreign Affairs where, because of the approaching termination of this session, I fear, even as the international bankers and the scheming diplomats of Europe undoubtedly fervently hope, it will die.

It was my intention, Mr. Chairman, to offer that same proposal as an amendment to this misnamed neutrality bill, but the Parliamentarian of the House has deemed its subject matter not germane to the pending bill. I bow, therefore, to the superior wisdom of the Parliamentarian insofar as parliamentary limitations are concerned. But I say to you, Mr. Chairman, and to the gentlemen of this House that the question of defaulted debts and the whole subject of financial relations between this Nation and its European debtors are not only germane to any discussion of neutrality and the preservation thereof but are predominantly vital factors in any such discussion. And I say to you that the movement is and has long been under way so to align this Nation with certain foreign debt defaulters as to make the United States the avowed ally of those foreign debt defaulters and their protector against their enemies—a movement so far advanced that, by means of stringent legislation to defeat financial trickery alone, may we hope to preserve even the ghost of neutrality or swerve this Nation from a path inevitably destined to plunge us into war.

Upon the occasion of my introduction of this bill to amend the Johnson act, Mr. Chairman, I invited the attention of this House to the then awaited visit of the King and Queen of England, a visit in my opinion deliberately planned to set the stage for the opening of debt-settlement discussions, probably on a dime-on-the-dollar basis. I invited attention to the fact that any such settlement would tear away the protection of the Johnson Act and enable these war-threatening Europeans to raid our Treasury anew for their warring, leaving Uncle Sam to hold the bag as they did two decades ago. And, Mr. Chairman, I asked what intelligent American, guiltless of ulterior motive, is willing to see that protection destroyed and to send our wealth again to the warmongers of Europe, to set aflame the seething hell of hates and touch off the volcano of destruction, to permit these foreigners to squander first our money for their warring and then the flower of our manhood to snatch them from their self-dug pit.

I held then, and I hold now, that the visit of royalty was but part and parcel of a deliberate plan to effect such picaresque settlement of Great Britain's long-defaulted debt to us as would enable that nation to victimize Uncle Sam anew. Let the skeptic but weigh the indisputable evidence blazoned for all to see in the public press. If there be doubt that this visit of royalty was impelled, not by sincere friendliness, such as motivates the visit of a good neighbor, but by the selfish desire of Britain's schemers to open the way to financial dealings directed toward destroying the protection of the Johnson Act, let the doubter but read the International News Service dispatch sent from London under date of June 22 containing the following:

Harried by totalitarian foes on both ends of Eurasia, Great Britain today negotiated a move to seek a debt settlement with the United States and thereby consolidate advantages gained by the King's visit to America on the day of His Majesty's return.

Instructions already have been sent to Sir Ronald Lindsay, the Ambassador in Washington, to approach Secretary of State Cordell Hull and Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, Jr., and negotiate a solution satisfactory to both countries.

Sir Ronald was told to point out that while the debt cannot be paid in full, either the principal or interest might be paid, preferably the principal.

The Cabinet was understood to be in agreement that it might be necessary, because of the heavy rearmament drain on British finances, to raise a loan to begin reservicing the American debt.

Such a loan also would be available to Americans on the assumption that renewal of payments would lower the bars of the Johnson Act.

There we have it, Mr. Chairman, out in the open and rancid with unabashed British gall. "A move to seek a debt settlement, and thereby consolidate advantages gained by the King's visit to America." "Negotiate a solution satisfactory to both countries." "While the debt cannot be paid in full." "To raise a loan to begin reservicing the American debt." And, with unmitigated gall, the British propose to make that loan available to Americans "on the assumption that renewal of payments would lower the bars of the Johnson Act." They propose to let our own citizens lend them the money with which to pay off such fraction of what they owe this Government as will enable them to lower the bars of the Johnson Act and so be free to raid our wealth anew. "And thereby consolidate advantages gained by the King's visit to America."

And, if that evidence proves insufficient to convince the skeptic, Mr. Chairman, let him weigh the King's own words, spoken at a state luncheon in London on June 23, 1939, as reported in a dispatch by the Associated Press:

King George reported formally today on this regal job of selling Great Britain to the United States * * * by modestly asserting that he and Queen Elizabeth had "in some sort succeeded" in their mission.

What sort of friends are these, Mr. Chairman, who speak of advantages gained from a neighborly visit and refer to that visit as a mission in some sort successful? What good neighbor, guiltless of ulterior motive, visits his neighbors with intent to gain advantages over them or refers to such visits as "missions"? What sort of neighbor would men deem such a one as came under the guise of neighborly affection only to confess his visit but a brazen attempt to take advantage of them and openly to boast of having succeeded in that mission?

Why continue such transparent hypocrisy when we and all other intelligent Americans well know that the advantages sought by the recently staged Charlie McCarthy act with wily Chamberlain in the role of Bergen were opportunities to tear down the protection of the Johnson Act, to inveigle this Government into letting Great Britain escape paying her long-defaulted debt in honest fashion, to open the way for a new assault upon first our material resources and then our finances and, inevitably at last, upon our sympathy to the end that the might of our arms be turned once again to save Great Britain from the fruit of the folly of her leaders?

Nor is this desire to make dupes of the American people confined to British minds alone, Mr. Chairman. Already the propagandists of the international bankers and of others seeking profit bring forth their song of Circe in eagerness to befuddle and beguile the minds of the American people, to soften them for the killing.

Speaking of propaganda, it is my intention to ask for unanimous consent in the House to insert at this point certain statements with reference to propaganda of the past and propaganda which we may expect in the future as this war and munitions racket becomes more intensely developed.

The excerpts to which I refer are taken from publication No. 10 of volume 2 of the Propaganda Analysis, published by the Institute for Propaganda Analysis, Inc., 130 Morningside Drive, New York City, which is entitled "Britain Woos America" and reads as follows:

Propaganda alone will not win the next war, but it will help. Of this all statesmen are convinced. Day by day, since 1914, propaganda has become more and more important to government, and especially in time of war. No sooner did we declare war against Germany in 1917, for example, than President Wilson appointed

George Creel to organize the Committee on Public Information; and on the Committee he put the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of State. Lord Northcliffe's work in the British Ministry of Propaganda helped to crack German resistance, not alone in the front-line trenches but also behind the lines. When the Italian armies went into Ethiopia, with them went specially trained propaganda experts, who could speak English, French, and German and had first-hand acquaintance with American, French, and British newspaper methods.

In Germany, where the war machine is most highly developed and where all industry already is organized for war, the leading figure, next to Adolf Hitler and Field Marshal Hermann Goering, is Dr. Paul Joseph Goebbels, the Minister of Propaganda and Public Enlightenment. And rightly so, for propaganda has been Germany's advance guard in her Drang nach Osten. If Germany walked into Austria, Sudetenland, and Czechoslovakia without resistance, it was partly because her propaganda had undermined resistance first.

Britain knows this only too well. It cannot have been entirely by accident that Propaganda in the Next War, by Capt. Sidney Rogerson, is third in the series of books on The Next War, edited by Capt. Liddell Hart, Britain's foremost writer on military affairs. First in the series is Sea Power in the Next War; Britain's strength lies in her control of the seas. Second is Air Power in the Next War; air power is considered the "great imponderable." Then comes Propaganda in the Next War. The next war, says Captain Rogerson, "will greatly increase the importance of propaganda, especially among the citizens of the home front, not only to stiffen their morale against the threat from the air, but to instruct them in the technique for meeting it."

Already Britain has begun to build up her propaganda armaments, though in much the same leisurely fashion in which she is building up her military armaments. For years German and Italian radio stations have been whipping up Egypt and the Near East with propaganda broadcasts in Arabic. In self-defense Britain last year inaugurated Arabic-language broadcasts, too. Since the Munich crisis the short-wave station at Daventry has been sending out news broadcasts in German, broadcasts which are causing so much trouble for the Nazi Government that when Adolph Hitler delivered his Wilhelmshaven address every newspaper in Germany is reported to have reprinted the penalties for repeating or publishing them.

Moreover, there is talk in Britain of reviving the old Ministry of Propaganda. "We need it to fill a glaring gap in our defense system," noted Commander Stephen King-Hall's news letter recently.

If war comes, Britain's propagandists will have to fight on four different fronts. At home they will have to bolster morale, prod the people into hatred of the enemy, keep them from cracking as casualties mount and terrifying air raids blast homes and factories to debris. Behind the enemy lines they will fight to destroy morale. Abroad, in the colonies and in the dominions, they will fight to put down unrest, wipe out disloyalty to King and mother country. In Egypt, in Palestine, throughout India, and even in some of the dominions there are those who hate British rule. For years they have been agitating to shake it off. If Britain goes to war, will not these malcontents seize their opportunity to revolt?

The United States will be the fourth great propaganda battleground, as, indeed, will be all the neutral countries. Britain might have been able to defeat Germany in 1918 even if the United States had not entered the war. But if Britain could not have borrowed money here, if Britain could not have bought food and munitions, the peace treaty might have been made at Berlin, not Versailles. It may be that Britain and her allies will have an easier time in the next war than in the last. Nevertheless, they will feel infinitely more confident if they have what Captain Rogerson calls our "benevolent neutrality." At the very least, the British would probably like the United States to repeal the Johnson Act, to amend—if not repeal—the Neutrality Act. Britain would like to borrow from us and to buy munitions from us, and it can do neither if those acts remain in force.

At this time I will quote for the purpose of emphasis one paragraph which I believe is particularly interesting in view of my pending amendments to the Johnson Act which comprise the basis for these remarks of mine:

The United States will be the fourth great propaganda battleground as indeed will be all the neutral countries. Britain might have been able to defeat Germany in 1918 even if the United States had not entered the war. But if Britain could not have borrowed money here, if Britain could not have bought food and munitions, the peace treaty might have been made at Berlin, not Versailles. It may be that Britain and her allies will have an easier time in the next war than in the last. Nevertheless, they will feel infinitely more confident if they have what Captain Rogerson calls our "benevolent neutrality." At the very least, the British would probably like the United States to repeal the Johnson Act, to amend—if not repeal—the Neutrality Act. Britain would like to borrow from us, and to buy munitions from us, and it can do neither if those acts remain in force.

So far has this poison spread that a United Press dispatch from Tulsa, Okla., dated June 24, tells us that the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce in convention assembled had before it a resolution approving "a plan for creating a war-debt commission to examine methods suggested for payment of war debts." Could there be any relationship between that resolution and another likewise before the junior chamber recommending military training of enrollees in all C. C. C. camps?

What profits any discussion of neutrality or any effort to insure neutrality which ignores the deadly peril lurking behind this talk of war-debt settlement? What profits such discussion or effort in the face of the fact that all men know the fondness displayed by this administration for Great Britain and her allies as against the totalitarian countries? The constant presence of our Ambassador at the conferences of Britain's leaders during the crisis attendant upon the shame of Munich, the blustering of our President as he cried to the totalitarian countries the threat of meeting force with force, the magnificence of the welcome accorded Britain's King and Queen, and now this sudden desire to settle debts long ignored and to make friends of a people long sneered at as Shylocks, where, Mr. Chairman, can such manifestations find place in a picture of neutrality?

I say to you that they can find no place in such picture. And I say to you that no neutrality legislation can be worth a continental unless that legislation considers and embraces such financial aspects of the relations between this and other nations as are represented by these long-defaulted debts and this sudden fanfare concerning settlement.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, it seems quite apparent to me that we have only two courses to pursue in the light of our experience of 1917 and the international situation which exists today:

One is the course of intervention by the United States in world politics, world intrigue, and world prejudices. The pending bill and the announced program of the President and the Secretary of State will inevitably lead us along this road to involvement and intervention.

On the other hand, we have the traditional American course of isolation. This course is predicated on our historical position of no entangling foreign alliances. If we choose to take this course, then we should establish more mandatory embargoes on arms, munitions, and materials of warfare. We should determine our own program and our own destiny on a nationalistic basis. We should force ourselves to a complete severance from the involving processes incident to and necessary for the continuation of the racket of international finance, economy, and double-crossing diplomacy. My vote will be recorded not only in support of isolation but also in support of measures which will insulate that isolation.

A law strengthening the loan prohibition of the Johnson Act would be a long step forward in the development of that insulation.

What better measure of assurance of neutrality and the prolongation of world peace could be devised than that which would prohibit the acquisition of that money and that support without which the guns of Europe must remain mute?

The Johnson Act is a tremendous headache to those who would involve us in the international maelstrom. In the interests of neutrality and isolation it must be strengthened. Let the pending bill be defeated and let us enact legislation designed to keep this Nation out of foreign wars.

The amendments which I have proposed to the Johnson Act will help materially to effect this purpose. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON] such time as he may desire.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made this afternoon on the agricultural appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the district which I represent, in the very heart of Ohio, is a typical American district. It is one of the great agricultural districts of America. While it has no large cities within its borders, it does contain numerous small industrial centers, the products of which are known and used throughout the world. Settled more than a hundred and twenty-five years ago by pioneers from Virginia, Pennsylvania, and New England, the citizenship of the district is almost entirely native-born. We have no foreign population; no class ties with lands across the seas; no attachments to any other flag or government except the American flag and the Government of the United States. Our citizens have proven their patriotism and their love of country by answering the call to the colors in every conflict in which the United States has taken part. Gallant sons lie buried on every battlefield where the American flag has led our troops.

My constituents hate war. They love peace.

It is in such a citizenship that I believe you can find the truly American viewpoint concerning the problem that confronts us today. The farmers, the workmen, the businessmen, and all the other citizens of my district realize the threat of war that hangs like a black cloud over the so-called civilized world in which we live. They are fully informed as to the content, the intent, and the portent of the legislation we are now considering here. They know the recorded history of the 6,000 years of warfare in the Orient and are fully aware that for almost 3,000 years Europe has echoed to the march of armed men and has been ruled by military might and power.

The World War and the sacrifices it demanded are still a vivid memory. The futile attempt of the League of Nations to bring peace and order is known to all. They watched as the civilized world stood by during the ravishment of defenseless Ethiopia. They have shuddered at the atrocities of the undeclared war in China, as that helpless nation fell victim before the armed might of an invader despite the solemn pledges of nine great civilized powers to protect her territorial and political integrity. They remember the fate of Austria and Albania. The crisis of last September and the total disregard of solemn treaties that brought about the sacrifice of gallant little Czechoslovakia on the altar of European power politics is still a fresh memory.

They know that free and representative government has practically disappeared across the seas. They realize that another great holocaust of war threatens civilization.

They know we have had a neutrality law in the past—one which gave to the President power and authority to declare a state of war existing, and that placed an embargo on the shipment of war materials to warring nations. They know, too, that the President has not yet, officially at least, recognized that a state of war exists in China. They do not question but that our President of today wants peace to continue. However, they cannot help but remember that another President was reelected in 1916 on the campaign cry of "He kept us out of war," and that within 6 months thereafter America entered the World War.

They believe that many of the statements in reference to the international situation attributed to the President have not been diplomatic or conducive to peaceful foreign relations. Remembering the words of Washington, they are opposed to foreign entanglements. Still suffering from American losses of men, money, and materials in the World War, they are determined that we not become involved in another. Realizing that our country is the last stronghold of democracy, they believe we can best serve democracy by protecting and preserving it rather than by risking it as a pawn in the game of internationalism in which we have no real national interest. Believing in constitutional government, they demand and insist that the Congress retain unto itself the power, the right, and the responsibility to speak for the people as to war or peace. They insist that the power of the President of the United States be limited to that given the Chief Executive by the Constitution.

The people of my district are opposed to the Bloom neutrality bill. They know we cannot legislate peace, but that we may legislate war. They insist that America play no part in the power politics of Europe. They believe the way for us to stay out of war is to keep out of European and international affairs; to attend to our own business and to permit other nations to attend to theirs; to straighten out our own domestic affairs before attempting to dictate to the peoples of other lands; to be prepared to fight to the death to defend our own land, but to refuse to send a single American soldier to fight on foreign soil.

Such are the almost unanimous opinions and desires of the people of a typical American district. I believe the great proportion of all American citizens have the same opinions and desires.

Therefore, I shall vote against this bill.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER] such time as he may desire.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, when we vote on this bill tomorrow or the next day our vote will be heard around the world. Our responsibility to the American people is a very heavy one. The Congress of the United States alone has the power to declare war. But today history has granted us an opportunity to prevent war, to so influence the course of world events that war in other parts of the world will be avoided and our own peace thereby assured.

Some of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle, and particularly the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], think the United States should not try to influence other nations. But the fact is that we have no choice in the matter. If we fail to pass this bill, if we follow the gentleman from New York, we shall none the less exert a profound influence on the decisions of other nations. We shall tell them, "If you want to plunge the whole world into war, that is all right with us. We mind our own business. Whatever you do, the United States will avert its eyes and with its hands tied behind its back give you free reign to rule and ruin the world." That is the message that Hitler and Mussolini and the Japanese war machine are waiting for. That is the signal they hope to get from these shores; the green light for war they hope will be flashed from this House.

That is what the gentleman from New York and others call "refraining from influencing the decisions of other nations."

The American people are also awaiting our action.

They have already expressed themselves in thousands of letters, resolutions, petitions, and in the various polls of public opinion. The increasing popularity of President Roosevelt testifies to the popular support for his foreign policy which grows with the people's growing understanding of world events.

The majority of the American people overwhelmingly favor repeal of the mandatory arms embargo. They read the papers. They read of wars and the threat of more wars. They read that small nations have lost their independence and other small nations are threatened with invasion and annexation. They read that millions of soldiers are under arms and more millions being mobilized. And when they are told that the seat of the war danger is in the White House in Washington, the American people indignantly repudiate such slanders against their Government and their great President. They know better. They know the war makers.

The American people are not afraid to have the United States "influence" the decisions of the war makers. On the contrary, they demand that their country, the most rich and powerful in all the world, exercise to the full its moral and economic power to influence the decision for peace.

I am reluctant to believe that the Members of this distinguished body have less common sense than the people as a whole. All of us surely know that the war danger is real, and not a figment of the Roosevelt imagination. Did the President invent the death of independent Austria? Was the dismemberment of Czechoslovakia a hallucination of the Secretary of State? Is it just a New Deal nightmare that Poland is in danger? Is it only to the inward eye of Democrats that the war clouds are discernible today?

Even the most confirmed isolationists cannot deny the plain facts. But they evade the implications of those facts. The gentleman from New York yesterday cried out that the President and Secretary Hull are and always have been "internationalists." That is supposed to be the worst name you can call a good American. The rich vocabulary of the gentleman from New York contains no worse epithet than "internationalist."

But let us look at this terrible word and see what it really means. An internationalist is one who admits that there are lands beyond the borders of the United States. He even admits that what happens in those lands may affect the American people, their trade, their prosperity, and their peace. Secretary Hull once voiced this terrible doctrine of internationalism in a very simple sentence. He said, "War anywhere threatens peace everywhere."

The Bloom bill also recognizes that war anywhere threatens peace everywhere. And in my opinion the passage of this bill will serve the interests of peace everywhere, by to some extent lessening the danger of war in Europe. To my mind the best proof that the Bloom bill will have this effect is to be found in the press of those nations which are today mobilizing and preparing for war. The American people, and the devotees of peace in every land, will welcome the passage of this bill as a step toward peace. But Rome and Berlin are shrieking that it is a form of "war-mongering," and Hitler and Mussolini, through their controlled press, tell us to vote down the Bloom bill. With whom are you going to vote? With the American people; or with the war lords of fascism?

The Bloom bill is a step toward peace. But in my opinion it is a hesitant step. I would prefer to see this country step out more firmly, more boldly, in the direction of blocking the way of those who prepare the mad adventure of war.

I hope that this House will write into the Bloom bill a statement of policy, along the lines of the bill introduced in the Senate by the distinguished Senator from Utah, Senator THOMAS, and in the House by myself. I hope we will incorporate in the Bloom bill some statement to the effect that it is contrary to the policy of the United States to sell arms, ammunition, or the raw materials of war to any nation which engages in an act of aggression against another nation. I hope we will make it a cardinal principle of American foreign policy to distinguish between treaty violators and those who adhere to their treaty obligations. I believe that the United States has the right, the duty, and the will to distinguish between right and wrong, between the innocent and the guilty. I believe it has the power and the prestige to make its moral judgments felt in the world, without resort to arms.

I realize that the majority of the House does not share my views on this question, at least at the present time. But in respect to the far eastern situation I believe that the majority of the House, like the majority of the American people, has passed judgment. According to the last Gallup poll, 72 percent of the American people want an embargo against shipment of arms and raw materials to Japan. Are we going to implement the will of the people by amending the Bloom bill to end our participation in Japan's war guilt? I sincerely hope that we will.

At the present time the United States is the main arsenal from which Japan obtains the sinews of war. Without our complicity she could not continue to invade China and destroy the homes and the lives of millions of Chinese people. In my own district, out of the harbor of Los Angeles, I have watched the boats set sail loaded with oil, not for the lamps of China, but for the airplanes of Japan. I have seen the boats go out loaded with scrap iron, with precious cargoes of automobile parts, machinery for making arms, alloys, airplanes, and airplane parts. The Japanese plane which bombed the Panay moved under the power of American oil. The people of my district want this death trade stopped. They see with their own eyes how we build up and encourage the aggressor in the Far East. They want to end this suicidal policy, and they want to end it now.

In 1938 we supplied 56 percent of the most important war materials imported by Japan. This was an increase over 54.54 percent in 1937. We are selling more oil, more aircraft parts to Japan all the time. The more our own vital interests are involved in the Japanese aggressions in the Far East, the more fully we participate in helping the Japanese war machine to cut our own throats.

Recent developments in the Far East and the newest provocations of the Japanese militarists have been directed most dramatically against the interests of Great Britain. But there is no question that our own vital interests are also involved. I suppose we shall hear some more in the course of this debate of that old chestnut about pulling England's chestnuts out of the fire. I am not interested in England's chestnuts. But I am interested in the security of America. The policy of the present British Government is one which I cannot but regret. I should dislike very much to see us tie our own foreign policy to that of Mr. Chamberlain. But that is exactly what we shall be doing if we refuse to defend our own Far Eastern interests merely because Great Britain refuses to act. I hope that we shall pursue an independent and wholly American course in the Far East. I hope that regardless of what other nations do or fail to do, we shall wash our own hands clean of our present share in Japan's war guilt.

While I regard it as unfortunate that the Bloom bill as reported out of committee does not provide for an embargo against Japan, I believe that indirectly it will, even in its present form, influence events in Asia as well as in Europe. Japan remains tied to the Rome-Berlin-Tokyo axis and operates as an axis partner. Therefore the Bloom bill, by giving pause to Rome and Berlin, will inevitably make itself felt in Tokyo as well. I shall vote for any amendments to strengthen the Bloom bill further by incorporating in it specific legislation dealing with the Far East. But even if such amendments are defeated, I shall certainly vote for the Bloom bill as an instrument for peace and national defense. [Applause.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY].

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the adoption of House Joint Resolution 306 now under consideration by the House. The preamble of this resolution reads as follows:

Whereas the policy of the United States in foreign wars not affecting the defense of the United States is a policy of neutrality in accordance with the rules of international law; and

Whereas the United States stands for restating and strengthening the rights of neutrals at the earliest practicable time; and

Whereas it seems advisable, until these rights can be restated, to diminish the risk of this Nation becoming involved in foreign wars by restricting the exercise of certain neutral rights of our citizens.

The resolution restates in substance the existing neutrality law. However, there are a few vital changes proposed in the resolution under debate, but the first and most important change is the one that omits the "arms embargo" contained in the present law. To avoid confusion in this discussion I would like to direct your attention to the existing law, section 1 (a), Public Resolution No. 27, Seventy-fifth Congress:

Whenever the President shall find that there exists a state of war between, or among, two or more foreign states, the President shall proclaim such fact, and it shall therefore be unlawful to export, or attempt to export, or cause to be exported, arms, ammunition, or implements of war from any place in the United States to any belligerent state named in such proclamation, or to any neutral state for transshipment to, or for the use of, any such belligerent state.

This is contained in Public Resolution No. 27, Seventy-fifth Congress, and is chapter 146, first session (S. J. Res. 51).

I have read the hearings before the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House entitled "American Neutrality Policy." These hearings started on April 11, 1939, and continued up to and including May 2, 1939, and they cover 639 printed pages. I regret that the hearings before the Foreign Affairs Committee were not confined to this resolution. It would appear that more than 16 different resolutions and bills were discussed by the various witnesses, with the result that we are free to select the testimony which appeals to our individual fancy.

This is an extremely important resolution and it should only be considered on a purely patriotic basis. I am sure that every Member of this House is concerned about the future of our country, and I am hopeful that your vote will be cast as the result of serious and mature consideration of the facts presented, being mindful only of the welfare of our beloved country.

I am sorry that this legislation did not originate in the Senate, because the Senate has peculiar knowledge of foreign affairs derived from participation in the making of treaties with foreign governments. The debate in the Senate would serve as a guide for Members of the House, but, without the information and advice of the Senators it is incumbent upon every Representative to exercise unusual care in arriving at his decision.

From what I learn there will be several amendments offered by the Committee to this resolution, none of which will be directed to section 1, which, in my opinion, is the most controversial section.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLOOM. I just wish to say that the present neutrality act was written in the House and not in the Senate.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. If the gentleman had followed what I said he would know that I was not referring to the present act at all. I was referring to the knowledge of the Senate on all matters affecting foreign affairs.

I do not know what prompts the proposed amendments, but I do hope that when an amendment is offered to restore section 1, arms embargo, of the present law, that it will be accepted by the committee.

As long as I can remember, matters of foreign affairs have always been the subject of great mystery. Treaties were arranged, loans were made, help was extended to foreign countries, and all sorts of things were done under the name of diplomacy. Frequently months passed before the people of the country knew what had transpired. A biased press, a high-pressure campaign of false propaganda, and unfaithful public officials have often conspired against the best interests of the people of our country. This great mystery still persists.

We are not debating a novel or new question. In the preamble of this resolution, in the first paragraph, it states "in accordance with the rules of international law."

In 1625 there was published a book by Hugo Grotius, a Dutch jurist, entitled "De jure belli ac pacis"—of the law of war and peace. In that book Grotius laid down the following principles:

- (1) War should be carried on only for a just cause, and for the purpose of defense.
- (2) Do no more injury to the vanquished than is strictly necessary.
- (3) Force alone ought not to regulate the relations of peoples, for there is justice between States as well as between individuals.
- (4) To observe treaties is the wisest practice and the greatest strength of sovereigns.

In 1814 this work was translated from the original Latin by the Reverend A. C. Campbell, A. M.

Since Grotius wrote this famous treatise, there has been little change in international law. The principles established by him have been generally accepted by all nations. Our understanding of international law is predicated upon these same principles.

I believe that it is of utmost importance for us to make progress in this very delicate and involved situation by going slowly. In my experience as a member of legislative bodies, dating back to 1924, I have been impressed by the flurry and excitement that usually accompanies consideration of this type of legislation. Men who never crossed the ocean or shouldered a gun and men who never had any interest outside the confines of their district will issue pronouncements of far-reaching consequences and will demand support for legislation on the ground of party loyalty, while in reality the question to be decided is a most nonpartisan issue as well as being international in scope. Some of us who have had slightly more experience in these matters know that human nature is pretty much the same all over the world and regardless of a man's political or religious belief or non-belief, he is moved by the same impulses, but his reaction depends upon his place of birth. If his native land is involved, he probably accepts the doctrine of Decatur—

Our country in her intercourse with foreign nations, may she always be in the right, but our country right or wrong.

I stand solidly behind the well-established policy of neutrality as contained in international law, and I hope that my country shall always be guided by these well-established practices rather than by the question of the hour, or by political expediency.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. I feel confident that if the resolution (H. Con. Res. 21) introduced by me on May 3, 1939, were adopted, the position of our country, namely, that we would not declare war unless attacked or the principles of the Monroe Doctrine jeopardized, would be so well known in every chancellery throughout the entire world that we would have no reason to consider the pending resolution. I regret that support of this resolution has been made on the ground of party loyalty because there is nothing in the platform of the Democratic Party that imposes any obligation upon Democrats to support this resolution. At this time I want to make it clear that my decision to oppose this resolution has been reached after careful study and consideration. Deep down in my heart I believe it would be a serious mistake to adopt the present resolution, but if we must have a change I believe it would be far better to repeal the entire law. The people of my district are scared to death that this resolution will lead to war. God knows they have enough to worry about without this problem. For all of these reasons, I hope the resolution will not be adopted. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield one-half minute additional to the gentleman in order that I may ask him a question.

Did I understand the gentleman to say that he would vote to repeal all the neutrality legislation and go back to international law?

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. I stated that unless we allowed section 1 as it exists to remain in the law and amended certain other sections I would be opposed to the proposed resolution.

Mr. BLOOM. I am asking the same question I asked of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. I am not bound by Mr. WADSWORTH's answer, nor influenced by his personal views.

Mr. BLOOM. I would like to know what is in the gentleman's mind, what his thoughts are with reference to neutrality?

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. I shall be pleased to restate my views for the gentleman. Briefly, I do not believe it possible for any man, whether he is the President of the United States, the King of England, or any other ruler, to carry out the provisions of this proposed legislation, but I do favor legislation dictated by common sense and actual experience.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman another half minute.

Will the gentleman answer "yes" or "no"; if an amendment is offered by someone to strike out everything in the bill, leaving only section 16, which repeals the laws passed in 1935, 1936, and 1937, would the gentleman vote for that?

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Do I understand from your question that you intend going back to the law as it has existed for 145 years?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Yes; I believe I would vote for that change rather than the present proposal.

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman would vote for it? The answer is "yes"?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLOOM. The regular order is that I have the floor.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; but the gentleman yielded half a minute to Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY and was talking himself.

Mr. BLOOM. I yield the gentleman another half minute, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. My answer to the gentleman is I am against all legislation which makes a mystery of or leaves in any doubt the present foreign or international policy of our country. [Applause.] Let the world know where we stand and let that stand be against war and in favor of peace. The American people and my constituents in particular are peace loving and hate war. I intend to be guided by their wishes and shall oppose and vote against any legislation which in any way might endanger the future safety of our citizens or the security of our beloved country.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BLACKNEY].

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Chairman, the question of neutrality, which the House is now discussing, is one of the paramount issues before the American people today because it concerns the welfare of the United States and of the 122,000,000 of people residing therein. I have received hundreds of letters from my constituents from the Sixth District of Michigan on the subject of neutrality, the great majority of which have been opposed to the pending resolution—House Joint Resolution 306—because of the delegation of power therein contained.

Historically the fundamental position which America was to take among the nations of the world was laid down by Washington in his Farewell Address. This Congress and preceding Congresses have fully appreciated the important truths contained in Washington's Farewell Address. Each year on Washington's Birthday the House listens to the reading of that famous message, and each year pertinent truths therein contained are forced upon our minds indelibly. In this Farewell Address Washington advises "Justice toward all nations, avoidance of inveterate antipathies against particular nations, and passionate attachments for other nations."

In this message he cautions the American people to avoid entangling European alliances as follows:

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand on foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalry, interest, humor, or caprice?

The message to avoid entangling alliances is especially pertinent today. Friendships between nations may be severed just as the friendships between individuals are severed by misunderstanding, by personal ambition, or otherwise. We have had a recent experience, as the result of our entrance into the World War, with the ingratitude of certain European powers with whom we were associated in that great European struggle. I am not only alluding to the nonpayment of those debts owed to us through our World War affiliations, but I am also alluding to other matters that have arisen. I think that it is self-evident that we will never have any guaranty of isolation from war unless we are willing to pay for it.

The best way to keep out of future wars is to remove as many as possible of the causes that contributed to our involvement in past wars. This is the prime purpose of our neutrality legislation. It should be American legislation, designed to help preserve the peace of America. There is no proper place in such legislation for futile and dangerous attempts to insure peace throughout the world, to punish far-distant aggressors, or to equalize the existing inequities between nations. Picking the aggressor is a most difficult and dangerous task. The unequal application of our neutrality laws is not neutrality, but nonintervention, which almost inevitably would defeat the prime purpose of this legislation to help keep us out of foreign wars. Such proposals amount to sanctions. Sanctions have been tried and have failed.

We are not going to have freedom from war unless we are willing to give up the trade profits that drag us into war. Is it not better to give up millions in war profits, if that be necessary, without the surrender of a single life, rather than go into a war that will cost billions in money, the deaths of untold numbers of fine American youth, and that may mean the ultimate destruction of our free Government?

Any bill that would take the war power out of the hands of Congress and place it in the hands of the President, who already has too much power in respect to making war, is an unwise bill. The power to fix the guilt of a foreign nation is too dangerous a power to exercise, unless we are ready to follow it up immediately with our battleships. A vast trade in war supplies built up with a belligerent would be a tremendous force to upset the neutrality of the United States. It stands to reason that the beneficiaries of such trade would expect our Government to protect their profitable business, and all this would add to our difficulties in maintaining a status of neutrality and would certainly greatly increase the probability of America's becoming involved in war.

Let us turn for a moment to the crisis formulating in the Far East, due to further Japanese aggression. I wish to call the attention of Congress to the part that American trade with Japan plays in the whole Sino-Japanese drama. In 1938, the United States exported to Japan $10,142,000 worth of automobiles and trucks, most of which were used in the undeclared war on China. In the same year we supplied Japan with $52,850,000 worth of cotton, much of which presumably was transformed into explosives. We also sold to Japan in 1938, $5,728,000 worth of chemicals, $27,000,000 worth of American oil and gasoline, $22,000,000 worth of iron and steel, including scrap material, which Japan made into bombs and shells, guns, and other implements of war.

The Washington Post, in a pertinent editorial in their issue of June 23, has this to say with reference to the Japanese proposition:

It should be fairly obvious that the United States, by adhering to a dispassionate noninterventionist policy in the Far East conflict, has found itself, nevertheless, in the unenviable role of silent partner to the Japanese invaders. American manufactured and raw materials have undeniably enabled Japan to prolong and intensify her subjugation of China. And as her campaign has progressed, Japan's arrogant defiance of international treaties and her disregard of the rights of other interests in war-torn China have reached unprecedented heights. While accepting all she can get in the way of war supplies from other powers, Japan has attempted by high-handed tactics, which in any previous era would have called for prompt and drastic reprisals, to cut off all foreign trade with her luckless victim.

At the outbreak of the Russo-Japanese War, Theodore Roosevelt said:

All officials of the Government—civil, military, and naval—are instructed to abstain from either action or speech which can cause irritation to either combatant. It is always unfortunate to bring Old-World antipathies and jealousies into our life, or by speech or conduct to excite anger or resentment toward our Nation in friendly, foreign lands; but, in a Government employee, whose official position makes him, in a sense, the representative of the people, the mischief of such actions is greatly increased.

The President, being the representative of the people, especially in foreign eyes, might well take note of these words uttered by his illustrious namesake.

Our greatest guaranty of peace is to mind our own business, keep out of the quarrels of European or Asiatic nations, and to maintain such a navy, air force, and army as will insure this hemisphere against aggression. If the United States adheres closely to Washington's caution of avoiding entangling European alliances, and also adheres to the old, historic Monroe Doctrine, her position in the New World will be greatly safeguarded.

In the views of the minority, set forth in the report of the Neutrality Act of 1939, it is stated:

No neutrality law at all would be better than this resolution, which, in the name of neutrality and under the guise of preventing provocative acts of American citizens, gives the President additional powers to be unneutral.

Under this resolution as it comes from committee, the President, after making a "neutrality" proclamation, can authorize the sale of arms on "ordinary commercial" credit to one side and deny such sales to the other side; he can permit our vessels to enter the ports of one belligerent loaded with needed supplies, while barring our vessels from the ports of another belligerent; he can prevent a foreign vessel carrying arms from leaving our ports by requiring a prohibitive bond whenever he suspects that the shipment will be transferred to a tender belonging to a belligerent but "the evidence is not deemed sufficient to justify forbidding the departure of the vessel," while permitting exactly the same sort of a shipment to proceed to another belligerent.

No President ever had such power before. The President has no such power under our Constitution or under international law. Congress alone can give him this power. To urge that the President would not misuse this power is not to state a reason for granting it.

The views of the minority further states:

In spite of the mandatory requirements of existing law, the President has failed to "find" the existence of the gigantic war in China. We, therefore, believe that any neutrality law should provide for the finding of a state of war between foreign states by the Congress, as well as by the President.

Further:

We all want to keep out of war. We cannot do this by passing laws. Congress alone has power to declare war, but modern wars are no longer declared. The execution of our foreign policy, the conduct of our foreign affairs, is the responsibility of the President under our Constitution.

With all of his great power, however, the President has no power to keep our citizens from doing many things which experience teaches us may be provocative of war. Congress alone has this power.

The overwhelming majority of the people of this country wants us to keep America out of war. The overwhelming majority of the Congress wants to keep America out of any foreign war. Therefore, thoughtful care should be given to any neutrality bill before it becomes the law of the Nation.

I shall vote against House Joint Resolution 306 unless the delegation of power therein conveyed to the President be modified and the bill otherwise perfected. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Morr].

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, it should be apparent to everyone by this time that whatever else this bill may be and whatever may be its merits or its faults, there is at least one thing which it is not. It is not a neutrality bill. It was a mistake to call it that in the first place and we ought to be candid enough to cease referring to it as a neutrality bill during the remainder of this debate.

Everyone who is familiar with the President's foreign policy, insofar as it undertakes to lay down a course of conduct for the United States in its relations with belligerent foreign powers, knows that the purpose of this bill is to give the President the authority to put that policy into effect, without the necessity of further consulting the Congress in the future regarding the things he has repeatedly declared he intends to do in the carrying out of that policy.

Let us as intelligent, responsible legislators not futilely try to deceive ourselves in this regard. Let us not be so naive as to pretend that the object of this bill has anything to do with neutrality. Let us take it and consider it and debate it and vote upon it for exactly what it is—a bill demanded by the President and prepared under the order of the President to put a new and novel foreign policy invented by the President into actual and immediate operation. Read the bill section by section and line by line and you can find in it no other purpose and no other object.

Now many persons honestly agree with the President's declared policy as to what our relations with belligerent nations ought to be. Others just as honestly oppose it. But no one can honestly say that he does not know what that policy is and no informed person can seriously contend that neutrality has any place whatever in that policy. The very basis of his policy is one of unneutrality, and at no time has he overlooked the opportunity in his numerous statements upon the subject very frankly to make that fact perfectly clear to everyone.

Compare the President's famous Chicago speech a year ago with his recent message to the Congress in which he formally advised us of his intention to send in this bill. Compare these two declarations of the President, so widely separated in point of time, with every other declaration he has made and every action he has taken upon this particular subject in the meantime, and you will find no difference in any of them.

In his Chicago speech the President made the first official announcement of his policy, which shocked the country from one end to the other and which brought forth an almost unanimous adverse reaction from the people. It was in that speech that he proposed to quarantine the aggressor nations through a program of parallel action between the United States and the democracies of Europe. It was not that the people did not despise these dictators as much as the President did, for there is no true American whose soul is not filled with revulsion against their actions and their whole theory of government. But the people realized that however reprehensible the dictators may be the quarrels between them and the democratic states of Europe were not our quarrels, that whatever our individual feelings might be, as a nation we should and must mind our own business. And they realized further that to translate the President's proposal into an active national policy would be tantamount to an act of war. The people did not intend and they do not now intend to become a party to the eternal quarrels and wars of any of the European nations whether they be dictatorships or democracies.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we all know, and I assure you I am not talking politics or even criticizing the President when I say this—we all know that opposition never yet has caused the President to change his mind or his course of action once he has determined upon that course. And so, from the date of the Chicago speech right down to this minute the President has never ceased to insist that the welfare of this Nation demands that we take sides, definite sides, with one group of countries as against the other; that we inaugurate this policy and announce it to the world not merely after hostilities in Europe begin but before they begin; and he has declared repeatedly that he needed and wanted sufficient and ample authority by law to do this.

In his recent message to the Congress, which was the forerunner of this bill and in which he demanded this legislation, he again declared his intention of bringing the dictators to bay through parallel action with the European governments aligned against the dictators. He said, of course, that he did not propose to lead this Nation into war, but that he intended to accomplish his purpose "by methods less than war but more effective than words." The authority by which he then proposed to do this is the bill, House Joint Resolution 306, which we are now debating, under the wholly misleading title of a neutrality bill.

Mr. Chairman, I oppose this bill because my study not only of the bill itself but of its background and of the mistakable reason for its introduction has convinced me in my own mind that the President's declared policy is wrong, and that it is an unprecedented departure from all of the historic traditions and policies which have made for the peace and independence of this land. Certainly I do not believe that the President wants to lead us into a war. Nobody believes that. On the contrary, I have always been of the opinion that the President sincerely believes that the adoption and announcement of a definitely unneutral foreign policy in advance of war will enable us to avoid war by cooperating with the democratic governments to stop their neighboring dictators now. As I say, I believe the President is sincere in thinking this, but I am just as sincerely convinced that he is wrong.

I oppose this bill because, in my humble judgment, it is inherently calculated, rather, to lead us into war than to keep us out of it. I believe that through the exercise of the powers the President says he wants to exercise in this regard, and which this bill gives him blanket authority to exercise, the commission of an act of war by this Government in event of general European hostilities, in spite of all our efforts to avoid it, is well-nigh inevitable.

The fact that it is proposed here to furnish the implements of war to any belligerent nation which may be able to come to our shores and get them, coupled with the deliberately considered and admitted fact that only one group of nations would possibly be in position to do that, namely, that group with which the President has declared he intends to cooperate by every method short of war, is a fact which should give cause to every Member in his consideration of this bill. And it is a fact which should forever dispel from his mind any illusion he may heretofore have had that neutrality is the purpose of the bill. It is a fact which should cause him soberly to inquire of his own reason and his own judgment whether the policy to be established by this bill will not point the United States definitely on the road to war—a road which nobody wants to take, and a road which at the present time there is no utter excuse or reason for taking.

Time, I regret, will permit me to say nothing about the other provisions of the bill, except that they are without precedent in the whole legislative history of our country. Under these provisions the President is given the power virtually to order the lives and the conduct of our people in whatever manner he may choose; not merely in event of a war to which this Nation is a party, but in any war between any belligerent states. It is a power and a discretionary authority that has never been given to any President and which no other President has ever asked for.

Mr. Chairman, there may come a time when this Nation in defense of its own rights will go to war. And when that time comes we will go not only willingly but enthusiastically. But we will go to defend our own democracy and not for the futile purpose of again trying to make the world safe for democracy.

In the meantime, Mr. Chairman, this Nation is at peace. In spite of all the propaganda and the hysteria to the contrary, there is no reason why we cannot and should not remain at peace, at least so long as our rights as American citizens are not interfered with or threatened, if only we will continue to look to our own defense instead of to the defense of those European nations who are perfectly able to take care of themselves, and who will take care of themselves if once we let them understand that their quarrels are not ours and that we do not intend to become a party to them.

It is my conviction that the vote on this bill will decide whether from now on, as a nation, we are going to mind our own business and whether we shall continue to follow the admonitions of Washington and of Jefferson to keep free from all entangling European alliances, whether they be with democracies or dictators. If the people of this country, having full understanding of the question here involved, could speak with authority for themselves today, I think I know what their verdict would be. As one of those who represents them in this body, and who is responsible to them, and to them alone, I intend to vote to sustain that verdict. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GERLACH] such time as he may desire.

Mr. GERLACH. Mr. Chairman, members of the Committee, ladies, and gentlemen, I oppose the passage of this bill because it is contrary to the American way of doing things.

The Constitution itself grants the power to declare war to Congress, and I believe that authority should be jealously retained by Congress; also, the power to name aggressors or to outline "unsafe zones" too dangerous for American travelers, American ships, or American exporters amounts; in fact, to the power to make war.

As Walter Lippmann says:

It is not to be denied that the power to name an aggressor and to seek to injure him is war, though it has been described as "something short of war."

I think the bill confers too much war-making power on the Chief Executive. Here in this great democracy of America we know that war power is always safer in the hands of the people. We want to keep it as near there as possible; at least, we should keep this responsibility with the peoples' chosen representatives in Congress, where it was vested by the framers of our Constitution.

God forbid that we who, under our tradition of government, rule supreme and make of this a government of the people, by the people, and for the people, should ever relinquish that right and give to one sole, single individual this greatest power of all.

Let me remind you that many historians claim that some of our Presidents have deliberately manufactured war. Let us safeguard our Nation so that hereafter no one could do that if he would.

As Senator BORAH said when he questioned the wisdom of permitting the sale of arms to nations at war, "it would make an arsenal out of the United States."

For the life of me, I cannot see where it would serve the cause of peace or humanity in any way. I feel sure that only harm, great harm, would come from it.

Under the sale of arms proposal in this bill, we would have to stand prepared to supply guns and ammunition and airplanes to any nation engaged in conflict, subject, to the proviso, that the arms customer must come to our shores in his own ships to get them. In practice this would mean that we would become the armory for the belligerent who had control of the seas. The question is, Can we occupy such a status and fail to become involved in the conflict ourselves? I fear not. In other words, is this state of affairs neutrality? I answer emphatically no. It is the very opposite of neutrality.

On the other hand, our present act, without these new and untried measures proposed in this bill, may act as a guaranty to keep us out of a European conflict, if we will. America needs only to invoke the present act to halt shipments of arms and implements of war, loans and credits to belligerents and to remain definitely neutral, if we will.

The people of this country are overwhelmingly determined to stay out of war, and I think it can be done if we only maintain the will to do it and safeguard the maintenance of the vital interests of a free, independent United States through traditional American methods.

We all want world peace, of course, if we can get it; but we must not overlook the fact that it is our responsibility—our solemn duty, if you please—to promote North American peace. We must think of those who will carry the guns and pay the bills if war comes. That is why I am so irrevocably opposed to the passage of this bill. That is why I trust that the Members here will not be influenced by the emotions, the sympathies and the fears of a world crisis and commit a great wrong by the passage of this act.

After all, neutrality legislation is nothing new. The first act in America was introduced by George Washington in 1794, and the principles of that neutrality were so well founded that they have been adopted as a standard of conduct by the majority of nations, and are just as true today as the day they were first uttered.

This is no time for hysteria. It is no time to change the fundamental way of doing things. It is no time to broadcast to any nation in Europe that we are on its side. Our side is still these United States of America and safeguarding American blood and American treasures, even the priceless treasure of the American spirit, are our first responsibility.

It seems to me, ladies and gentlemen, that this bill is a concession to the gods of war and I, who worked in a munitions factory during the last war, know full well what vengeful gods they are. Their creed is profits, blood money though it be, and they are dedicated to the destruction of human life. Surely it would be a backward step for this Nation to open avenues now closed by our present neutrality act for the sale of implements of death.

As proof that this bill is not a neutrality bill and that it definitely places us in the unneutral class let me quote. The Associated Press says that under this bill "if war should come to Europe, America's vast resources would concededly be available to Great Britain, France, and their allies."

If this bill were to pass, and in the event of war our war implements would be available to a nation, who could "cash and carry"? We all know what nation would qualify. Great Britain would have the money, or know where to get it, and in all probability she would have control of the sea. Therefore, under this misnamed, "misdubbed" Neutrality Act, America's resources would be available to Great Britain. Neutrality, indeed. What wrongs may be committed in your name.

In this connection it might be well to remind you of Sherwood Eddy's statement:

Preparedness prepares for war but does not prevent it.

It is that thought which makes me so anxious to see the defeat of this measure, for I sincerely believe that the passage of this bill, with the present situation as it is, will be a definite step away from real neutrality. It will be contrary to our American tradition and will serve as fuel to war rather than to deter it. I fear its passage will delay the time when the Golden Rule is the universal law and all nations live in peace with one another. [Applause]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GILLIE].

THE ROOSEVELT-BLOOM BILL

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Chairman, after the confusion which has largely marked neutrality hearings before Senate and House committees, it strikes me that we are faced today with a peculiarly solemn responsibility to begin at the beginning of the whole problem, and to cut through a tangled underbrush of catch-phrases to find for the country a pathway to real and permanent peace. It seems obviously desirable that we take as our starting point the accepted definition of neutrality—if it is our sincere purpose to achieve neutrality.

Neutrality, properly understood, means impartiality, the refusal to take sides, the refusal to help either side to any foreign war. It could mean a willingness to help all sides alike; but geographical and other circumstances beyond our control make an equal extension of aid to all parties to any foreign war a practical impossibility. So, recognizing actualities, neutrality must mean for us a refusal to aid either side.

It is highly important, at the outset, to note that every alternative to such a refusal is sponsored by persons or elements who have made no secret of their partisan preference to one side of a possible war in Europe. Nor is this preference erased or concealed by any amount of fancy rhetoric.

Noting this as pertinent background to the immediate controversy, it is vital that we ask ourselves certain questions:

First, in the event of a war in Europe, do we actually want to enact legislation calculated to give expression to this obvious will of the people to remain neutral?

Second, if so, then how deep, sincere, and earnest is that desire?

Third, are we willing to limit our attitude to a meaningless gesture?

Fourth, or are we determined to make whatever sacrifices may be necessary to accomplish this natural desire for peace?

Bearing these questions in mind, let us address ourselves to the various courses open to us at this time. And let us consider, in the light of logic and the lessons of history, what are the probable consequences of each course.

Completely unacceptable to persons with a memory of what occurred from 1914 to 1917 is the proposal by certain legislators to repeal all neutrality legislation and to rely upon the body of international law which prescribes both the rights and responsibilities of neutrals.

When the World War broke out 25 years ago there was no neutrality legislation on our statute books. With complete freedom, there was a disgraceful unneutral management of our neutral obligations. Our foreign policy was made to follow the lines laid down by the British Foreign Office. Favoritism toward the Allies, plus a shocking amount of State Department muddling, produced tensions which led us straight into involvement as a belligerent. With an even more unneutral Executive to reckon with today, we dare not trust to international law alone.

Under consideration by the House today is the Roosevelt-Bloom bill. I will not call it a neutrality bill because it does not provide for neutrality. It is worse than no bill at all. Proponents of real neutrality should have nothing to do with it.

This bill, which the President has ordered us to pass, would open up unrestricted trade to all belligerents on a credit-and-carry basis—the title to the goods to pass to the purchaser before the goods shall leave an American port. What this bill would do, therefore, relative to war in Europe, would be to make the United States the effective ally and source of supply for Great Britain and France against those countries' enemies—because Great Britain and France have command of the seas and the ocean-carrying facilities with which to come to American shores and carry away American goods.

This is entirely consistent with the President's well-known favoritism for France and Britain. It is not, however, consistent with his equally well-known dislike for Japan; for it would favor Japan in the Pacific as much as it would favor Britain and France in the Atlantic—and this despite the fact that Japan leans toward the enemies of Britain and France. Thus would we be, to say the very least, working at cross purposes.

At its worst, however, the Roosevelt-Bloom bill would have, inevitably, the effect so well described by my distinguished colleague from Indiana, the Honorable Louis Ludlow, when he said:

A vast trade in war supplies built up with a belligerent would be a tremendous force to upset the neutrality of the United States. It would have the effect of a million hawsters, pulling America into the war on the side of the belligerent with whom our citizens would have these favorable trade relations. It is nothing more or less than human that the beneficiaries of such trade would bear down upon our Government to protect their enormously profitable business; and all of this would add to the complexities of maintaining a status of neutrality, and would certainly enhance the probability of America becoming involved in war.

There remains, then, just one general course of action practically capable of providing us with reasonable certainty of actual neutrality.

If we dare not trust to international law alone, if we cannot afford to take the risks of a cash-and-carry policy which would have the actual effect of one-sidedness, then we must seek neutrality in a negative direction. That is to say, we must simply refuse to give any support to either or any side of a foreign war. Only thus can we hope to remain truly neutral.

In the Senate legislation to this end has been sponsored by Senators NYE, BONE, and CLARK of Missouri. Friends of real peace have enthusiastically endorsed that legislation. But their equal endorsement has been consistently and intelligently accorded to similar legislation, commendably simplified, which was offered in the House at the beginning of this session by Representative LUDLOW.

The Ludlow bill, H. R. 163, was buried in committee. It provides that:

Upon the outbreak of war between two or more foreign nations the President shall issue a proclamation forbidding (1) exports of all kinds and (2) loans and credits to said belligerent countries or to the nationals of said belligerent countries.

Along with a preponderant majority of my constituents who by the thousands have made their wishes known to me, I share Mr. Ludlow's confidence that this bill would do more than any other neutrality bill that has been proposed in either House to keep the United States free of foreign entanglements and free of any part in the mass murder that is war.

There are those who state that the United States cannot avoid being drawn into the next world war regardless of what type of neutrality legislation we adopt. But Dr. Charles A. Beard, eminent historian and political scientist, has lately declared:

In my opinion, the United States should and can stay out of the next war in Europe, and the wars that follow the next war. * * * If it is the duty of the United States Government to promote, protect, and defend the security and welfare of the American people, then its foreign policy should be determined with reference to that objective. * * * It should not dabble in quarrels and squabbles in Europe or Asia, about the origins of which it knows little or nothing. It should make known to the world, clearly and positively, that it does not propose to take part in any European or Asiatic war over any European or Asiatic interests.

If the President is indisposed to such a policy, then it becomes the solemn obligation of the people's Congress, by means of mandatory neutrality legislation, to require him to do so. Opponents of mandatory neutrality complain that it will "tie the President's hands." It will not tie them from the execution of peace. It will tie them from the execution of war. For such special safeguards, one would like to believe, the President would be grateful. But, grateful or not, those safeguards should, in the interests of this Nation and its people, be provided.

Advocates of strict, mandatory neutrality are by no means insensitive to the fact that democracy is in danger. We must, indeed, defend it. But it is principally endangered by war. As Americans it is our first responsibility to see to it that that threat is averted. For if it once disappears from America democracy will, in all probability, be banished from the earth.

For modern war does not thrive in a democratic atmosphere; that atmosphere must disappear as the first requisite of waging a modern war. Indeed, in this very House there are today a set of bills comprising the administration's so-called industrial mobilization plan, which are ready for adoption the instant this country shall be drawn into a state of war. And that industrial mobilization plan, theoretically implementing a war to make the world safe for democracy, would actually constitute an end of democracy and an enthronement of military fascism the like of which America has never known.

We cannot defend democracy by destroying it at home. We cannot end fascism by extending its scope to include the American Republic.

The price for peace to me seems reasonable. But at its highest, it is small indeed by comparison with the horrible price which war exacts. But the price for peace can be paid in only one currency—the currency of strict, honest, straightforward, sincere, mandatory neutrality. The Roosevelt-Bloom bill does not prescribe that brand of neutrality. The Roosevelt-Bloom bill, indeed, does not promise us any neutrality policy worthy of the name. [Applause.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to use to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BURGIN].

Mr. BURGIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to invite your attention to the preamble in House Joint Resolution 306, and particularly to this expression:

That the policy of the United States is one of neutrality, in accord with the rules of international law, and that, in order to carry out this policy, we are willing to place certain restrictions on certain natural rights of our citizens.

The United States wants peace. There can be no doubt about that. I believe that feeling exists in the heart of all of our people, regardless of party, race, or creed. We want to keep war out of the United States, and we want war kept out of the world. I believe this will or desire for peace permeates the thinking of every man in public life, from President Roosevelt down to the least and last man. No one, I think, in this House will vote for any legislation except with this in mind. I believe the President's action in the past trying times has been a potent factor in discouraging the spread of the war spirit in other parts of the world.

Since we want to live in peace with our sister nations, we are willing to abridge some of our natural rights by making it unlawful to do something that we have a natural right to do. In trying to carry out the desire of our citizens to keep out of war, we have enacted a law that we call the Neutrality Act. No other government in the world has so restricted the actions of its citizens in this particular as has our own Government. A prominent citizen, testifying before the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee, made the assertion in regard to neutrality that "there ain't no such animal." This I believe to be a true statement, even if the grammar is bad. We must be realistic, and face the fact that neutrality means being impartial. It is impossible for individuals to be impartial in regard to any contest, and particularly when it is between nations. Congress can enact a statute of impartiality, and that is what this bill is intended to do.

The act that we are considering today provides certain changes in the present neutrality law. These changes conform largely to the suggestions made by our able Secretary of State, Cordell Hull, on May 27. Secretary Hull has shown himself to be actuated by the highest principles and motives in the conduct of his office. The suggestions that he has made, which are embodied in H. J. Res. 306, have met with wide approval by the press of the United States, regardless of political affiliation.

I realize, as Secretary Hull did, that no law which we can write can be guaranteed to keep us out of war. All we can do is to see to it that our legislation, first, minimizes the chance that war will break out at all—the only really safe way of keeping out of war; and second, if it does break out, that it will not involve us.

The most important change suggested to the present neutrality law by House Joint Resolution 306 is the repeal of the arms embargo. The United States has had a long experience with embargoes, and a very unhappy one, though some of the honorable gentlemen seem not to have discovered that fact. On the one occasion when we tried it on a large scale—1807—it first nearly wrecked the country; later, reenacted in a different form, it brought us into direct conflict with both France and England, who were then engaged in the Napoleonic wars. It was tried again a third time, and the effect was that it led us directly into the War of 1812. When, as some people now urge, an arms embargo is proposed as a method of keeping the peace, I should like to point out that all the evidence of history suggests that it is not a panacea for keeping us out of war.

We have also heard a lot of talk about keeping the United States "truly neutral." This is a familiar argument for an arms embargo. Yet, actually, the effect of an arms embargo is the equivalent of presenting one or two nations with an Atlantic fleet and a free blockade.

A third point sometimes made is that in case we sell arms abroad, the United States will become an arsenal for warring powers. It is true there might be an increased manufacture of arms and ammunition, but that is not the kind of thing which would really be sought. What warring powers need today, even more than arms, are supplies of oil, of automobiles and motors, of machines, of machine tools, or chemicals and the like. Nobody here is offering to embargo those. In the last war we sold $9 worth of supplies to belligerents for every $1 worth of arms, and today we know that the proportion of arms would be far less, since the recognized armies of today want machinery even more than rifles.

In my opinion, Secretary Hull has worked out the best formula, and it is substantially this: Let our trade of all kinds be open to anyone. Keep American nationals, so far as possible, out of the line of fire, so that we are not involved. Arrange matters so that goods traveling to belligerents on the high seas shall be owned and paid for by foreigners, and what happens to them is their affair and not ours. In other words, mind our own business, and do not, by embargoes, use our laws to supplement and assist warlike powers in blockading their enemies. This more nearly approximates the settled international practice and settled international law. I submit, accordingly, that House Joint Resolution 306, as now before the House, should pass. [Applause.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. LEWIS of Colorado] having assumed the chair, Mr. COOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the House Joint Resolution 306, Neutrality Act of 1939, had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JUNE 29, 1939

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, who hast appointed our times and the bounds of our habitation, who openest for us doors which no man can shut, and who searchest out all the hidden things of men: Help us in these moments of dedication, as we cast ourselves on Thee, to realize the greatness which is ours as children of the highest.

Give us ever true discernment for the hour, that we may seek freely the day's truth and compass heartily the day's duty. In the examination of great questions, keep us serene and calm, and make us ever mindful of the fact that kindness is strength and candor is the courage of the soul. Make us able to go whither our sense of right would lead us; and grant that in the stormy days of manhood's striving, as in the shadowed peace of sunset's glow, we may cherish in our souls visions of the things that shall be hereafter, when all of life's tomorrows shall be sunlit with Thy love. We ask it in our Saviour's name. Amen.

THE MONETARY SITUATION

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have a telegram and statement which I think are in the nature of petitions. I ask to have them printed in the RECORD and referred to the appropriate committee.

There being no objection, the telegram and statement were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y.

HON. WILLIAM E. BORAH,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Fred H. Sexauer, contact man for the national farm organizations, as a member of the Committee for the Nation, today released a statement bearing on monetary situation. It would be most helpful if you could introduce this statement into the RECORD. Copy will be delivered to you. At request of Fred H. Sexauer.

COMMITTEE FOR THE NATION.

Commenting on the action of the Senate in rescinding the President's power over the gold content of the dollar, Fred H. Sexauer, who since 1933 has acted as contact man for the national farm organizations on monetary policy, released the following statement, which had been sent to all Members of Congress on behalf of the Committee for the Nation, of which he is a member:

"This action by the Senate in itself does not materially change, so far as price level or business conditions are concerned, the situation that has existed since February 1934, when the dollar was made equivalent to one thirty-fifth of an ounce of gold. It can become an important step forward if Congress will now use the monetary powers which it has recovered to lift the depression, as many other nations have done.

"Farm organizations and the Committee for the Nation have consistently urged that Congress live up to its constitutional duty 'to coin money' and 'regulate the value thereof.'

"The most constructive step that could be taken to bring about a prompt recovery would be the enactment during the present session of Congress of the monetary authority bill drafted by the late Frank A. Vanderlip and introduced into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH on June 20, 1936. This bill had the support of the major farm organizations and of the Committee for the Nation.

"The purpose of the bill was to bring money under the control of the Government and to leave credit under the control of bankers. The bill would set up an agency of Congress. A monetary authority as disinterested as the Supreme Court, to maintain a stable dollar with unvarying buying power in relation to a cross section of 30 to 40 of the most important basic commodities. Thus the dollar would be kept constant in relation to the necessities of life instead of a fixed weight of gold.

"There would be set up in America a free gold market, such as exists in England, making it possible for all to purchase and own gold. Simultaneously, silver would also be released in a free market which, with the 1926 price level restored, would mean a 60 cents to 70 cents open-market price for silver without Treasury subsidy. Thus American banks, corporations, and private citizens could own and store their wealth in the precious metals, the prices of which might fluctuate from day to day, as other commodities do, but the dollar's buying power over the average of all commodities would remain constant.

"When the history of the Roosevelt administration is written in its proper perspective, its most constructive and helpful act will be found to have been the restoration of prices in 1933 with the abandonment of the gold standard. This was the course urged by the Committee for the Nation and the national farm organizations. It was not devaluation but a revaluation to remove the swollen and harmful purchasing power that gold had acquired. While the price of gold was raised 69 percent (from $20.67 to $35 an ounce), farm and other basic commodity prices rose 67 percent, and the cost of living rose only 3 percent. Three and a half million men went to work in private enterprise in 4 months. Between March 1933 and February 1934 the value of stocks and bonds listed on the New York Stock Exchange increased approximately 50 percent, or more than $20,000,000,000. Private enterprise was being revitalized and our democratic institutions safeguarded.

"The moving finger of history will also record that the greatest economic error of the Roosevelt administration was abandonment of this policy of restoration of prices by monetary action in favor of a fixed price of gold in January 1934. America, almost the last of the great nations to partially free itself from deflation by leaving the gold standard, was the first to return to it in January 1934.

"Since then, during the past 5½ years, we have had only normal fluctuations in business around a depression level. There was a minor upswing that followed a rise in world gold prices during 1936 and 1937. Then a new wave of world-wide hoarding brought about a rise in the value of gold and a collapse of commodity prices in the latter part of 1937 and 1938, pulling down farm income, general business, and employment.

"With continuing high value for gold resulting from unrest, war preparations, and hoarding, this depressed condition is likely to continue, possibly for long periods. It will be accompanied, if we adhere to the present price of gold, with low prices and distress for farm and other basic commodities, except silver, and by heavy unemployment and poor business conditions, this will lead to an extension of price fixing for agricultural products, continued efforts to regiment business, and more State intervention.

"Is it not time for the United States to heed the experience of the sterling nations? The principal producers among them have increased their prices of gold much more than the United States. Selling their commodities in world and domestic markets for the same reduced amount of gold as our farmers receive, they have an average price, in their own currencies, 30 percent higher than the 55,000,000 farmers and basic producers of the United States. These nations have high employment, profitable business, two to four times as much building activity, and generally balanced budgets. During the past 4 years, with six hundred millions of population, their cumulative budget deficit has been less than one-third billion dollars, while the United States, with one-quarter the population, has had a deficit nearly 40 times greater—more than $12,000,000,000.

"Since 1929 our price level has been distorted. It has been like trying to play billiards on a stepladder. Those on the floor had to keep calling for subsidies to lift them up.

"It was not lack of productive power since 1929 that caused our distress. Our farms were able to produce food and fiber in abundance. Our factories were the best tooled, under the most efficient management, equipped with the best scientific processes the world has ever known. We had millions of the most skillful workers asking for nothing but a chance to produce and earn. What was at fault was our mechanism of distribution—our monetary system. Chaos was written on our price tags. A free enterprise system can function only when the price tags remain in balance under free competition between all groups. Then only can goods and services be exchanged in highest volume. The swollen value of the gold in our dollar still holds the dollar prices of basic products depressed and in unbalance. Only when Congress corrects this shall we have general prosperity. Only then can the whole Nation swap goods and services on a level plane as formerly."

COMMITTEE FOR THE NATION.

MORAL REARMAMENT

Mr. ANDREWS. I introduce a joint resolution for appropriate reference, and request that it may be read.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 163) favoring moral rearmament was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, as follows:

Whereas in 1782 the United States in Congress assembled approved the printing of the Holy Bible and recommended it to the inhabitants of the United States; and

Whereas it is apparent that a revitalization of the moral and spiritual life of this Nation and of the world is greatly to be desired: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That this Congress reaffirm the original resolution adopted in 1782 and once more commend to the people of the United States the principles and precepts contained in the Holy Scriptures as America's greatest textbook on right living.

THE LATE ENSIGN JOSEPH HESTER PATTERSON, UNITED STATES NAVY

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, on the 23d of last May one officer and 25 men died in the Squalus, a submarine of the United States Navy.

I introduce a bill (S. 2723) to provide a posthumous advancement in grade for the late Ensign Joseph Hester Patterson, United States Navy. The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to issue posthumously to the late Ensign Joseph Hester Patterson, United States Navy, a commission as a lieutenant (junior grade) of the Navy with date of rank as of June 4, 1939.

Mr. President, I have here a letter from the father of Pat, as he was called in the Navy, or Hester, as he was called at home. His home was in Oklahoma City. The letter is from Joe H. Patterson, of Oklahoma City. I wish to read in part from this letter, omitting personal references which I deem it not proper to read:

MY DEAR SENATOR LEE: Ensign J. H. Patterson, who, together with 25 other men, went down on the submarine Squalus off the coast of New Hampshire, is our youngest son.

Senator LEE, he was to become a lieutenant in the United States Navy on, as he called it, his submarine, June 4. The last letter we received from him was to the effect that he had passed the examination for the promotion to lieutenant, and his lieutenant uniforms had been received; and he was so happy over becoming a lieutenant that he wanted mother and I to come up on June 4 to be present and go over his ship.

Mr. President, I should like to tell the Senate a few things about this young man.

Hester, as he was known at home, never failed in any task he undertook. He graduated at Classen High School in 1930 with the highest honors. The year he spent in Oklahoma City University he was credited with high honors. He graduated from the Naval Academy at Annapolis in 1936. He was the only Naval Academy graduate representing the United States Naval Academy in the Olympic Games. His Naval Academy record will show that he has to his credit more honors and records than any other midshipman graduated.

He was a Christian boy. He was a member of the First Baptist Church of Oklahoma City, and until he entered Annapolis he was a member of the choir of that church.

He was to have become a lieutenant, junior grade, on June 4 last. He was within 11 days of his cherished goal. He was appointed from Oklahoma to the Naval Academy. He was ambitious to be an officer on one of Uncle Sam's ships to serve Uncle Sam on the high seas. No doubt he dreamed of the day when he would receive his promotion as lieutenant. He graduated with honors, and then he was assigned to duty. He was the only officer on the submarine who perished in the disaster of May 23. This bill will make it possible for him to be buried as a lieutenant. He will be buried in Arlington Cemetery. I am sure it will be a consolation to his parents to have him buried as a lieutenant.

What is patriotism? Patriotism is an intangible, invisible something that makes every whisker in your chin and every hair on your head stiffen like wire when you hear the thrilling strains of the Star-Spangled Banner. Patriotism is an intangible, spiritual something that makes the blood drops in the ends of your fingers tingle when you hear the thrilling story of the young Capt. Nathan Hale, and visualize him standing on the scaffold with his hands bound behind him, when you hear the British officer address him, "Have you anything to say before you die?" and then, in your imagination, you see him straighten to his full height, every inch a soldier, and utter those words that will live as long as we live, when he said:

Sir, all that I regret is that I have but one life to give for my country.

Ensign Patterson and the other 25 men who perished on the Squalus had only one life each to give for their country, but they have given that life; and we today are more secure because of that sacrifice. Because of that tragedy the United States Navy will make us more secure by improving the mechanical equipment, by improving and perfecting the methods of rescue from submarines.

Therefore I introduce this bill to pay tribute to Ensign Patterson by giving him a posthumous promotion to the grade of lieutenant in order that he may be buried as Lieutenant Patterson.

The bill (S. 2723) to provide a posthumous advancement in grade for the late Ensign Joseph Hester Patterson, United States Navy, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

WASHINGTON HALL—MESSMORE KENDALL

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the Wisconsin Society, Sons of the American Revolution. This resolution is an expression of appreciation by the society to Messmore Kendall, a native of the State of Michigan, and now a resident of New York.

This distinguished citizen has constructed at the New York World's Fair the colonial building known as Washington Hall. It is maintained by him. The very purpose of that building or institution is to keep alive the thing of which the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] has just spoken—patriotism of the mind and soul and heart.

I ask that the resolution be printed in connection with my remarks and appropriately referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The resolution presented by Mr. WILEY was referred to the Committee on the Library, as follows:

Whereas there has been erected at the New York World's Fair a colonial building known as Washington Hall, donated and maintained by Mr. Messmore Kendall, of New York City, president general of the National Society, Sons of the American Revolution, for the use of this society and all patriotic organizations, to serve as an example to the world as the heritage that was handed down by America's founders—the traditions and principles of liberty promulgated 150 years ago still maintained with no serious thought of change—and to house a collection of relics and a display of battle flags of the American Revolution and colonial campaigns; and

Whereas Washington Hall was recently accepted by Mr. Voorhees, vice president of the fair, on behalf of the fair corporation, and confidence expressed that Washington Hall would become one of the major exhibits of the fair; and

Whereas the eyes of the world are on the world's fair today, we, as a nation, should exhibit to the world the proud fact that a government, founded on the priceless liberties granted by our Constitution, which came into being at the time of Washington's inauguration 150 years ago, is still lasting and an example to all other nations; and

Whereas, in addition to this gift of Washington Hall, Mr. Kendall, as chairman of a committee appointed by Mr. Grover Whalen, of the New York World's Fair, recently arranged for and promoted the reenactment of the journey of George Washington and his escort from Mt. Vernon to New York for his inauguration; secured the personnel of the gentlemen taking the several parts; arranged for the use of the old colonial coach in which the journey was made; and arranged all details of this interesting historical ceremony, the entire performance of which commanded the far-reaching interest and comment of the country, the final reenactment of the inauguration ceremonies being the focal point of interest at the opening ceremonies of the fair; and

Whereas there exists in the world today a spirit of intolerance, both religious and civil, and dictators are crushing the liberties of the people and threatening the democracies of the world, this gift, Washington Hall, becomes an outstanding example that the spirit of liberty and tolerance inculcated into the Constitution by the founders of the Nation still lives and will be a meeting place to keep alive that spirit which is now severely threatened; and

Whereas the hall is more than a museum of most precious relics left to us by our history, it is a shrine for American patriots and a meeting place for all who wish to renew faith in the democratic principles handed down to us by George Washington: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the board of managers of the Wisconsin Society, Sons of the American Revolution, extend its grateful thanks to Mr. Messmore Kendall for his generous gift of money and for his leadership in keeping alive faith in America; and be it further

Resolved, That this resolution be incorporated in the official minutes of this meeting and a copy, dated June 27, 1939, be forwarded to the Honorable ALEXANDER WILEY, United States Senator from Wisconsin, so that an official record may be made of the acts of this outstanding citizen.

MONETARY POLICY AND MONETARY AGENCY

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, on the 15th day of June of this year I introduced a bill (S. 2606) amending the Federal Reserve Act; declaring a monetary policy; establishing and instructing a monetary agency, and for other purposes. I am seeking light in regard to the proposed legislation. I invite every student of our monetary policy, every political economist, to examine this bill, and I will appreciate it if they will write me, making such criticisms and suggestions as may occur to them.

I now ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, Senate bill 2606, to be followed by a commentary on the bill, by way of explanation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 2606) amending the Federal Reserve Act; declaring a monetary policy; establishing and instructing a monetary agency, and for other purposes, is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) it is hereby declared to be the duty of the Congress of the United States exclusively, to create and regulate the value of money through an agency subject to the instruction of Congress and the removal by Congress in the event that such agency at any time fails to enjoy the confidence either of the Senate or the House of Representatives.

(b) The word "money" as employed in this act includes metallic and paper currency and the demand bank deposits and checks drawn thereon employed as a medium of exchange.

Sec. 2. (a) The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System shall in future have the title of the Federal Reserve Board (hereinafter called the Board). The Board shall consist of 12 members, one for each Federal Reserve district, with terms running from 1 to 12 years with the same annual salary and perquisites as now provided by law. Upon the retirement of any individual member of the Board during his service, his successor shall hold for the balance of the term for which his predecessor was chosen. Upon the termination of the full term, the successor of such member shall be appointed for a period of 12 years. The members of such Board shall be nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The President shall designate in making the nomination the terms of each nominee, beginning with the 1st day of March 1940. The Board, when established, shall annually select its own chairman and vice chairman. The authority of the Board shall include all powers at present enjoyed by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and such other powers as may be authorized by law.

(b) After the organization of the Board, as herein provided, the Federal Reserve banks shall be operated as one institution with 12 branches and subordinate branches as now or hereafter established.

(c) The Board shall, after the passage of this act, exercise complete control over the personnel of the Federal Reserve bank with the power to remove for the good of the service. The directors of the Federal Reserve banks shall retain their offices until the organization of the Board herein provided for, and thereafter until the Board appoint their successors in office. The Board shall have the right to appoint class A, B, and C directors. The Board shall appoint managers as the executive heads of the district branches and subbranches of the Federal Reserve bank.

(d) The Federal Reserve advisory council and the Open Market Committee shall cease upon the passage of this act. The authority vested in the Open Market Committee shall be exercised exclusively by the Federal Reserve bank under the direction of the Board.

(e) The power to regulate the volume and value of money as authorized and directed by the monetary policy of Congress shall be exercised by the Board.

Sec. 3. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to place to the credit of each member bank of the Federal Reserve System an amount of money equal to the amount paid by such member bank for its stock in the Federal Reserve bank of its district with 6 percent interest upon such amount from the date of the last dividend up to the date of the passage of this act, whereupon, such stock certificates shall be delivered to the Secretary of the Treasury and canceled. Upon the passage of this act all of the assets, property, rights in law and equity, of the Federal Reserve banks and the branches thereof shall be vested in the United States Government and the liabilities of the Federal Reserve banks shall be the liabilities of the United States; and such banks shall be an agency of the United States for the purposes of this act in the issue of money as herein defined and the regulation of the value thereof. Such banks, as one institution, shall be subject to the Board in pursuance of the instructions and policy of the Congress of the United States.

Sec. 4. (a) The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall hereafter exclusively examine the member banks of the Federal Reserve System and shall be subject to the direction of the Board.

(b) All insured banks are hereby declared to be members of the Federal Reserve System and entitled to the rights and subject to the liabilities of membership of the Federal Reserve bank in their respective district subject to rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Board.

(c) The examination of such member banks by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall be without cost.

(d) The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall insure all member banks against the dishonesty of officers and employees and against robbery and assess the cost annually against the member banks in proportion to their deposits as of June 30 of each year.

(e) The double liability of stockholders in member banks shall cease after the passage of this act.

(f) Any member bank in temporary distress shall receive the assistance of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation where reorganization is practicable through local support.

(g) Remittances of a member bank to the Federal Reserve bank of its district shall be credited when received, with such exceptions as may be found expedient by the Board.

Sec. 5. The office of the Comptroller of the Currency shall be transferred and become a subdivision of the Board, and subject to the supervision thereof.

Sec. 6. (a) It is hereby declared to be the monetary policy of the Congress of the United States to provide an adequate supply of money, without redundancy, to meet the needs of the country in achieving maximum consumption and production; to correct the present depression, and to prevent future depressions and future indefensible expansion of money for speculative purposes.

(b) It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress to restore the index of the purchasing power of money to the standard established in 1926 by the Department of Labor and to maintain that standard, subject to the future orders of the Congress, in order that the Nation may have a monetary unit of account of uniform, permanent, debt-paying, purchasing power. The Board is charged with the duty of carrying out this policy by the purchase and sale through the Federal Reserve banks of bonds and bankable assets, and through all other means at their disposal. The Board shall inform Congress directly, without delay, of any additional power necessary to carry out the policy of Congress as herein declared.

(c) The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby instructed to cooperate with the Board to make effective the policy of Congress herein set forth.

Sec. 7. The paper currency of the United States shall hereafter consist of one form only, to be designated as "United States Currency" on the face of each note issued. Such currency shall be issued in the manner now provided by law for other issues in denominations similar to the present outstanding paper currency. All other forms of paper currency, including gold and silver certificates, shall be recalled and exchanged for the new United States Currency, as rapidly as it can be conveniently done, under the orders of the Board. The Board shall have the authority to direct the issue of currency in larger denominations for the use of the Federal Reserve bank.

Sec. 8. (a) All member banks shall be required, within 1 year after the passage of this act, to keep with the Federal Reserve bank the amount of its demand deposits in cash or credit, or in the bonds or notes of the United States, or obligations underwritten by the United States. The Federal Reserve bank, on the request of any member bank, shall buy such securities held by the member bank at the current market value, but not less than par, and give the member bank credit therefor. Any maturing obligations of the United States in notes or bonds shall be bought by the Federal Reserve bank at par.

(b) Any member bank requiring assistance to comply with this section shall have the right to hypothecate securities in sound bankable assets, with the right of substitution, and hold the same in trust for the Federal Reserve bank until such member bank by the sale of additional stock can provide the capital necessary to meet the requirement regarding its reserves.

Sec. 9. The Federal Reserve bank, in the event that there is need to contract the volume of outstanding credit, may sell its own obligations bearing an interest not exceeding 3 percent for the purpose of preventing indefensible credit expansion.

Sec. 10. Member banks are hereby authorized to make a reasonable charge for the keeping of accounts of depositors, not exceeding $1 a month for such service, and a further charge of not exceeding 10 cents a hundred dollars for checks paid by and through the member bank of deposit. Such member bank is authorized to act as an agent of a depositor, with his consent and approval, in making a loan on the depositor's account out of his demand deposit, and to make a reasonable charge therefor.

Sec. 11. The Board is hereby authorized and directed to create annually an amount of money equal to 4 percent of the amount of deposits estimated as of June 30 of the preceding year and place the same to the credit of the Treasury of the United States, general fund, to be employed subject to future acts of Congress in meeting the expenditures required under the Social Security Act, or in furnishing credit required for public relief or for constructive public enterprises.

Sec. 12. The Board is hereby instructed to make a special report to the Congress on the question of rates of interest in countries engaged in competitive commerce and to advise the Congress of the United States with regard to the rate of interest which should be employed in the United States as a means of enabling American enterprises to compete successfully with foreign commerce.

Sec. 13. This act shall be known as the Monetary Policy Act of 1939.

The explanatory statement submitted by Mr. LOGAN is as follows:

COMMENTARY ON SENATE BILL 2606

Section 1 of this act is a recognition by Congress of its duty to exclusively create and regulate the value of money as contemplated by the Constitution of the United States. The Supreme Court has held—in the Legal Tender cases—that Congress, and Congress alone, is charged with the power to create money. The Constitution, article 1, section 8, paragraph 5 explicitly authorizes Congress "to coin money and regulate the value thereof." The Supreme Court has held that the word "coin" applied to paper currency as well as metallic currency. Congress can only do this effectively through an agency of Congress, subject to the direction of Congress and subject to removal by Congress when the agency ceases to enjoy the confidence of Congress. It is believed that the service would be more efficient if the members executing this duty should be subject to removal by a resolution of either the Senate or the House of Representatives, since an agency of such importance should enjoy by its conduct the confidence both of the House and of the Senate.

The term "money" is defined in section 1 because that word is frequently used as applying only to legal-tender currency, while under the development of the modern banking system of the last half century over 90 percent of the monetary business of the people of the United States is transacted through checks drawn against demand deposits. These checks, under the banking system, are convertible on demand into legal-tender money. Such checks function as a medium of exchange and measure of value. Such checks, therefore, come within the meaning of the term "money" as defined in modern dictionaries as "anything conventionally employed as a medium of exchange and measure of value." Heretofore the demand deposits on which checks are drawn have been in very large part created by loans of the banks and contracted by the liquidation of loans. In this manner there has been no public control of the volume of such money, resulting in such money being created in excess at times and at other times contracted with injurious economic consequences. The present bill proposes to terminate this system and regulate the value of money by Congress through the regulation of the volume of money.

Section 2 restores to the agency of the Congress the original name, "Federal Reserve Board," for the reason that the connotation, "Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System," might indicate that the powers of regulating the volume and value of money are subject to the will of the Governors instead of subject to the will of Congress. It is of importance that there should be no misconception as to where the power of government rests in relation to the volume and value of money, and that it rests exclusively in Congress.

Section 2 also provides for one member of the Federal Reserve Board for each Federal Reserve district in order to give every district an opportunity of representation upon the Board. This section provides for terms of 1 to 12 years, each successor to the first 12 members of the Board to serve a full term of 12 years. This staggers the terms of members. The authority in the President to nominate the 12 members will give the opportunity of reorganizing the Board and renominating those whose service has been found acceptable and to discontinue the service of those who may not be regarded as desirable for this service. It gives abundant time for the consideration of this question.

It is essential that the Board should exercise complete control over the personnel of the Federal Reserve bank and its branches in order that the management shall be in complete sympathetic relationship with the Congress of the United States and its policy.

The Federal Reserve Advisory Council has proven to be inefficient and harmful and should be discontinued.

The open-market committee as established has proven to be entirely inefficient and under such rules and regulations as to prevent the powers of the System being employed in the protection of the stability of commerce and industry.

The powers should be exclusively in the hands of public officials under the direction of the policy of the Congress.

This section places the power in the hands of the agency which is to execute the will and the policy of the Congress.

Section 3 reimburses the banks about $135,000,000 invested in the stock of the Federal Reserve banks and transfers the ownership completely to the United States Government.

The first great reason for this ending of the private ownership of the Federal Reserve banks is that these banks were established for the purpose of concentrating and safeguarding the deposits of the people of the United States in the member banks. There are now over 60,000,000 of these deposits amounting to $60,000,000,000, nearly half of which are demand deposits. Under the private ownership of these banks private views and policies have exercised control through 6 out of 9 directors of the 12 Federal Reserve banks. Under such management since 1920, 16,000 individual banks have been put out of business through the mismanagement of the Federal Reserve System. This is the least of the evils. The statistical records disclose that the people of the United States have lost in products and services over $200,000,000,000 that they might have enjoyed under a stable condition of banking; and in addition to this, they have failed to achieve additional billions through the expansion of American production, which was easily possible under a sound system.

The people of the United States, through their Government, have a very much larger interest in the Federal Reserve banks in money than the so-called stockholders of the Federal Reserve banks. The stockholders have about $135,000,000 invested in stock. The United States has advanced to the Federal Reserve System approximately $4,500,000,000 of Federal Reserve currency without interest. The money so advanced to the member banks has been available for lending to the American people at high interest rates and the people have been paying high interest rates for the use of the money thus created by the exercise of the sovereign power of their Government.

Nor is this all. The Federal Reserve banks under the Gold Reserve Act of 1934, which few people understood, now holds about $12,500,000,000 of gold certificates, giving these privately owned banks the ownership of the gold which was taken from the citizens of the United States. Giving these gold certificates to the Federal Reserve banks is a singular anachronism because the gold certificate is not legal tender money in the United States, and if the member banks wanted to withdraw their reserves to satisfy their depositors, they could not use the reserves represented by gold certificates. There is no foreign demand for gold from the United States; it is all flowing to the United States, where it is not employed as a medium of exchange.

The people of the United States, therefore, have approximately $16,000,000,000 represented by gold certificates and Federal Reserve notes not to mention the billions of securities held by the United States to protect the advances of the Federal Reserve notes.

Since the people of the United States, therefore, have a hundred times as much invested in the Federal Reserve banks as the stockholders of the Federal Reserve banks, and since the public policy requires public control instead of private control, there is no answer to the reasonable demand that the United States should refund the stockholders the money they have employed, with reasonable interest thereon, and liquidate this undesirable ownership of the stock in the Federal Reserve banks.

Section 4: At present the examination of banks is made by the bank examiners of the Comptroller of the Currency, by the bank examiners of the Federal Reserve banks, by the State bank examiners, and by the examiners of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. There should be but one competent examination under a policy representing the policy laid down by the Congress of the United States. The examination should be made with a view to conserving the banks rather than destroying them through the destructive examinations which have been carried on during the last 19 years where bank examiners were frightened by the shrinkage of the assets of banks and of the solvency of bank depositors. Their examinations, based upon fear, have often been drastic and ruinous, causing the unnecessary liquidation of thousands of banks which might have been conserved under a wiser policy. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, which insures the deposits, has a primary motive of self-interest to protect such banks against the destruction of their assets. The proposed plan would leave the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation under the guidance of the Federal Reserve Board of arranging with the State banking authorities so that the banks might be thoroughly examined without unnecessary duplication and costs.

All insured banks should be made members of the Federal Reserve System in order that the people of the United States might enjoy one homogeneous banking structure operating under the monetary policy established by the Congress of the United States. All of these banks are engaged in interstate commerce and under the decision of the Supreme Court in the Associated Press case, the right of Congress to require the State banks to be members of the Federal Reserve System is clearly established.

The examination of these banks should be without cost to the member banks. The bank examiners should be paid a reasonable salary for their services that would enable them to discharge their duties more efficiently. The earnings of the Federal Reserve System under the new proposed public management would be increased in so important a way that the cost of the bank examination would be negligible in relation to the increased revenues of the Federal Reserve bank operating under the policies herein proposed.

The insurance of the individual member bank against the dishonesty of officers and employees or bank robbery, assessed against the total bank deposits of $60,000,000,000, would be a negligible cost to the banks and put behind the protection of each individual member bank the full powers of the Government of the United States as a great public service in stabilizing and protecting our banking structure.

The double liability of stockholders under these conditions of insurance should cease: (1) Because it would be unnecessary; and (2) because it would cause capital to flow more freely into the investment in stocks of member banks throughout the United States where the bank could lend its own capital profitably and thereby build up locally a volume of credit in sections where the necessary capital is lacking for constructive purposes.

The protection of the individual bank gives safety to the individual unit of which the entire structure is composed, and thus establishes a condition of confidence and public respect for the banking system everywhere. We have heard much in past years of "loss of confidence." The restoration of confidence must depend upon a sound structure which justifies confidence as a matter of common sense. It is for this vital reason that the public control through Congress of our monetary system has become of vital importance.

There is no sound reason why remittances made by member banks to the Federal Reserve bank for collection elsewhere should not be credited upon the day received. It is rare that such a remittance for any reason is returned and it is always immediately liquidated by the bank through charging the item back against the remitting bank and yet the total of these remittances to the member banks of the country currently amount to over $500,000,000. Holding all of these items in suspension adds seriously to the cost of administration and complicates the System unnecessarily. This one item would be equivalent to increasing the capital of the banks of the System without cost to the extent of the floating checks in transit.

Section 5: The office of the Comptroller of the Currency, built up as the means of examining the national banks, should now be advantageously transferred to the office of the Federal Reserve Board. The activities of the individuals in that office would merely be under the supervision of the Board and made an auxiliary in carrying out the policy of the Congress. Under the direction of the Federal Reserve Board the duties now exercised by the office of the Comptroller of the Currency and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Federal Reserve banks can be effectively reconciled and simplified in pursuance of the policy of one examination only by one competent authority as representing the United States, instead of four different authorities having a like purpose.

Section 6 declares the monetary policy of the Congress of the United States. First, to provide an adequate supply of money so that the flow of goods and services shall go hand in hand with the flow of money necessary to pay wages and salaries for products and services.

The records completely demonstrate during the last 10 years that as the flow of money was contracted it was almost immediately followed by a loss in consumption and production. The money created by the banks through the loans in 1929 contracted approximately $20,000,000,000 when the loans contracted $20,000,000,000. And when the money contracted in this manner, the ordinary revenues of the United States Government fell off one-half from 1929 to 1932, and the exports and imports of the United States during the same period of time fell off approximately two-thirds, and the value of check money debited on the books of the banks fell off approximately the same. The check money of 1929 amounted to $1,227,000,000,000. It fell to $450,000,000,000 in 1932 and even in 1938 was only $530,000,000,000, whereas in 1926 it was $845,000,000,000. It, therefore, follows that the necessity for furnishing an adequate supply of money to transact the business of the country should be obvious, and that the money should be in sufficient volume to pay for the wages of 12,000,000 additional people, now unemployed.

Mr. Lammot du Pont, in his evidence before the Senate Special Committee to Investigate Unemployment, in the Seventy-fifth Congress, stated that about $25,000,000,000 was necessary to create the capital necessary to employ 3,000,000 workmen in factories, but that such employment would restore seven and one-half million to other jobs in private industry. In other words, his estimate was $25,000,000,000 for ten and one-half million people.

There is at present probably ten or twelve billion dollars of frozen demand deposits held as reserves and held for future investment. These reserves cannot be expected to return to circulation until a complete spirit of confidence is restored, a rising market established, and the dollar index brought down from its present abnormal point of 131. It should be clear that an adequate supply of money is absolutely essential to turn over a maximum amount of goods and services produced by the maximum number of people capable of employment.

It should be obvious that until the abnormal index of the purchasing power of money, now at 131, be brought down to the pre-depression standard of 1926, that justice cannot be done to those who are in debt. These debts amount to over $200,000,000,000. About $60,000,000,000 represent bonds of the United States, States, cities, and counties. Besides these there is a great volume of bonds issued by industrial, transportation, and other corporations. Justice between debtor and creditor requires that the dollar index be brought back to its normal standard fixed by the Department of Labor in 1926.

When this standard shall have been established and an equitable basis of settlement between debtors and creditors provided, it should be perfectly clear that such a standard should remain unchanged so that the dollar, or monetary unit of account, should have between debtor and creditor a uniform, permanent, debt-paying purchasing power. The creditor is entitled to receive the value he loaned, and nothing less than this, for principal and interest. The debtor should not be required to pay any more in value than he borrowed, for this is dishonest and unfair to the debtor and often ruinous both to debtor and creditor by ending the process of creating values by human labor.

In order to preserve the index of 100 it is necessary that the volume of money should increase in proportion to the volume of commodities created. In other words, if the index of industrial production rises 10 percent by creating 10 percent more goods, the volume of money should rise 10 percent in order that the money supply in relation to the supply of products should not be changed.

Since the index of industrial production is a dependable fact, it comprises one of the means by which to know when the volume of money should be increased or diminished. The normal growth of production through the increase of population, improved inventions, and increased power is about 4 percent per annum. For that reason it may be fairly estimated that when the price level is restored, a 4-percent per annum increase in production and in the supply of products and money should take place to preserve a stable price level. The power to expand and contract the money supply is by this monetary policy of Congress put in the hands of the Board with abundant power to carry out the policy laid down by Congress.

There should be no alibi. The Board should have the power. They should have the responsibility. They should be subject to immediate removal by either House of Congress if they fail to discharge their duties as instructed by Congress. They should be required to report to Congress anything they think immediately necessary by which to make more effective the policy which Congress has laid down.

The Secretary of the Treasury is required to cooperate with the Board in making effective the policy of Congress.

Section 7 provides one form of paper currency to be called "United States currency."

Under the national banking system there were thousands of different forms of national-bank notes, a different set of forms for every bank, and notes running from $5, $10, $20, $50, $500, $1,000, and $10,000. These notes are now being retired.

There still remain 12 different sets of Federal Reserve notes, one set for each of the 12 banks. There are also silver certificates, gold certificates, the notes issued in 1890, and the notes issued during the Civil War and Federal Reserve bank notes. Since all paper and metallic money are now legal tender under the act of 1933, there is no reason whatever for maintaining these archaic forms of paper currency. One form is enough. One form is cheaper. It is much easier to keep the accounts of one form of outstanding notes. And the confusion in the public mind about money would be largely removed by one simple form of United States currency of suitable denominations. It could be made more difficult to counterfeit these notes. A still greater care could be exercised in the manufacture and engraving of such notes, in their numbering and in other safeguards.

Section 8: This section covers the monetary principles known as the 100-percent reserve against demand deposits. Its chief purpose is to prevent privately owned individual banks from the uncontrolled creation of check money, by which 97 percent of our monetary business is transacted, and to compel such demand deposits to be created by the Federal Reserve bank as an agency of the Congress.

It has been fully demonstrated that booms and depressions in the United States, from which 16,000 banks have failed during the last two decades, are due directly to the uncontrolled private expansion and contraction of the money supply of the people of the United States in the form of demand deposits and checks drawn thereon.

The manner in which this money is expanded and contracted is definitely shown by the volume of checks debited against the books of the banks during the last 10 years. From the normal supply of such checks of $845,000,000,000 debited in the normal predepression year of 1926, such check money was expanded to $1,227,000,000,000 in 1929 and fell to $450,000,000,000 in 1932, and was for 1933 only $530,000,000,000.

The economic and financial ruin that followed this unwise method of expanding and contracting the money supply of the people of the United States has been fully demonstrated by the tables set forth in Senate Document 23 of this Congress, copies of which have been sent to every Member of the Senate, and with which Senators must be now completely familiar.

One of the enormous economic consequences to which attention may be called was the destruction of the imports and exports business of the United States, which fell to one-third in 1932 of what it was in 1929. When the check money fell to one-third, the exports fell to one-third, and the imports fell to one-third. The building of homes fell to one-tenth of what it had been at the high point of 1929 to what they were at the low point in 1932.

The value of the average certificate of stock listed on the New York Stock Exchange fell from over $81 a share to less than $12 a share, from the high of 1929 to the low of 1932, causing bankruptcy throughout the United States and giving to the ownership of the best industrial securities in the United States an element of hazard and unreality rendering unstable our entire economic structure. When the check money fell from $1,227,000,000,000 in 1929 to $450,000,000,000 in 1932, unemployment suddenly increased to the extent of approximately 14,000,000 people, requiring the Nation to use its resources for the relief of those who otherwise would have starved.

Another economic result of the violent contraction of our money supply was the loss of freight-car loadings by the railroads. When the people are thrown out of employment and are deprived of the means to buy goods and services, our national production falls on a vast scale through unemployment, freight-car loadings go down, and the chief income of the railroads is so diminished as to cause bankruptcy for many and embarrassment for all. These economic consequences are fully set forth in Senate Document 23, with statistics furnished by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, to which attention of Senators is expressly called. On pages 92, 93, 94, 95, and 96 will be found monetary charts showing the manner in which the American people have expanded and contracted their banks, bank deposits, and check money and the economic consequences which contemporaneously take place.

It is the intention of this section of the bill to make impossible the destruction of the money supply of the people of the United States by taking from privately owned banks the power to create and destroy the money of the Nation.

When the banks expanded their loans to private business to $41,600,000,000 as of June 30, 1939, and within 3 years contracted those loans $20,000,000,000, the volume of money held as demand deposits was contracted by $10,000,000,000 and as time deposits by $10,000,000,000. The time deposits were converted into demand deposits and the demand deposits employed to pay off $20,000,000,000 of debts due the banks.

It is futile to blame anybody for a national system which has grown up during 100 years. It should be enough to point out the folly of the past system and its ruinous consequences and to provide an adequate remedy. This the present bill proposes to do in a downright, forthwith manner that shall substitute for chaos order and constitutional government in the creation and regulation of the value of money.

There need be no doubt of the method proposed by this bill to expand or to contract and thereby to regulate the value of money by regulating the volume. Under this bill the Federal Reserve bank, by the purchase of bonds and bankable assets, can expand to the extent necessary. This can be done merely by the Federal Reserve bank, under the Federal Reserve Board, buying nonliquid bonds and bankable assets and converting them into liquid demand deposits. If the now frozen demand deposits should be again restored to use as a medium of exchange by the present demand-depositors, and if any excess were threatened, there is a complete automatic check and authority provided. The Federal Reserve Board and Federal Reserve bank are given the power to immediately contract the excess demand deposits by the sale of securities issued by the bank at not exceeding 3 percent per annum—this is provided for in section 9 of the bill—to the extent necessary. Moreover, a ceiling is provided for automatically preventing indefensible expansion, because before indefensible expansion could take place the dollar index would have to be restored to the normal predepression level of 100—the standard set by the Calvin Coolidge administration in 1926, when conditions were normal. Since the bill provides that the dollar index shall be restored to a normal predepression level and shall not be permitted to go below the normal predepression level, the danger of actual inflation through the expansion of the money supply is automatically prevented.

Those interested in the detailed study of this question of 100 percent reserves against demand deposits are advised to see Senate Document 23 and the books by Irving Fisher, of Yale, and others on this subject matter. The policy of 100-percent reserves has been considered and studied under a special committee of political economists and replies have been received from over 200 professors of political economy who approve this automatic method of preventing either expansion or contraction to an indefensible extent of our credit money. The effect of section 8 of this bill is to put the responsibility of the money control where it belongs, in the hands of the people of the United States through the Congress of the United States by the adoption of a monetary policy which would automatically control the money supply of the country so as to make it adequate in volume to the volume of products and services and to prevent in future either unjustified booms or unjustified depressions.

Section 8 sets up the mechanism by which every member bank can easily comply with the requirement proposed. The section gives plenty of time, which only a comparatively few of the banks now require since nearly all of them could immediately comply with the provision.

Section 10 recognizes an existing practice by many banks and legalizes it. The banks are authorized to make a reasonable charge not exceeding a dollar a month for the keeping of the accounts of depositors, for cashing their checks, for identifying and being responsible for the correct handling of such items and identifying and verifying the checks of the depositor and of his payee, and safely transferring the credit from one to the other. These services are important. Upon the correct keeping of these accounts many businessmen make up their annual income-tax returns and are saved the cost of extra bookkeeping work by themselves or their employees. The banks render the most valuable service in these matters and are put to an expense in discharging these duties. There are over 60,000,000 of such accounts representing $60,000,000,000 of deposits with an annual turnover of from 10 to 20 times the total of such deposits.

No just man would be willing to deny the banks a fair return of the capital invested and of the labor performed in attending to this vast monetary business. Every city and county in the United States desires the banks to be successful and adequately compensated. The American people desire stability for the banks. The depositors and the stockholders and the officials of the banks are all interested in their successful management.

When a bank pays checks amounting to a thousand dollars, it is not an unreasonable charge that the bank should have a fee of $1 for the reasonable work performed in handling such volume of checks. The bill only imposes a maximum of charges. It still leaves special cases the liberty of individual agreement in the charges made.

The banks, moreover, not creating demand deposits, should be at liberty as an agent of the depositor to lend the money of the depositor to any borrower who can give the depositor an adequate security. This transaction would not create money. It would only permit money to be loaned by one citizen to another citizen giving the bank a decent fee to be agreed on for the transaction of this business. Under the new system, therefore, there will be no danger of a lack of actual money available for the business of production, transportation, merchandising, and distribution of products and services; and there will be no danger of an excess of such supply of money. It would therefore follow that there would be stability not only in the debt-paying, purchasing power of the monetary unit of account—the dollar—but there would be stability in the value of all forms of property invested in this dollar to the extent possible through the wise control of the volume and value of money. It would stabilize the value of labor and of professional fees and prevent fixed charges being unduly high or unduly low since fixed charges could then be adjusted to a monetary unit of fixed purchasing power.

It should be remembered that the index of the price level represents a volume of money employed in the wholesale commodity markets and that the price level has no relation to the individual variation of the prices of individual commodities as affected by the abundance or scarcity of such individual commodity. The proposed plan, however, does mean that the unjust fluctuations of all commodities and all services shall cease through monetary control, leaving the people able to deal with individual commodities as the exigency would require in each individual case.

Section 11 merely provides for the creation annually of a 4 percent addition to the volume of money to meet the 4 percent addition in the volume of products and services which normally takes place through the growth of population and the employment of the facilities of manufacture and distribution. The present method of raising the funds for social security involves enormous amounts of bookkeeping, unnecessary administrative labor, and is unsound in principle to the extent that the process contracts the demand deposits and contracts the money supply from those consumers whose expenditure as consumers goes far to prevent the depression in the value of the products and services created by the people. Our present system has developed incomes so great in the hands of 2 or 3 percent of the people that taxes are now adjusted so as to attempt to prevent this disparity in the distribution of the products and values created by human labor and human invention.

The expenditures for such public relief and for public works and constructive development of the national resources can thus be provided without taxing anybody. The money would be created by the Government itself to meet the increased national production and prevent the dollar from rising unjustly in its purchasing, debt-paying power.

Section 12 is one of the most important sections in the bill. It deals with interest on the use of money. In a highly philosophical sense, the money created by the sovereign power of the people as a utility and as a medium of exchange and as a storage of value would be better employed if confined to the purposes for which the sovereign power created it, that is, as a medium of exchange and storage of value. There is a grave question whether speculation in money, which leads to violent changes in its purchasing power and in its debt-paying power, is not one of the gravest of our modern evils.

But at all events, the American businessman, who must have the use of money in manufacturing, transporting, and merchandising and furnishing of goods and supplies and services, should have the use of money on terms as favorable as the businessmen of commercially competitive nations.

In the reports of the monetary commission of 1908, submitted in 1912, it appeared that businessmen of Belgium had had a 3 percent rate of interest without a break for 50 years preceding the World War; that the people of France had substantially the same rate; and that the people of England, engaged in commerce, also had a low rate of interest, while in the United States the 6 percent rate was the usual rule, with a 10-percent rate in many parts of the country expressly authorized by law. As a matter of practice, a much higher cost was imposed on borrowers whose needs were great and whose opportunity to produce led them to use borrowed money for production. In order to have the American businessmen able to compete with the nations of the world, the American businessman should have an interest rate as low as that of his competitors. Especially should this be recognized, remembering that people in many other lands have such a restricted supply of domestic money that their labor costs are very much less than in the United States. This is true not only with regard to the European nations but particularly with regard to Japan, China, and India. If all nations of the world should follow the example we propose in this bill, of creating their own domestic money and preventing the undue speculation in it, labor in all countries might, by international agreement, be raised to the same level of dignity and the same comparative wage, measured in terms of gold as an international standard. It may take many decades for the world to reach the stage where this could be made possible, but with modern processes of communication and with modern development of intelligence and understanding of the monetary question, it is not impossible that the world may see a vast change for the better in the use of money as a domestic medium of exchange and as a medium of international exchange covering trade balances or transfers of capital.

Section 11, however, provides merely for a report to the Congress as to the rate of interest enjoyed by the citizens of competitive nations as compared with the rate of interest employed in the United States by its business people.

This bill does not expressly provide for the complete protection of the smallest banking units, but in the banking structure of the United States the power of the whole people through the Federal Reserve Board should be exerted to prevent any honestly managed bank a member of the System from failure through any incident preventable or capable of reasonable repair. The loyalty of the citizens to their Government should be reciprocated by an equally intense loyalty of the Government to the citizens. Under the Federal Reserve System as proposed and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation as set up, there is no need for the failure of any bank in the United States honestly administered. It should be a disgrace to the Federal Reserve System to permit any honestly managed bank to fail. The measure of the disgrace to the Federal Reserve System of the last 20 years is recorded in 16,000 cases of bank failure. The time to remedy this enormous evil is now. Any postponement of this matter from consideration and action would deserve the deep disapproval of the people of the United States whose suffering in the last decade no human being has the language to describe.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, some time earlier in the present session the Senate passed a bill authorizing the Tennessee Valley Authority to complete and carry out a tentative agreement they had made with the Commonwealth & Southern Co. for the purchase of the Tennessee Electric Power properties in Tennessee and Georgia. The bill passed the House with an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the text of a new bill.

In due time the bill went to conference. The conference committee had several meetings and had a great deal of discussion, extending over the past week or two. The conference committee were unable to agree, and adjourned on last Friday. They reconvened yesterday at the request of the chairman of the House conferees, Representative MAY. The session lasted but a few minutes, and broke up again because the conferees were not able to agree.

Representative MAY, the chairman of the House conferees, has issued for publication in the newspapers a long statement, which I hold in my hand.

A great many assertions made in this statement I think are unwarranted, and I believe unjustified by the evidence, but I desire to take up only one. Mr. MAY says, and truly says, that at the meeting held yesterday at his request he made a proposition of compromise. Senators must remember that the bill as it passed the Senate provided for the issuance of $100,000,000 of bonds. The House bill provided for the issuance of bonds in the amount of $61,500,000. So that the conferees had that difference of opinion on that point to work on.

Everyone knows the conferees could not report a bill providing for more than $100,000,000 of bonds or less than $61,500,000 of bonds, because that was the scope of the difference between the House and the Senate. Yet this proposition which Mr. MAY made—and his own statement shows it—was that the House conferees would compromise on an agreement to issue $45,000,000 of bonds. Of course, that was rejected by the Senate conferees, and I stated then to Mr. MAY that we could under no circumstances agree to that because it was without our jurisdiction entirely. We could not go lower than the House figure and we could not go higher than the Senate figure. All the conferees agreed to that, all acknowledged that that was true, including Mr. MAY himself.

Other matters were discussed, but this one proposal was what broke up the conference. We could under no circumstances agree to it, and everyone admitted that if we did agree on the amount proposed the report would be subject to a point of order both in the House and in the Senate, and everyone knows that the point of order would have been made by some 1 of at least 25 or 30 Senators and more than a hundred Members of the House.

I desired to make this statement, because if the newspapers should print all of the statement of Mr. MAY, who admits in his statement that what I have stated was the proposal, and if Senators should read the statement I think they would be entitled to know why the conference committee has not agreed.

CIVIL REMEDIES AGAINST VIOLATIONS OF ANTITRUST LAWS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, yesterday I introduced Senate bill 2719, to strengthen the antitrust laws by providing additional civil remedies for their enforcement. In introducing the bill I issued a public statement explaining its purpose. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be printed in the RECORD in full at this point, together with the statement explaining its provisions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The bill and statement were ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2719) to provide additional civil remedies against violations of the antitrust laws, and for other purposes, is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8 of the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890, is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 8. The word 'person,' as used herein, means an individual, a corporation, a partnership, an association, a joint-stock company, a business trust, or any organized group of persons, whether incorporated or not; or any receiver, trustee, or liquidating agent of any of the foregoing in his capacity as such."

Sec. 2. Such act is amended by adding the following new section:

"Sec. 9. This act may be cited as the 'Sherman Antitrust Act.'"

Sec. 3. Section 1 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, is amended by striking out the third paragraph thereof and inserting in lieu of such third paragraph the following:

"The word 'person,' as used herein, means an individual or a company.

"The word 'company,' as used herein, means a corporation a partnership, an association, a joint-stock company, a business trust, or any organized group of persons, whether incorporated or not; or any receiver, trustee, or liquidating agent of any of the foregoing in his capacity as such.

"The word 'director' means a director of a corporation or any individual who occupies a similar status or performs similar functions in respect of any company.

"The word 'officer' means an officer of a corporation or any individual who occupies a similar status or performs similar functions in respect of any company.

"The term 'antitrust provisions of the Tariff Act of 1913' means section 73 to 77, inclusive, of an act entitled 'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,' approved August 27, 1894, as amended by the act entitled 'An act to amend sections 73 and 76 of the act of August 27, 1894, entitled 'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,' approved February 12, 1913."

Sec. 4. Section 14 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 14. (a) Any violation of any provision of the antitrust laws by any company shall be a violation of such provision by each officer or director of such company who shall have done, or authorized, ordered, or caused to be done, any act constituting in whole or in part such violation. In any proceeding against any officer or director of any company in respect of any such violation by such company, such officer or director, if he shall have had knowledge of any act constituting in whole or in part such violation, shall be presumed to have authorized, ordered, or caused such act; and if evidence shall be introduced in behalf of such officer or director adequate to rebut such presumption, the fact of such knowledge shall, nevertheless, be submitted to the jury, or, in any action tried by the court without a jury, shall be taken into account by the court, as evidence of such authorization, ordering, or causation.

"(b) Any officer or director chargeable under subsection (a) of this section with a violation of any penal provision of the antitrust laws shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction therefor he shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment for not exceeding 1 year, or by both, in the discretion of the court.

"(c) Any officer or director chargeable under subsection (a) of this section with a violation of any provision of the Sherman Antitrust Act, the antitrust provisions of the Tariff Act of 1913 or section 3 or section 7 of this act by any company shall forfeit to the United States a sum equal to twice the total compensation, direct and indirect, whether in the form of salary, commission, bonus, share of profits, or otherwise, received by or due to such officer or director from such company or on account of services to or in behalf of such company, in respect of each month during which any such violation or any part thereof shall have occurred: Provided, That if the sum computed as aforesaid should amount to less than $5,000, such forfeiture may nevertheless be fixed by the court in an amount not exceeding $5,000: Provided further, That in respect of any compensation received by or due to such officer or director which is not computed on a monthly basis, the portion of such compensation attributable to each such month shall be one-twelfth of such compensation as computed on an annual basis. Such forfeiture shall be payable into the Treasury of the United States and shall be recoverable in a civil action by the United States.

"(d) Upon a proper showing in a civil action brought by the United States—

"(1) any officer or director chargeable under subsection (a) of this section with a violation of any provision of the Sherman Antitrust Act, the antitrust provisions of the Tariff Act of 1913, or section 3 or section 7 of this act by any company shall be enjoined (A) from rendering any service directly or indirectly to or in behalf of such company, permanently or for a specified period not less than 90 days in the discretion of the court; (B) from receiving any compensation, direct or indirect, whether in the form of salary, commission, bonus, share of profits, or otherwise, from such company or on account of services to or in behalf of such company, during or in respect of such period; and (C) from engaging in business, whether on his own account or as an officer or director of any other company, or otherwise, in competition with such company during such period; and

"(2) such company shall likewise be enjoined (A) from receiving any service, direct or indirect, whether voluntary and uncompensated or otherwise, from such officer or director, during such period; and (B) from paying any compensation directly or indirectly, whether in the form of salary, commission, bonus, share of profits, or otherwise, to or in behalf of such officer or director during or in respect of such period."

Sec. 5. Such act is amended by inserting the following new sections after section 14 thereof:

"Sec. 14A. Any company which violates any provision of the Sherman Antitrust Act, the antitrust provisions of the Tariff Act of 1913, or section 3 or section 7 of this act shall forfeit to the United States a sum equal to twice the total of net income received by or accruing to such company (A) during each month within which any such violation or any part thereof shall have occurred, (B) in respect of any operations of such company during each such month, and (C) otherwise attributable to each such month: Provided, That if the sum computed as aforesaid should amount to less than $25,000, such forfeiture may nevertheless be fixed by the court in an amount not exceeding $25,000. Such forfeiture shall be payable into the Treasury of the United States and shall be recoverable in a civil action by the United States. For the purposes of this section, net income shall be computed in accordance with the method of accounting regularly employed in keeping the books of such company, if such method is in accordance with recognized principles of accounting and clearly reflects the income. If no method of accounting has been employed in keeping the books of such company, or if the method employed does not accord with recognized principles of accounting or does not clearly reflect the income, the computation shall be made by a method which does conform to recognized principles of accounting and which does clearly reflect the income. In any such action tried by jury, the court may require the jury to return a special verdict upon the question of liability. If, in any such case, the jury in such special verdict shall find the plaintiff entitled to a forfeiture, or if, in any such action tried by the court without a jury, upon the conclusion of the taking of evidence upon the question of liability, the court shall be of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to a forfeiture, the court, for assistance in the computation of such forfeiture, may require such company to retain at its own expense an independent public accountant satisfactory to the court, and may utilize the assistance of the Federal Trade Commission or an officer thereof as a master in accordance with the procedure set forth in section 7 of the Federal Trade Commission Act."

"Sec. 14B. Any two or more of the proceedings hereinafter enumerated, if instituted against the same parties, or if relating in whole or in part to the same act or acts, may be consolidated:

"(A) A proceeding in the name of the United States to prevent and restrain a violation of any provision of the antitrust laws;

"(B) An action under subsection (c) of section 14 of this act;

"(C) An action under subsection (d) of section 14 of this act; and

"(D) An action under section 14A of this act:

"Provided, That upon any such consolidation which involves an action under said subsection (c) of section 14 or an action under said section 14A, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved."

Sec. 6. Such act shall be amended by adding the following new section:

"Sec. 27. This act may be cited as the 'Clayton Act.'"

The explanatory statement submitted by Mr. O'MAHONEY is as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY, OF WYOMING, CHAIRMAN OF THE TEMPORARY NATIONAL ECONOMIC COMMITTEE, EXPLAINING BILL "TO PROVIDE ADDITIONAL CIVIL REMEDIES AGAINST VIOLATIONS OF THE ANTITRUST LAWS," WHICH HE INTRODUCED JUNE 28, 1939

The purpose of the bill which I have introduced today, after conferences with Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold, is to make the antitrust laws more effective by providing civil remedies which are calculated to deter corporate executives from undertaking policies and practices which they have good reason to know are in restraint of trade and prohibited by law.

One of the principal reasons why the antitrust laws have got heretofore prevented combinations and mergers hostile to the public interest is that the penalties and remedies for violations as now provided are altogether inadequate. Jail sentences are seldom imposed, because the public does not place an economic offense in the same category with an ordinary criminal offense involving moral turpitude. On the other hand, a $5,000 fine is of no concern to the large corporation.

There is only one other remedy worth mentioning available under existing law to the Department of Justice—the civil action for an injunction. In addition, there is the action in damages by a private person who has been injured. Neither of these remedies is effective.

The new bill is designed to bring violations of the law home to officers and directors of corporations who are personally responsible for the economic offenses of the corporations they represent. The bill permits the United States, in effect, to bring a suit for damages against an offending corporation and against its individual directors and officers. It also permits the United States to bring suit to terminate the corporate employment of any officer or director who is responsible for a violation of the antitrust laws.

The bill contains the following provisions:

(1) A violation of any provision of the antitrust laws by a corporation is made a violation by every officer or director who has participated in causing the action to be done.

(2) Officers or directors so participating in causing a corporation to violate the antitrust laws are themselves made guilty of the misdemeanor defined by the present law.

(3) Such an officer or director is made liable to forfeit to the United States in a civil action brought by the United States a sum equal to twice his compensation from the corporation, in whatever form that compensation may be paid, for every month during which the violation occurred.

(4) Such officer or director may be enjoined from rendering any service, direct or indirect, to such corporation, permanently or for a period not less than 90 days in the discretion of the court, or from receiving any compensation or from engaging in competition with the company he is enjoined from serving.

(5) Any corporation which violates the antitrust laws is made liable to forfeit to the United States in a civil action brought by the United States a sum equal to twice its total net income during every month in which the violation occurred.

(6) Provisions for the consolidation of cases and for preserving the right of trial by jury are contained in the bill.

It is my opinion that bringing antitrust law violations home to the officers who are themselves responsible for these practices will go far to cure many of the restraints of trade which for years have been suppressing business and causing unemployment.

STABILIZATION FUND AND WEIGHT OF THE DOLLAR

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I am receiving a number of letters and telegrams asking my opinion of the situation relating to the bill which passed this body on Monday, the so-called dollar stabilization devaluation bill. In order that the RECORD may contain my answer, I desire to make a brief explanation.

The House bill as it came to the Senate contained two provisions. The first provision was to extend for a period of 2 years the power in the hands of the President still further to devalue the gold dollar. The second provision proposed to extend the life of the stabilization fund for a like period of 2 years.

When the bill reached the Senate amendments were adopted and changes were made. The stabilization section was not changed. There is no issue between the House and the Senate over the proposed extension of the stabilization fund. The Senate took action to terminate the power in the hands of the President to still further devalue the gold dollar, and if such power is not extended the power will terminate and cease tomorrow night at 12 o'clock. That was the first action the Senate took in changing the provisions of the House bill. The second action the Senate took in changing the provisions of the House bill related to the purchase of domestic silver.

The House bill contained no provision relating to silver, but the Senate added an amendment providing a direction to the Treasury Department to start buying silver domestically mined, and to pay for that silver 77 cents-plus per ounce. That is a new amendment to the House bill.

The next change made in the bill by the Senate was a provision terminating the power of the Treasury to purchase foreign silver under the 1934 Silver Purchase Act, and that will become a part of the law if the House agrees to the Senate provision and the bill as amended shall be enacted.

The points in controversy between the House and the Senate are over, first, the devaluation of the gold dollar; second, the price of domestically mined silver; and, third, the repeal of the Silver Purchase Act so far as it applies to foreign silver.

In the event the conferees of the two Houses fail to agree, and in the event no bill shall be reported back, of course no bill will be passed. If the conferees fail to agree and if no bill is passed, then the following things will happen:

First, the power in the hands of the President to further devalue the gold dollar will cease on June 30, tomorrow night, at midnight. That will be the first result.

The second result will be that the stabilization fund, in the sum of $2,000,000,000, will not be a stabilization fund after 12 o'clock tomorrow night. The money will still be in the Treasury, but the fund as a stabilization fund will not be active, and the Treasury Department will not be able to use any part of that money in carrying out their program of trying to keep not only the American dollar stable in terms of gold but in trying to keep foreign currency as stable as possible in terms of American currency.

The third thing that will happen, in my opinion, will be that the subsidy now being paid to the silver miners will terminate. I cannot believe that the Treasury Department would extend the present subsidy under present conditions. So, if no agreement is reached, the present subsidy being paid to domestic miners of silver of 64 cents plus, will terminate tomorrow night at midnight, and on Saturday morning the miners of the West will not be receiving 64 cents for their silver. The silver they produce after tomorrow, if they produce any, will have to be sold on the world market at whatever price they can secure. The world market price now is a little in excess of 35 cents an ounce, so if the bill is not enacted in some form and the subsidy is not continued, on Saturday morning the silver miners of the West will have to sell their silver, whatever they may have or whatever they may produce in the future, at the world price, and at the present time there is only about one purchaser, namely, the United States Government.

Under the terms of the Silver Purchase Act the Government has the power to buy foreign silver. The Treasury is not directed to buy foreign silver. So the Treasury Department is not obligated to extend the subsidy beyond tomorrow, and if it is not extended even the Department is not commanded to buy domestically mined silver at any price. They can pay the world price for it, and they fix the world price, but there is no direction that they shall buy the domestically mined silver at any price. So on Saturday the miners of the West may find themselves without any market whatever, either under the subsidy program or under the program of the Treasury under the 1934 purchase act.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. There is one further very interesting question of interpretation on which I should like to have the Senator's judgment. I understand it is held by some that if the conference report came in after midnight tomorrow—let us say that it came in on the 5th of July—because of the nature of the language of the proposed legislation it would thereupon renew all of the prior powers, which would be simply lapsed for 5 days. What is the Senator's judgment about that interpretation?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is susceptible to different opinions, but not in my mind. If we were a doctor, so to speak, and if we were called upon to administer to a fellow man, or to an animal, we might save the life or prolong the life of the animal or the man so long as there was life, but once the man died or the animal died, even the best doctor in the world would be powerless to revive and reestablish life in something that was dead. So tomorrow night at midnight the power to devalue the dollar will expire; tomorrow night at midnight the stabilization fund will cease to be a stabilization fund. Therefore it is my opinion that if the bill shall not be passed and signed by tomorrow night at 12 o'clock the devaluation power will be dead and the stabilization fund will be dead, and it will take new legislation recreating the power to devalue the dollar in the hands of the President, and new legislation reestablishing the stabilization fund.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator will permit me I wish to say simply that I agree with his interpretation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. KING. I am not sure that I understood all of the statement of the Senator from Oklahoma. It is my recollection that the Silver Purchase Act directs and compels the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver until it reaches $1.29 an ounce, unless we shall have acquired one-fourth of our monetary stocks in silver in the meantime. So that law is upon the statute books regardless of any fate that may befall the measure we passed a few days ago.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the amendment submitted by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], which was adopted by the Senate, proposes to stop the power of the Treasury Department to buy any more foreign silver.

It is true, as the Senator from Utah has just stated, that the Treasury Department is under a mandate to buy silver at home or abroad until we get one-third as much silver as we have gold, or until the total metallic stocks equal three parts of gold and one part of silver. But the Treasury Department is not commanded to do that this year, or the next year, or the next year. The Treasury may take the next hundred years to accomplish that end. So in the meantime there is no mandate for the Treasury Department to buy any silver tomorrow, or Saturday or next week or next month. They need not buy a single ounce, although the command exists eventually to do so, but no time limit is fixed. So it is my contention that under the Silver Purchase Act the Treasury Department can stop buying silver at any price at any time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the remarks made by the Senator from Oklahoma. I will say frankly that consideration, naturally, has been given to the question of the effect of the automatic expiration of these various powers tomorrow night. The legislation we have been considering, of course, is based upon the continuation of an existing power, and so long as that power exists it may be continued. But when it has expired by operation of law, it is just as dead as if it had never been the law; and it is my view, in concurrence with the Senator, that it would take legislation ab initio to revise these expiring powers. We can revive them by new legislation just as we could create them in the beginning; but when they have once expired, we cannot, in my judgment, revive them simply by continuing what does not exist.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I agree entirely with the statement made by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Would it not be possible simply to reenact the legislation by the adoption of a joint resolution making reference to the original act?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, it is my opinion that that could not be done.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have not examined the authorities, but it is the judgment of the Senator from Texas that that could be done by adoption of a joint resolution, simply by saying that the act, so and so, as amended, shall be and is hereby reenacted. I see nothing at all in the way of making a new law by that sort of process, if it is desired to be done. When the act expires, of course, it is dead; but it can be revived as of the date of the adoption of the joint resolution.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It would be just as easy to pass a bill stating what the Congress desires as it would be to adopt a continuing joint resolution.

Mr. CONNALLY. The only difference between that and passing a bill is that the bill would be subject to amendment, whereas we would have to take the joint resolution or leave it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am free to say that if a joint resolution were presented it would have to pass through all the necessary parliamentary stages, which means separate readings, that it would have to be passed by both bodies and signed by the President, and that it would be subject to amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. I see some very distinguished Senators of outstanding legal ability shaking their heads. I wish to ask them how we continue appropriations when they lapse?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I was going to refer to that, Mr. President.

Mr. CONNALLY. How do we do that, save by the adoption of a joint resolution saying that the appropriations heretofore made for the last fiscal year shall be continued in effect. How is that done except by adoption of a joint resolution which makes reference to the former act?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. A precedent has been established with respect to appropriations, but I have not gone into that feature of legislation. Such procedure as the Senator referred to may never have been questioned. The District of Columbia appropriation bill is now pending before the Congress, and, for instance, if it shall fail of final passage during the remainder of this month, then on Saturday morning, the first day of July, there will be no appropriations for the District of Columbia. So it may be necessary to adopt a continuing resolution in order to afford money for the District government.

Mr. President, for 10 years I have been doing the best I could to call the attention of the Senate to the importance of the money question, but few have accorded the money question any particular significance. The Senate has regarded the money question about as it regards the sun. The sun comes up in the morning and goes down at night. The Senate apparently takes the position that we have no more control over the value of the dollar than we have over the seemingly actions of the sun.

Mr. President, I think recent developments have convinced many that the money question is the most important question not only to our domestic economy but to the economy of the world. That is my position today. The money question is by far the most important question that ever confronted the Congress or that ever will confront the Congress.

America has progressed to that point where we now dominate and control the currencies of the world. Not only does America control its own currency but the currencies of the world. We have fixed the price of gold at $35 an ounce, and that is the price of gold throughout the world. We have fixed the price of silver from time to time at so much per ounce, and when we fix a price that is the price of silver throughout the world. So our country and your country today controls the two money metals, gold and silver. We fix the price of each metal and such price is the price throughout the world. When we change these prices, we change in effect the currencies of the world and the domestic economies of the world.

As a result of the action of the Senate 3 days ago silver has fallen in price from some 43 cents an ounce to a little above 35 cents an ounce. Throughout the world, especially in silver producing and silver using countries, the effect of the Senate vote is being felt. Take our near neighbor Mexico for example. A few days ago you could take a dollar to Mexico and exchange same for 5 pesos. Today you can get more than 5 pesos for your dollar. The Mexican peso is going down in terms of the American dollar, or the American dollar is going up in terms of the Mexican peso. This is true of many other currencies throughout the world.

Mr. President, I again wish to make the statement that the money question is by far the most important question confronting the Senate, the most important question confronting the Congress, or confronting America. I predict that a new national issue is being rapidly developed, and such issue is over the control and value of the dollar.

I saw a news item in yesterday's Washington News, I believe it was, carrying three pictures in connection with such article. In the news item the question was asked: "Who should control our financial system?" The first picture was that of a busy section of Wall Street. The second picture was that of the Roosevelt residence at Hyde Park. The third picture was that of the United States Capitol Building. The inference was that either Wall Street or the President or the United States Congress, sitting in the Capitol, will control the financial policy of the United States.

Mr. President, everyone knows that the Constitution places the responsibility of coining and regulating the value of the dollar upon the Congress. The Constitution says that the Congress shall have the power to coin money and to regulate the value thereof. The Congress has heretofore exercised the power to coin money. There is no issue in that respect. But the Congress has not exercised the power to regulate the value of the money. That is the big issue, Mr. President, which confronts the American people today—the power to adjust and regulate the value of the dollar. The Congress has the power to adjust, to regulate, and to stabilize the value of the dollar, but refuses to exercise such power. The congressional will to exercise its congressional power is the developing issue before the people. It is my prediction that this particular issue will develop into a paramount issue in the coming campaign of 1940.

Mr. President, it is my contention that we cannot continue to live under the present-valued dollar. The present dollar is too high in purchasing power. Prices are too low and the value of the dollar controls prices. It is my contention that the dollar must be cheapened in terms of property and the price level must be raised. Next year the following question will be paramount: What value should the dollar have and at what point should the price level be placed?

It is my judgment that the people demand a substantially higher price level. We cannot live on 6-cent cotton. That is the price producers would receive in the South were it not for Government loans. We cannot live on 50-cent wheat. That is the price for which wheat would be selling today were it not for the Government loans with respect to wheat.

Mr. President, the managers of our money have it in their power to fix this price level exactly where they see proper.

I am not asking for a cheap dollar. I am not asking for high prices. I want the dollar so cheapened and prices so raised that our people can live and pay their taxes and pay their debts so that the Budget may be balanced; and so that those in business may make some money. People cannot make money, cannot pay their taxes and debts on the present low-price level.

So, Mr. President, all I am asking for is a properly valued dollar. No one can in conscience object to the dollar being properly valued.

Someone may ask, "What is the proper value for the dollar?" I can answer that question. A dollar properly valued is a dollar which will serve the best interests of all our people. What does that mean? It does not mean a dollar so valued as to give an advantage to the holders of fixed investments and thereby injure the producing and debtor classes. I want a dollar so valued that creditors and investors may collect their notes, coupons, and bonds; and I want a dollar so valued that debtors and producers may obtain dollars with which to pay their creditors. How can any person object to such a valued dollar? We do not have such a valued dollar today. Debtors cannot now obtain the money with which to pay their debts. Taxpayers cannot obtain the money with which to pay their taxes; and because tax gatherers cannot collect the taxes levied, budgets cannot be balanced; and until the price level is raised, taxes will not be paid and budgets will not be balanced. Again I say that the money question will be one of the main issues in the coming campaign.

Mr. President, I wish to read for the RECORD one paragraph of a very important speech. The money question was paramount in the Democratic National Convention of 1896. William Jennings Bryan, of Nebraska, was a delegate to that convention. Mr. Bryan was selected to present the demand for higher prices to the Chicago convention. In his speech Mr. Bryan used the following language—and it is just as pertinent today as it was in 1896:

Mr. Carlisle said in 1878 that this was a struggle between "the idle holders of idle capital" and "the struggling masses, who produce the wealth and pay the taxes of the country"; and, my friends, the question we are to decide is, Upon which side will the Democratic Party fight; upon the side of "the idle holders of idle capital" or upon the side of "the struggling masses"? That is the question which the party must answer first, and then it must be answered by each individual hereafter. The sympathies of the Democratic Party, as shown by the platform, are on the side of the struggling masses, who have ever been the foundation of the Democratic Party. There are two ideas of government. There are those who believe that if you will only legislate to make the well-to-do prosperous their prosperity will leak through on those below. The Democratic idea, however, has been that if you legislate to make the masses prosperous their prosperity will find its way up through every class which rests upon them.

Mr. President, William Jennings Bryan stated and defined the issue in 1896, and the same issue is rising, and rapidly, in our country today. Any time the Democratic Party takes the side of liberalism, nominates a liberal candidate for President, and adopts a liberal and progressive program, the Democratic Party makes a good showing before the country. But any time the Democratic Party adopts a conservative program and nominates a conservative candidate, the Democratic Party fails. Such is recorded history. Knowing the sentiment of vast groups of our people, I am convinced that the trend of history will neither be changed nor altered in the coming campaign of 1940.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the eloquent Senator from Oklahoma indicated that he is not certain that the sun is a moving body. If the great monetary reformation for which the Senator has so long and so valiantly labored could be advanced with the speed of the sun, the consummation which he desires would be realized in less than the twinkling of an eye. Because the sun and all its planetary family are, according to the astronomers, rushing through space toward the constellation Hercules, at the incomprehensible speed of 12 miles a second—more than 43,000 miles an hour. But since we are assured that we shall not reach our destination for 500,000 years, there is little cause for immediate alarm. Let us hope that monetary reform may be accomplished before the final crash occurs.

ORDER DISPENSING WITH CALL OF CALENDAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The calendar, under rule VIII, is in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a number of Senators have asked me about the program as far as we can see it for the rest of this week and over the Fourth of July. As everyone knows, there is certain legislation which must be enacted by tomorrow night if possible. We have on the calendar two appropriation bills, the third deficiency bill, and the military appropriation bill for aviation, which must be enacted. The monetary bill is in conference. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] and I are members of the conference committee on that bill. The Senator from Colorado is also a member of the conference committee on the relief joint resolution.

On the Executive Calendar are two nominations which have been passed over from day to day. The first is the nomination of William S. Boyle, to be United States attorney for the District of Nevada, and the second is the nomination of Archibald MacLeish to be Librarian of Congress. The nomination of Mr. Boyle has been adversely reported. The nomination of Mr. MacLeish has been passed over from day to day because the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] has advised me that two or three Members of the Senate desire to discuss the nomination and that an hour or two may be required to dispose of it.

Tomorrow I think we shall have to keep in prospect the necessity of devoting ourselves almost exclusively to the laws which expire tomorrow night, so that we may attempt to pass the pending legislation. If we shall dispose of this legislation, I have in mind on Saturday to move an adjournment until Wednesday. We shall be unable to adjourn from Friday until Wednesday even if we shall have finished everything. The Fourth of July will be Tuesday, and Monday being sandwiched in between Sunday and the Fourth, I doubt whether we could accomplish much on that day, as probably many Senators will be away.

If we shall dispose of the matters to which I have referred, when we shall return after the Fourth of July there will be practically nothing to engage the attention of the Senate except bills on the calendar in which individual Senators may be interested.

While we are waiting for the Committee on Foreign Relations to take action on the neutrality bill, and while the legislation which has been proposed by the President on a work program, which we have discussed, is also in consideration in committee, in my judgment the Senate will be free to consider whatever bills it may desire to take up.

In view of that situation, I felt it proper to advise the Senate that I think it is important that we dispose of these hang-over matters, and that we keep ourselves free tomorrow to be governed by any exigencies which may arise with respect to the expiring laws. In my judgment, after the holiday all Senators who are interested in legislation will have a week or two within which to obtain consideration for such legislation.

I make this statement because many Senators are interested in the program.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. LEE. I hope the Senator will place on the list of those matters which should be considered the nomination of Mr. Paul Walker to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is an executive matter. I do not know that there is any opposition to that nomination.

Mr. LEE. The Senator mentioned two other nominations. For that reason I did not want the nomination of Mr. Walker omitted.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have been asked about the program for today as far as I can see it. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] is now waiting to move the consideration of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill; the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] desires to take up another appropriation bill providing for certain military expenses, including airplanes, and so forth, and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] has a bill from the Appropriations Committee which he desires to have considered.

I have conferred with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] concerning the possibility of having an executive session early today so that the Senate may act on the MacLeish nomination, which should be disposed of, because Mr. MacLeish ought not to be subjected to the embarrassment of having his nomination held up indefinitely, and I do not want to deny anyone the right to discuss it.

I felt that I should give this information to the Senate for its own guidance.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me in order that I may propound an inquiry to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I inquire of the able majority leader if he will agree that, in the absence of emergency measures or demands, I shall be afforded an opportunity on Wednesday of next week to move the Senate to proceed to the consideration of what is commonly known as the moving picture antiblock booking bill? I had intended to make this motion this afternoon but, in view of the statement the Senator from Kentucky has made regarding the importance of passing certain appropriation bills, I shall not attempt to interfere with the program which he has outlined for today.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in that connection, I am glad to say that if the matters to which I have called attention shall be disposed of so that there will be no possibility of a hang-over as to any of the measures which will expire on tomorrow night, I certainly shall have no objection to the Senator moving to take up the bill to which he has referred on Wednesday or at any other convenient day next week; I have no desire to postpone its consideration, but I do not think that a bill that is not emergent, as that one is not, ought to interfere with measures that almost of necessity must be enacted between now and tomorrow night.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, of course, I concur in that opinion.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from West Virginia appreciates that he and I do not see eye to eye with respect to the bill in which he is interested.

Mr. NEELY. That is very true.

Mr. WHITE. But I have no disposition to delay its consideration. I would appreciate it, however, if, instead of asking that the bill be considered on Wednesday, the Senator would compromise with me and call it Thursday.

Mr. NEELY. I gladly and favorably respond to the suggestion of the Senator from Maine. He has vigorously but fairly opposed the bill. He diligently helped to conduct the subcommittee hearings and is familiar with the record. He is entitled to an opportunity to participate in the consideration of this important measure when it is brought before the Senate. Therefore I accept his suggestion, and now very respectfully give notice that at the earliest possible moment on Thursday of next week I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 280.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I did not hear the suggestions of the Senator from Maine; I was interrupted at the time. What was his suggestion?

Mr. WHITE. I called attention to the fact that the Senator from West Virginia and I were not in accord with respect to the bill in which he is interested, but that I have no desire to delay its consideration. I asked him, however, if it would be agreeable to him to move to take up the bill on Thursday rather than on Wednesday, and I may say that that request was made largely for my accommodation.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is entirely satisfactory, but, of course, that is contingent on the condition that none of the expiring laws which we hope to get through by tomorrow night shall be under consideration at the time on Wednesday or Thursday.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, let me assure the Senator from Kentucky that I shall not attempt to interfere with emergency legislation.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 1, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, and 101 to the bill (H. R. 5610) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes; agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. COLLINS, Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts, Mr. MAHON, Mr. STEFAN, and Mr. CASE of South Dakota were appointed managers on the part of the House at the further conference.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 326) making appropriations for work relief, relief, and to increase employment by providing loans and grants for public-works projects, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia, Mr. CANNON of Missouri, Mr. LUDLOW, Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN, Mr. SNYDER, Mr. O'NEAL, Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia, Mr. TABER, Mr. WIGGLESWORTH, Mr. LAMBERTSON, and Mr. DITTER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

THIRD DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6970, the so-called urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6970) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide appropriations required immediately for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, with an amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with; that it be read for amendment; and that the amendments of the committee be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The clerk will proceed to state the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Independent establishments—Executive Office", on page 4, after line 11, to insert:

Bureau of the Budget, salaries and expenses: The unobligated balance on June 30, 1939, of the appropriation, "Salaries and expenses, Bureau of the Budget, 1939" shall be added to and become a part of the appropriation, "Salaries and expenses, Bureau of the Budget, 1940": Provided, That the limitation of $5,000 on the amount that may be expended from the appropriation "Salaries and expenses, Bureau of the Budget, 1940," for the temporary employment of persons or organizations by contract or otherwise without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, or the civil-service laws, or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, is hereby increased to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Federal Loan Agency", on page 5, line 3, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$500,000" and insert "$400,000", so as to read:

S. C. 821-833); printing and binding; lawbooks and books of reference; not to exceed $200 for periodicals, newspapers, and maps; procurement of supplies, equipment, and services; typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, including their repair and exchange; rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; and all other administrative expenses: Provided, That all necessary expenses (including legal and special services performed on a contract or fee basis, but not including other personal services) in connection with the acquisition, care, repair, and disposition of any security or collateral now or hereafter held or acquired by the Authority shall be considered as nonadministrative expenses for the purposes hereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Federal Communications Commission," on page 10, line 2, after the name "Commission", to insert "fiscal year 1940", so as to read:

Printing and binding: For all printing and binding for the Federal Communications Commissions, fiscal year 1940, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 5, to strike out:

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Salaries and administrative expenses: The limitation of $9,250,000 for administrative expenses of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Mortgage Co. for the fiscal year 1939, contained in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1939, is hereby increased to $9,500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Temporary National Economic Committee", on page 1, line 14, after the word "expenses" and the semicolon, to strike out "$300,000" and insert "$480,000"; and in line 18, after the word "and", to strike out "$204,000" and insert "$384,000", so as to read:

For an additional amount for each and every purpose requisite and incident to carrying out the provisions of the public resolution entitled "Joint resolution to create a temporary national economic committee," approved June 16, 1938, as amended by the public resolution approved April 26, 1939, including rent and personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere by contract or otherwise; contract stenographic reporting services; books of reference; traveling expenses; employment of messenger service by contract or otherwise, and all other necessary expenses; $480,000, to be available until the expiration of the Seventy-sixth Congress, of which amount not to exceed $96,000 shall be available for expenditure by the Temporary National Economic Committee and $384,000 for allocation by the President to the departments and agencies represented on the Committee to enable them to carry out their functions under such public resolution approved June 16, 1938: Provided, That section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5) shall not apply to any purchase or service rendered hereunder when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed $100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 8, to insert:

GOVERNMENT IN THE TERRITORIES

Division of Territories and Island Possessions: For an additional amount for expenses of the Division of Territories and Island Possessions in the investigation and survey of natural resources of the land and sea areas of the Antarctic regions, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere without regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, or by contract, if deemed necessary, without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, rent, traveling expenses, purchase of necessary books, documents, newspapers and periodicals, stationery, hire of automobiles, purchase of equipment, supplies and provisions, and all other necessary expenses, fiscal year 1939, to remain available until June 30, 1940, $340,000: Provided, That fuel, repairs, and emergency supplies may be contracted for in foreign ports.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of Justice—judicial—marshals, and other expenses of United States Courts", at the top of page 17, to insert:

Conciliation Commissioners, United States courts: The unexpended balances of the appropriations "Fees and expenses of conciliation commissioners, United States courts, 1937-39," and "Fees of conciliation commissioners, United States courts, 1938," are hereby continued available for the same purposes until June 30, 1940.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Post Office Department (out of postal revenues)", on page 17, line 12, after the word "of", to strike out "$1,600,000" and insert "$1,500,000", so as to read:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT (OUT OF POSTAL REVENUES)

Unexpended balances of appropriations for the Post Office Department are hereby transferred and made available for the purposes of the appropriations to which transferred, as follows: The sum of $1,500,000 from Railway Mail Service, salaries, 1939"; the sum of "Clerks, first- and second-class post offices, 1939"; the sum of $1,000,000 from "Railroad transportation and mail messenger service, 1939" to "City delivery carriers, 1939"; the sum of $350,000,000 from "Rural Delivery Service, 1939" to "Special delivery fees, 1939"; the sum of $15,000 from "Electric- and cable-car service, 1939" to "Powerboat service, 1939"; and the sum of $35,000 from "Manufacture and distribution of stamps and stamped paper, 1939" to "Unpaid money orders more than 1 year old, 1939."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of State", on page 20, after line 15, to insert:

International Committee on Political Refugees: For the expenses of participation by the United States in the International Committee on Political Refugees, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; stenographic reporting, translating, and other services by contract if deemed necessary, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5); rent; traveling expenses; purchase of necessary books, documents, newspapers, and periodicals; stationery; equipment; official cards; printing and binding; entertainment; and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State, including the reimbursement of other appropriations from which payments may have been made for any of the purposes herein specified, fiscal year 1940, $20,000, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal years 1938 and 1939 contained in the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1938: Provided, That no salary shall be paid hereunder at a rate in excess of $7,500 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, when the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill was under consideration at the present session it contained a provision recommended by the Committee on Appropriations and adopted by the Senate placing a certain limitation upon the distribution of frankable mail by the various executive departments and agencies. The amendment was agreed to in conference, but a typographical error was made in the preparation of the conference report so that when the bill was signed certain language at the conclusion of the amendment was omitted. Thereupon, in order to correct that typographical error at the suggestion of the conferees, I introduced Senate Joint Resolution 134, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. That joint resolution was amended and reported favorably to the Senate and is now on the calendar. It was amended in accordance with the suggestions of the Federal Power Commission, the Securities Exchange Commission, and the Bureau of the Census in order to enable those three agencies without any question to send out material required by law to be sent out.

I feel that the joint resolution as drafted would cover their needs, but, in order to make certain, it was deemed advisable to clarify the amendment. The Committee on Appropriations yesterday authorized me to add the joint resolution to the pending bill as an amendment. It is necessary, however, to move to suspend the rule. I filed the formal notice to suspend the rule yesterday. I therefore ask unanimous consent that paragraph 4 of rule XVI be suspended in order that I may now move the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is in order.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I now offer the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. —. That section 6 of the Treasury and Post Office Departments Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1940 (Public, No. 65, 76th Cong.), approved May 6, 1939, is hereby amended to read as follows: "Sec. 6. On and after July 1, 1939, no executive department or independent establishment of the Government shall transmit through the mail, free of postage, any book, report, periodical, bulletin, pamphlet, list, or other article or document (except official letter correspondence, including such enclosures as are reasonably related to the subject matter of the correspondence; informational releases in connection with the decennial census of the United States, mail concerning the sale of Government securities, and all forms and blanks and copies of statutes, rules, regulations, and instructions and administrative orders and interpretations necessary in the administration of such departments and establishments), unless a request therefor has been previously received by such department or independent establishment; or such transmission is required by law; or such document is transmitted to inform the recipient thereof of the adoption, amendment, or interpretation of a statute, rule, regulation, or order to which he is subject. For each quarter, beginning with the quarter commencing July 1, 1939, the head of each independent establishment and executive department (other than the Post Office Department) shall submit to the Postmaster General, within 30 days after the close of the quarter, a statement of the weight of the mail matter, by classes of mail, that the independent establishment or department has transmitted free of postage during such quarter, and he shall also certify to the Postmaster General at the end of each such quarter that nothing was transmitted through the mail free of postage by the independent establishment or department in violation of the provisions of this section: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit the mailing free of postage of lists of agricultural bulletins, lists of public documents which are offered for sale by the Superintendent of Documents, or of announcements of publications of maps, atlases, statistical and other reports offered for sale by the Federal Power Commission as authorized by section 312 of the Federal Power Act: Provided further, That this prohibition shall not apply to the transmission of such books, reports, periodicals, bulletins, pamphlets, lists, articles, or documents to educational institutions or public libraries, or to Federal, State, or other public authorities."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I have at the desk an amendment which has the approval of the Budget Bureau, and I understand that the Senator from Colorado will accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 15, after line 25, it is proposed to insert the following:

WORK PROJECTS ADMINISTRATION

To enable the Commissioner of Work Projects to afford direct relief to citizens of the counties of Anoka and Hennepin, in the State of Minnesota, made destitute by the recent tornado which occurred in that State, either by grants to the Governor of the State of Minnesota or local authorities, or otherwise, as he may determine, fiscal year 1940, $35,000: Provided, That, in the discretion of the Commissioner of Work Projects, no part of this sum shall be used for grants unless a sum or sums at least equal to such grants shall have been made available by the State of Minnesota or a political subdivision thereof for the accomplishment of the same purpose.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] a question. Heretofore, as I understand, the Disaster Loan Corporation has been making loans when there has been a tornado, or suffering as the result of a disaster of this kind. Does this amendment set a precedent for granting relief in these matters?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I think perhaps the precedent was established earlier this year, in connection with the tornado in New England. There was an appropriation in connection with that disaster. Now the precedent is being followed.

Mr. BYRNES. In that case there were not loans by the Disaster Loan Corporation?

Mr. ADAMS. Like this, the appropriation was subject to an equal contribution by the State.

Mr. BYRNES. There was an outright grant?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. That was done in the case of New England?

Mr. ADAMS. It was.

Mr. BYRNES. I have no objection to it. In the city of Charleston, in my own State, last September a tornado caused great damage and suffering. I understood that the only relief that could be granted would be loans by the Disaster Loan Corporation, and I thought it proper that it should be done. The Red Cross also aided. I did not know that the Government was making gifts in cases of this kind.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that I perhaps have been inaccurate. In the New England situation, what was done by Congress could not be called a grant. It was a direct appropriation for work by the Federal Government in clearing up after the disaster.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, this money is to be spent through the W. P. A. They will handle the whole thing as a matter of immediate relief.

Mr. BYRNES. The W. P. A. have money to spend. This appropriation is in addition to that?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. It is in addition to the allocation already made. They claim that they have not any more money available for this purpose.

Mr. BYRNES. This is a Federal project, then, of W. P. A. Is that correct?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes. It is to be spent under the W. P. A., through an understanding with the Bureau of the Budget.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 6970) was read the third time and passed.

PUERTO RICAN CONDITIONS

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few minutes in order that I may again call attention to the serious economic conditions in Puerto Rico.

I have sometimes thought that Congress and many of our citizens are not sufficiently interested in this important Territorial possession. Puerto Rico is under the flag, and its inhabitants are American citizens. The obligation rests upon Congress and the executive departments of the Government to deal in a just and fair way with Puerto Rico. Its situation is unique; it has problems many of which differ from those with which continental United States is confronted. We must not forget that Puerto Rico came to the United States as a result of a conflict with Spain, and that when Puerto Rico and her inhabitants were brought under the American flag as a result of the war they were entitled not only to just but generous treatment and to the privileges and rights belonging to American citizens.

It is true that Puerto Rico is a small island, probably not more than 3,500 square miles, not more than 1,500,000 acres of which are susceptible of cultivation, and with a population of approximately 1,800,000. Though the resources of the island are rather limited, I believe that by proper collaboration between the Puerto Rican government and the National Government there will be developed and maintained a reasonably satisfactory economy in Puerto Rico which will provide for the welfare and happiness of the people.

Puerto Rico has been an important purchaser of the products and commodities of the mainland. I am told that it has been the sixth greatest customer from continental United States. The depression through which the United States is passing has had repercussions in Puerto Rico, and it is apparent that the economic conditions in Puerto Rico are not satisfactory. The obligation rests upon the Government to adopt reasonable measures to aid the people of Puerto Rico in meeting their economic and industrial problems.

If I understand, the people of Puerto Rico are asking nothing unreasonable; they only desire to be treated as American citizens and to receive that consideration to which all American citizens are entitled. Certainly in any legislation by Congress, the conditions in Puerto Rico should not be ignored. The same standards which might be maintained in many parts of the United States might not meet conditions in Puerto Rico. There are too many persons who seek standardization in everything and who would impose upon all sections of our country, including our Territorial possessions, the same rigid and inflexible standards which they demand should be applied in every part of continental United States. We might learn something from Great Britain in her treatment of her island possessions and of her territories in many lands. Our Government should recognize that Puerto Rico is not a part of continental United States; that its climatic conditions are different; that the habits and pursuits of the people are somewhat different from those in many parts of the United States. Certainly it should be recognized that the economic and industrial conditions are different and that legislation relating to the island should take cognizance of these differences to which I have imperfectly referred. It is believed by many, however, that we have ignored these conditions and have imposed upon Puerto Rico and its inhabitants policies and measures that are not entirely just and are producing most unsatisfactory results.

Several days ago I called the attention of the Senate to the attempt to enforce the wage and hour bill and the serious consequences which ensued. The administration of that act has thrown out of employment many thousands of persons. I have received many communications from the residents of Puerto Rico in which it was stated that a number of industries had suffered under the attempted enforcement of the wage and hour bill; that from sixty to eighty thousand women engaged in needlework had been deprived of employment, thus adding to the unemployment situation and seriously affecting the economic and social condition of the people.

I am in receipt of a letter from a distinguished citizen of Puerto Rico, in which he states that the interpretation and enforcement of the so-called Fair Labor Standards Act will mean the total destruction and disappearance of the needlework industry in Puerto Rico, which will result in "an economic crisis" and thus accentuate the problems with which the island and its people are confronted. The letter, as well as other communications which I have received, indicate that in the administration of the act there has been a most inflexible and autocratic attitude. There has been lacking a sympathetic understanding of the situation in the island and an apparent determination to rigidly and autocratically enforce the act.

Because of the serious consequences of the rigid enforcement of the so-called wage and hour law, and the certainty of further unemployment and assaults upon the economic and industrial conditions of Puerto Rico, I offered at the request of persons familiar with the conditions a bill which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. It is believed by those who suggested the measure and who are desirous of preventing a further economic crisis in the island, that if this bill were enacted into law it would certainly ameliorate conditions and interrupt the destructive movements which are undermining industrial and economic conditions.

Mr. President, I ask that the bill be inserted in the Record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 2682) to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to provide a special procedure for fixing minimum-wage rates for Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) section 5 of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(e) No industry committee appointed under subsection (a) of this section shall have any power to recommend the minimum rate or rates of wages to be paid under section 6 to any employees in Puerto Rico or in the Virgin Islands. Notwithstanding any other provision of this act, the Administrator may appoint a special industry committee to recommend the minimum rate or rates of wages to be paid under section 6 to all employees in Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands, or in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce, or the Administrator may appoint separate industry committees to recommend the minimum rate or rates of wages to be paid under section 6 to employees therein engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce in particular industries. An industry committee appointed under this subsection shall be composed of residents of such island or islands where the employees with respect to whom such committee was appointed are employed and residents of the United States outside of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

In determining the minimum rate or rates of wages to be paid, and in determining classifications, such industry committees and the Administrator shall be subject to the provisions of section 8, and no such committee shall recommend, nor shall the Administrator approve, a minimum wage rate which will give any industry in Puerto Rico or in the Virgin Islands a competitive advantage over any industry in the United States outside of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands."

(b) No wage orders issued by the Administrator prior to the enactment of this act pursuant to section 8 of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 shall after such enactment be applicable with respect to any employees engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce in Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands.

Sec. 2. Section 6 of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(c) The provisions of paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) of subsection (a) of this section shall be superseded in the case of any employee in Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce only for so long as and insofar as such employee is covered by a wage order issued by the Administrator pursuant to the recommendations of a special industry committee appointed pursuant to section 5 (e)."

Mr. KING. As stated, I have received many telegrams and letters from Puerto Rico urging that some steps be taken to prevent further injury to and demoralization of the whole economic structure of the island. Some of the letters which I have received indicate that not only is the needlework industry threatened with destruction, but that the tobacco and other industries are jeopardized. It is certain, from the communications which I have received, that approximately 80,000 persons engaged in the needlework industry will be deprived of employment, and that the market which they have built up beyond the borders of Puerto Rico will be destroyed. I am told that already the Far East is usurping or obtaining a large part of the market which Puerto Rico needlework products have developed. The markets for needlework have brought to Puerto Rico approximately $25,000,000 annually. It is needless to repeat that the loss of this market is not only serious, but a tragic blow to Puerto Rico.

I sincerely hope that before Congress adjourns measures will be enacted that will make for the improvement and rehabilitation of industries in the island.

PREVENTION OF PERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in view of the fact that on yesterday I made a statement concerning Senate bill 1871, I desire now to make a further very brief statement.

Yesterday I said that I had been definitely assured by certain members of the House Committee on the Judiciary that Senate bill 1871 would be reported by that committee today. That assurance had been given. Today I am informed that the House committee was unable to complete its labors and did not make its report. I rise merely to say that after conference with Mr. Celler and Mr. Walter, of the House committee, who informed me of the conditions in that committee, I do not at all consider that their failure to complete the bill today is in any sense a breach of their understanding or agreement with me. I think the gentlemen have endeavored in every way to carry out their agreement. In fact, Chairman Celler has called a meeting of his committee for tomorrow morning to complete the bill. In that respect the members of the House Judiciary Committee have kept faith with me and have kept the understanding, and I wanted to make that fact clear.

I am not satisfied with the action of the House committee with regard to section 9, and of that I shall have more to say later.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6791, making additional appropriations for the Military Establishment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6791) making additional appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendments reported by the committee will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Military posts," on page 7, line 10, after "1940", to strike out "$63,662,500" and insert "$64,862,500", so as to read:

For construction and installation of buildings, flying fields, and appurtenances thereto, authorized by the act entitled "An act to provide more effectively for the national defense by carrying out the recommendations of the President in his message of January 12, 1939, to the Congress", approved April 3, 1939, including interior facilities, fixed equipment, necessary services, roads, connections to water, sewer, gas, and electric mains, purchase and installation of telephone and radio equipment, and similar improvements, and procurement of transportation incident thereto, without reference to sections 1136 and 3734, Revised Statutes (10 U. S. C. 1339; 40 U. S. C. 267); employment of personnel without regard to civil-service requirements and restrictions of law relating thereto; general overhead expenses of transportation, engineering, supplies, inspection and supervision, and such services as may be necessary in the Office of the Quartermaster General; and the engagement by contract or otherwise without regard to section 3709, Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5), and at such rates of compensation as the Secretary of War may determine, of the services of architects or firms or corporations thereof and other technical and professional personnel as may be necessary, fiscal year 1940, $64,862,500, to remain available until expended, and, in addition, the Quartermaster General, when authorized by the Secretary of War, may enter into contracts prior to July 1, 1940, for the same purposes, to an amount not in excess of $21,337,500, and his action in so doing shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Federal Government for the payment of the cost thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 16, to insert:

SURVEYS AND MAPPING

Of the money appropriated by this act not to exceed $5,000,000 may be expended for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, for topographic surveys and mappings as proposed in Senate Document No. 54 (76th Cong., 1st sess.): Provided, That such funds may be expended for the same objects (but not limited to the amounts specified for such objects) enumerated in the Interior Department Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, under the heading "Geological Survey."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I have been authorized by the Committee on Appropriations to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert, on page 16, after line 10, the following new section:

Sec. 2. In order to provide adequate facilities for the constructing, manufacturing, or furnishing of any military or naval equipment, supplies, or other articles for the purposes of the national defense, the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are respectively hereby authorized and empowered from time to time to include, or cause to be included, in any contract that shall be made by them or under their authority, respectively, for the constructing, manufacturing, or furnishing of any such equipment, supplies, or other articles provisions satisfactory to them or their authorized representative for any or all of the following purposes, to wit: (a) To provide that the contractor shall construct or install additional facilities, or expand, modernize, improve, replace, or otherwise alter existing facilities, in order to expedite the constructing, manufacturing, or furnishing of any of such equipment, supplies, or other articles; (b) to provide that the cost of constructing, acquiring, installing, expanding, modernizing, improving, replacing, or otherwise altering such facilities shall be paid by the United States; (c) to provide that any such additional facilities the cost of which shall so be paid by the United States shall be and remain the property of the United States, subject as hereinafter provided, and that the United States shall have the right to acquire any such existing facilities so to be expanded, modernized, improved, replaced, or otherwise altered upon payment of fair compensation therefor to be determined as shall be provided in the contract; and (d) to provide that, if and when any such facilities that shall so become the property of the United States shall no longer be required by the contractor in the performance of any contract for the constructing, manufacturing, or furnishing to the United States or to any department, independent establishment, or other agency or instrumentality of the United States of any equipment, materials, supplies, or other articles, such facilities shall be removed from the premises of the contractor or otherwise disposed of in such manner and on such terms and conditions as shall be agreed upon by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, and the contractor, including, but without limitation on the foregoing, the sale or lease of such facilities to the contractor. Any costs of constructing, acquiring, installing, expanding, modernizing, improving, replacing, or otherwise altering any such facilities that shall be paid by the United States pursuant to any such contract shall not be deemed to be a part of the cost of performing, or of the total contract price under, any contract within the scope of section 3 of the act of March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 505), as heretofore or hereafter amended, for the purpose of computing profit or loss on such contract pursuant to said section 3. Any amounts heretofore or hereafter appropriated for the constructing, manufacturing or acquiring of any such equipment, supplies or other articles shall to the extent that shall be deemed necessary by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, be available for any of the purposes hereinbefore specified.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, this is a very long amendment, but it had to be long in order to make provision to give the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War certain discretionary powers to take care of a situation which might evolve from the following facts:

The law fixes a limitation of not more than 10 percent on the profit which may be made on goods manufactured under contracts with the War and Navy Departments. I am not quarreling with that, but it sometimes happens, for example, when the Navy or the Army want particular guns—to illustrate, heavy artillery—that there are no facilities for the manufacture of such guns. Unless some latitude and discretion are allowed the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy to construct the machinery to make such guns, as a part of the cost, there would be no concern in the United States able to make them, because it would cost 10 times as much to make them as the Government could pay for them. Therefore this amendment is so drawn as to give the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War the discretion to meet such a situation if one should arise.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I recall that the Committee on Military Affairs has considered proposed legislation relating to the procurement of munitions, and I wish to ask the Senator from Maryland whether his proposal has been coordinated with the existing law, lately enacted, regarding the procurement of munitions. I cannot judge, from a hasty reading of the amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. I cannot answer the question categorically, but the Subcommittee on Military Affairs of the Appropriations Committee and the full committee both felt that there was a need for an amendment of this kind. If we take it to conference and it develops there is any lack of coordination I am sure we can work out a suitable amendment, if there is any conflict.

Since I offered the amendment I have learned, although I cannot authenticate the statement, that the Navy Department is very much concerned about the hiatus which will result without the amendment, and it is quite likely that in conference both the Navy and the War Departments will be consulted by the conferees, and if there is any conflict of policies they will all be coordinated.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does the amendment contemplate authority to procure any supplies and munitions without limit?

Mr. TYDINGS. No. The sole purpose of the amendment is to provide for a situation where no machinery exists for the manufacture of something which the Army or the Navy may want, and where the manufacturer of the product desired is limited to a profit of 10 percent of the cost of the article itself rather than the machinery necessary to be installed to produce the article. This would give the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War authority to work out something so that the goods could actually be produced. That is the sole purpose.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does the proposal change the existing law with respect to what contracts can be made through open-market negotiations and what contracts can be made only through the competitive bidding process, on specifications?

Mr. TYDINGS. As I understand, it does not. Discretionary power will be granted, which may never have to be used, but an emergency might occur, when, if the Secretaries did not have the power, they could not secure the goods.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. KING. Would this authorize either the War or the Navy Department to create deficits?

Mr. TYDINGS. No. It calls for no extra appropriation.

Mr. KING. Then they could not embark upon some other construction?

Mr. TYDINGS. No more money could be spent with this amendment in the bill than without it.

Mr. KING. With that assurance, I think the amendment is satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TYDINGS. In view of the adoption of the amendment, I move that there be a further amendment on page 16, line 11, to change the section number from "2" to "3."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I notice on page 6, line 24, under the item for the construction of military posts, this language:

Employment of personnel without regard to civil-service requirements and restrictions of law relating thereto.

In the regular military appropriation bill $8,000,000 was appropriated for military posts, and it was provided that the personnel should be subject to civil-service requirements. I wondered whether the committee had considered the reason for exempting these employees from civil-service requirements.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the committee did not go into that phase of the matter; the question was not raised. But the appropriation for this work is a supplemental appropriation; it is extra work and in the nature of an emergency. For that reason, I presume, this language is in the bill in its present form. Other explanation I have not.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to invite the attention of the Senator to the subtitle "Military posts." I presume that the money carried under this item will be spent on regularly authorized projects, in accordance with the regular priorities, as established by the War Department. Would this follow the regular course?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. There is no change in the law, and this appropriation is to carry out the program which has heretofore been formulated by the board of strategy or the Chief of Staff and his assistants in the War Department.

Mr. LODGE. Would the same statement apply to the acquisition of land?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The War Department could not purchase land unless it were authorized to do so; so it would be pursuant to authorizations already enacted by the Congress.

Mr. LODGE. What is the purpose of the increase from $63,000,000 to $64,000,000?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That increase is made in order to provide $1,200,000 more for the Lowry Flying Field, located a few miles east of the city of Denver. A few years ago the War Department proceeded to abolish Chanute Field in Illinois, and it transferred the equipment and personnel to the new field, located east of Denver, on the theory that it would afford somewhat of a bombing field, and a place for the training of mechanics, a sort of a work field. Later on the War Department decided that it would not only build up Lowry Field, but would retain the Chanute Field, so this appropriation carries something like $2,000,000, perhaps a little more, for the Chanute Field, and a small appropriation, relatively, was made for Lowry Field. The appropriation is to build up the two simultaneously and harmoniously.

Mr. LODGE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, without being critical, one is compelled to suggest a lack of interest upon the part of the Senate in measures carrying very large appropriations. We have before us now a bill which carries an appropriation of more than $223,000,000 for the War Department. Looking around the Senate Chamber, I perceive not more than 10 or 15 Senators present.

We seem to accept the view that appropriations, no matter how large, need but little consideration. It has become a habit with us to vote for appropriation bills carrying hundreds of millions of dollars with but little consideration and but little debate. It is assumed that the House has given due consideration to appropriation measures, and that the Senate Committee on Appropriations likewise has been satisfied with the measures which it reports to the Senate.

However, this attitude toward appropriation bills is not justified, particularly in view of the stupendous sums that are being appropriated and the certainty of an enormous deficit at the end of the fiscal year. I fear that we have been induced to support these very large appropriations for the Army and the Navy without due consideration, and in part as a result of an emotionalism, or at least because in other parts of the world the clouds of war are hovering over the people. Undoubtedly conditions in other parts of the world may not be ignored; but unless there are strong reasons to support appropriations of more than $2,000,000,000 for the next fiscal year for military purposes, we are not justified in giving them our support.

A few days ago the Senate passed a bill carrying more than $508,000,000 for the Army, and subsequently a deficiency bill, carrying more than $70,000,000 was passed. In addition to these appropriations, it is known that the Works Progress Administration has, in the past, been called upon to make important contributions toward the construction of military and naval works, and during the next fiscal year it is anticipated that the Works Progress Administration will be called upon to aid in carrying out the program of the Army and the Navy.

As I have indicated, notwithstanding the very large appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, the appropriations for the next fiscal year will exceed the aggregate amount by several hundreds of millions of dollars. It is manifest that before Congress adjourns, the appropriations for the Army and Navy for the next fiscal year will be in excess of $2,000,000,000.

I have upon various occasions challenged attention to the unwise course which I believe our Government is pursuing in the matter of appropriations. Notwithstanding the heavy tax burdens resting upon the people, the appropriations are substantially double the revenues. For the next fiscal year, the revenues will approximate $5,000,000,000; and the appropriations, in my opinion, will total $10,000,000,000.

In addition to this great list of appropriations, Congress has authorized, and will authorize before this session concludes, expenditures aggregating approximately $4,000,000,000. Indeed, it is difficult to determine just what the contingent liabilities of the Government will be as a result of legislation enacted at this session of Congress.

It is obvious, however, that the gap between revenues and appropriations is widening, and that the Government will soon reach the authorized limit of indebtedness of $45,000,000,000. Suggestions were made in various executive departments that the limit of indebtedness was too restrictive, and that legislation be enacted that would authorize $50,000,000,000 of national indebtedness. Suggestions are being made by some in executive authority that, in view of the fact that the expenditures of the Federal Government were largely confined to the United States, there was no justification for any fear of dangerous consequences resulting therefrom. In other words, it is the philosophy of some in authority that if we spend the money in the United States, it is quite unimportant as to the amount which is appropriated by Congress.

I fear that this delusion is influencing many Americans and is more or less pervasive in the executive and legislative branches of the Government. Attempts to restrict appropriations are unavailing, and, as I have stated upon former occasions, the orgy of spending is increasing in intensity. The result inevitably must be inflation, with all the evils which attend inflationary policies.

From time to time during the past few years motions have been submitted to reduce appropriation bills. But limited support has been given to the same. Indebtedness, whether of individuals, communities, States, or governments, is a burden upon the people, and ultimately it may become so oppressive as to produce the most serious consequences. Our Government, rich as it is, may not continue indefinitely the policy of spending which has characterized it for a number of years. The deficits during the past 6 or 7 years will reach the sum of approximately $25,000,000,000. During this same period the Federal Government has, through its tax laws, compelled the American people to make contributions to the Federal Treasury of approximately $30,000,000,000.

Loose fiscal policies produce unfortunate, and often disastrous, results. There is no promise of immortality to nations, and if they violate the rules of prudent conduct, they will be compelled to pay the penalty. Great economists and historians animadvert upon the evils of profligate spending, and the pages of history record the undermining of governments and the destruction of nations as a result of extravagance and waste and profligate spending.

As I have indicated, there is no promise of immortality to this Republic. A great historian has told us that the history of all governments is a history of the follies of their people. This Republic has attained great prestige, and stands today as the most important Nation in the world. And yet, nations, as well as individuals, must take heed lest they fall.

We are pursuing, I regret to say, a reckless course in the matter of expenditures and in following unwise and often illegal and unconstitutional policies. I protest against departures from constitutional government and the entering by the Federal Government into fields of endeavor that are outside of the sphere of governmental authority. To avoid the tragedies that have come to other peoples and other nations, we must pursue a path of safety and adhere to wise and sound policies which in letter and spirit are in harmony with constitutional government.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, supplementing what the Senator from Utah has said, I wish to add merely one observation. Unfortunately, the Senate never has the same opportunity to canvass the details of appropriations that the House has. I will give one example, because it challenges my attention.

We now have what is called a National Emergency Council in the executive department. I wonder if the Senator from Utah, who is perhaps the closest student in this body of these details, knows that apparently about one-half of the activity of the National Emergency Council consists of making motion pictures; that the Congress of the United States in a relief bill has just appropriated three or four hundred thousand dollars to make motion pictures; that about 400 films have thus far been made; that one film has cost $165,000; and that at this moment of grave challenge to the fiscal integrity of the Government we have a pay roll in the Executive Office which includes such items as these:

Film-service director, $10,000.

Chief of production of films, $9,000.

Motion-picture director, $9,000.

Director of photography—a new position—$9,000.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator at that point?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes, indeed.

Mr. ADAMS. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that he is reading a list of things which were desired, not a list of things which were granted, because the Senate Appropriations Committee eliminated the film-service item.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the Senator from Colorado mean that the bill as we passed it has done away with the entire film activity of the Federal Emergency Council?

Mr. ADAMS. I do not. I mean the bill which came to us adding $850,000 to the National Emergency Council contained a requested increase of $150,000 for film service, and we declined to include the film-service item; so the bill was passed without a special appropriation for the film service. That is what happened. There is in existence a film service, which has been financed from various departments. The Works Progress Administration had some work done, the cost of which they paid. The Public Works Administration had some work done. I think some of the other departments had some work done by that service. It was all moved under the Bureau of Education. But we did not make the requested appropriation specifically for that service. I knew the Senator from Michigan would like to have that explanation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am very glad to have that information. I am sure the Senator from Colorado would agree with my viewpoint regarding this sort of extra curricula activity on the part of the Federal Government.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I may suggest that the film business has been a development of the past 20 or 25 years. When the present administration came into power practically every bureau of the Government had a well-developed film or motion picture service. It seemed that every department wanted to organize a movie service to the end that its particular activities could be photographed and preserved for the benefit of posterity. Under the Reorganization Act an effort is being made to get rid of all these various movie activities, and to center the necessary and essential activities under one head. That is the occasion for this item in the bill. It may look strange because the service is centered, but if Senators will compare the expense under this item with the expense under the former system of permitting every department to have a movie division, I think they will find it effects an essential saving.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator thinks there is progress through sanity. I do not think that any activity purely propaganda in its nature should be charged to the taxpayers of the United States at a moment when for 9 consecutive years we are paying $15,000 a minute out of the Treasury and taking in $9,000.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. As I understand, the Senator is referring to the use of relief money for these films?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. In that connection let me say that we looked into that matter in the Byrnes committee last winter, and I asked the then Administrator, Mr. Hopkins, about the use of relief money for this purpose, and inquired whether relief labor was used to produce these films, because it would seem that if relief appropriations were involved they should rather be used to give relief to the community. He said that that was not the case, that these films were not made with relief labor; that when it came to the matter of imparting knowledge to the public about the W. P. A. programs he thought that those were very small considerations. He applied the same reasoning to the expensive printing to which the Senator from Michigan called attention 2 years ago. I asked him whether that was done with relief labor, and he said "No," that it was not, but there again, when it came to conveying knowledge to the public about the W. P. A., expense was no object.

I then asked him why it was that the accounts of the W. P. A. should be printed in so much more expensive and luxurious style than are the deliberations of Congress, which are, after all, simply printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and he said that he did not want to answer that question. If the Senator from Michigan has an answer to that, I know we would all be interested to hear it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I think the answer is obvious. It is bureaucracy's appetite in the first instance, and bureaucracy's purpose to perpetuate itself at any cost in the final analysis. That applies not only to the movie item but the radio item in the same bill. When, night before last, I asked the able Senator from Colorado what the radio item was for, he was not able to tell us. I have read the House committee hearings, and I find that the Radio Division of the National Emergency Council has numerous activities, but at the moment it is engaged as follows—and for this we made a specific appropriation of relief funds—I read:

At present the Radio Division is making a series of electrical transcriptions for the President and members of his Cabinet.

Mr. President, I repeat, in passing, that if the Senate could know the detail of the waste and exploitation which is wrapped up in some of these appropriation bills, even the blase Senate would be shocked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments, and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I had intended to offer an amendment to reduce the appropriations carried in this bill to the extent of 10 percent. However, upon further consideration I shall pretermit that purpose for the present, and after all the appropriation bills have been passed I shall offer an amendment calling for a reduction of 10 percent in the aggregate of all appropriation bills.

The President of the United States to a very large degree won the confidence of the American people when he came into office and recommended a reduction of 25 percent in appropriations. Certainly this blase Senate and this blase Congress—a Congress which apparently is indifferent to enormous appropriations—ought to join with any Senator in asking for a reduction of 10 percent. I think we would be entirely warranted in asking for a reduction of 25 percent in the aggregate appropriations which will be made by perhaps the "spendingest" Congress this Nation has ever known.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill (H. R. 6791) was passed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in order to expedite final action on the bill, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair) appointed Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. SHEPARD, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. BRIDGES conferees on the part of the Senate.

ADDITIONAL CLERK HIRE IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6205.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, may I inquire what the bill is?

Mr. TYDINGS. It is a bill to provide for additional clerk hire in the House of Representatives, and for other purposes.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6205) to provide for additional clerk hire in the House of Representatives, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with an amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the bill is only two pages long. It originated in the House of Representatives. It provides for an additional clerk for each Member of the House.

It has been the traditional policy of the Government that whatever either branch of Congress wanted to do in its own body it had a right to do without interference from the other branch. We had a problem in the Senate. For a long time Senators had been obtaining clerk hire during the emergency from the contingent fund. That arrangement was eliminated, and a permanent arrangement substituted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The amendment was, on page 1, after line 7, to insert:

Sec. 2. Section 1 of the Legislative Pay Act of 1929 (U. S. C., title 2, sec. 60 (a)), is amended by adding three new paragraphs under the caption "Clerical Assistance to Senators," as follows:

"Ninety-six additional clerks at $1,800 each, one for each Senator, in lieu of the assistant clerks now authorized by Senate Resolution 144, agreed to August 15, 1935, which resolution is hereby repealed as of January 1, 1940.

"Each Senator shall have one additional clerk at $1,500 per annum, and in addition thereto each Senator from any State which has a population of 3,000,000 or more inhabitants shall be entitled, in addition to the one clerical assistant provided for in this paragraph, to one additional clerk at the rate of $1,500 per annum.

"The majority and the minority leaders of the Senate shall each be entitled to have, in addition to any other clerical assistance to which he may be entitled under this act or any other act, a research assistant at $5,000 per annum."

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution providing for pay to clerks to Members of Congress and Delegates", approved January 25, 1923 (U. S. C., title 2, sec. 92), is amended by striking out "to one or two persons" and inserting in lieu thereof "to one, two, or three persons."

Sec. 2. Section 1 of the Legislative Pay Act of 1929 (U. S. C., title 2, sec. 60 (a)), is amended by adding three new paragraphs under the caption "Clerical Assistance to Senators," as follows:

"Ninety-six additional clerks at $1,800 each, one for each Senator, in lieu of the assistant clerks now authorized by Senate Resolution 144, agreed to August 15, 1935, which resolution is hereby repealed as of January 1, 1940.

"Each Senator shall have one additional clerk at $1,500 per annum, and in addition thereto each Senator from any State which has a population of 3,000,000 or more inhabitants shall be entitled, in addition to the one clerical assistant provided for in this paragraph, to one additional clerk at the rate of $1,500 per annum.

"The majority and the minority leaders of the Senate shall each be entitled to have, in addition to any other clerical assistance to which he may be entitled under this act or any other act, a research assistant at $5,000 per annum."

Sec. 3. Section 2 of the Legislative Pay Act of 1929 (U. S. C., title 2, sec. 60 (b)) is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 2. The clerk hire of each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner shall be at the rate of $6,500 per annum and shall be paid in accordance with the joint resolution of January 25, 1923, as amended: Provided, That no person shall receive a salary from such clerk hire at a rate in excess of $3,900 per annum."

Sec. 4. This act shall become effective on January 1, 1940.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, it strikes me it might be well to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the proposal contained in this amendment marks, so far as I know, the first act by the Senate of the United States to make a difference among the States. Constitutionally the States are all equal. When the Constitution was drafted it was thought of the highest public interest that each State should be represented by two Senators, regardless of population and regardless of any other differences which distinguish one State from another. From that time down to this moment the States have all been equal in this body. This is the first step to introduce inequality. Heretofore all Members of the Senate have had exactly the same clerical assistance. I venture the prediction that if the Senate now approves the proposal before it to grant additional help to Representatives of States of large population it will not be long before other steps will be taken to draw differences among the States and to grant larger powers and larger representation to the States of large population.

I recognize the fact that a very plausible argument can be made in support of the theory that greater weight should be given to those States which have large populations.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Gladly.

Mr. HAYDEN. Would not the Senator say "practical" rather than "plausible"? We must recognize that the State of New York is really very much larger in population than the State of Arizona, and that the State of Illinois is larger in population than many other States.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I accept the amendment. What the Senator says is quite true. The argument is both plausible and practical.

Mr. HAYDEN. The argument appealed to me, knowing the facts. California is a great State, with 6,000,000 people. Texas has a population of 6,000,000. Representatives of the States of larger population are necessarily burdened with more correspondence than Representatives of States of less than half a million people.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I was about to remark that that is one of the practical or plausible arguments for the bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. I should hesitate a long time to insist that I be provided with clerks I did not need in order that Senators from the larger States who do need them may have them. It would be a waste of public money to appropriate money for additional clerks for my office.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Would not the Senator feel that the same observation should apply to mileage?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Not all all.

Mr. TYDINGS. Why not?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Because mileage is intended to convey Members of Congress to the Capital.

Mr. TYDINGS. Clerks are intended to help Members perform their duties after they arrive at the Capital. If the Senator puts all Senators on the same plane, it seems to me he is making fish of one and fowl of another when he draws the line between mileage and clerk hire.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It seemed to me that the attention of the Senate ought to be called to this condition. I recognize, of course, that Senators from the larger States have a tremendous volume of correspondence. That correspondence has been increasing for all of us in recent years. I very well remember the time when most of the correspondence which came to Members of Congress came to those Members representing the Western States, because most of the business of citizens of those States was with the Federal Government, and a great proportion of the area of the Western States was under Federal control and domination. Much more of the Federal business was with citizens of those States than with citizens of Eastern States. However, that situation has completely changed.

Mr. President, I do not rise with the intention of opposing this proposal, but I feel that it should be made clear that we are placing our feet upon a new path. For the past 25 years the importance of this body has been steadily deteriorating. There can be no question about that, in my opinion. We have been surrendering the powers of the States, and Members of the Senate who come here constitutionally as representatives of the States actually have ceased to act in that capacity. It seems to me we are gradually turning to government by the populous States to the detriment of the constitutional theory under which our Government was set up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert in the proper place the following new section:

SEC. —. That hereafter if a Senator should die during his term of office his secretary and other members of his office staff then borne upon the pay rolls of the Senate shall be continued on such pay rolls in their respective positions for a period of 90 days from the date of the Senator's death: Provided, That this shall not apply to clerks and assistant clerks of standing committees of the Senate when their services would otherwise continue beyond such periods.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, my amendment applies only to the Senate. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he will not take the amendment to conference and work out a new section applicable to both Houses.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the committee has not considered this amendment, but there seems to be merit to the proposal. If the Senator has no objection, we shall be glad to take the amendment to conference and see if we can work out a satisfactory provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 6205) was read the third time and passed.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask that the clerks be authorized to renumber the sections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. TRUMAN, Mr. HALE, and Mr. BRIDGES conferees on the part on the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. TYDINGS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. TYDINGS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	King	Russell

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BANKHEAD in the chair). Eighty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

ARMY NOMINATIONS REPORTED AND CONFIRMED

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Military Affairs I report favorably all Army nominations now pending before the committee. Inasmuch as the War Department is very desirous of making most of these appointments effective on July 1, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration and confirmation of the nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have no objection, but will the Senator state the number of officers involved?

Mr. LOGAN. They are routine nominations numbering, I presume, 50 or 60, lieutenants, colonels, and other officers of different rank.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations reported by the Senator from Kentucky are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. LOGAN. I now ask unanimous consent that the President be at once notified of the confirmation of the nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Leo E. Trombly, of New York, to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 7, with headquarters at Ogdensburg, N. Y. (reappointment).

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of several officers for promotion and sundry citizens for appointment as officers in the Marine Corps.

Mr. MCKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William S. Boyle to be United States attorney for the district of Nevada, which had been adversely reported.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is at the present time attending the luncheon to the Crown Prince of Norway, I suggest that that nomination be passed over until later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky kindly make it clear that the Boyle nomination is going over only temporarily?

Mr. BARKLEY. Only temporarily; not for the day.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN FOR EXCHANGE OF COTTON AND RUBBER

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, it is highly desirable that Executive N, under Treaties, Calendar No. 9, the agreement between Great Britain and the United States respecting the exchange of cotton and rubber, be taken up for consideration. That agreement might be disposed of now.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that I have arranged mutually with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] to take up the MacLeish nomination today, because I understand there is to be some discussion of it. If this agreement involves no debate, I shall be glad to see it acted on.

Mr. GEORGE. I apprehend that there will be no discussion. The agreement is unanimously reported by the committee.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I have had a rather hasty conference here, and, so far as I have been able to ascertain, I can find no objection on the part of the minority to proceeding to the consideration of the agreement, if it does not delay the other matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection to its being disposed of now.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive N (76th Cong., 1st sess.), an agreement between the Government of the United States and the Government of the United Kingdom for the exchange of certain reserve stocks of cotton and rubber, signed at London on June 23, 1939, which was read the second time, as follows:

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENTS OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND THE UNITED KINGDOM FOR THE EXCHANGE OF COTTON AND RUBBER

The Government of the United States of America and the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, desiring to make arrangements for the exchange of cotton and rubber, have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE 1. The United States Government will supply to the Government of the United Kingdom, delivered on board ship, compressed to high density, at New Orleans, Louisiana, and at other Gulf and Atlantic deep-water ports to be agreed upon between the two Governments, 600,000 bales of raw cotton of the grades and staples which will be specified by the Government of the United Kingdom. The United States Government will make available in adequate quantities for such purpose cotton from the stock on which the United States Government has made advances to growers.

(A) The price will be fixed on the basis of the average market price as published by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics for middling  $\frac{3}{8}$ -inch cotton during the period January 1st-June 23rd, 1939, for spot delivery at New Orleans, plus 0.24 cent per lb. for cost of compression and delivery on board ship, with adjustments in price for other grades and staples according to differences above or below middling  $\frac{3}{8}$ -inch quoted in that period.

(B) The cotton will be inspected to determine its classification in accordance with the universal cotton standards for grade and the official standards of the United States for staple, and will be accepted, by experts appointed by the Government of the United Kingdom. Any disputes which may arise will be settled by Boards of Referees constituted of three members, of whom one shall be nominated by the Government of the United Kingdom.

(C) Samples representing the cotton of the grades and staples specified by the Government of the United Kingdom will be made available for inspection and acceptance during a period of six months beginning 15 days after the entry into force of this agreement, and such inspection and acceptance will be made within a reasonable time after the cotton is so made available. Delivery at the warehouse at the port of sailing with provision for free delivery on board ship at high density will be made within 15 days after inspection and acceptance, and storage and insurance charges will be borne by the United States Government for a period of two weeks but no more after delivery at the warehouse at the port of sailing.

(D) All cotton will be invoiced and accepted on gross weights at the time of delivery.

ARTICLE 2. The Government of the United Kingdom will supply to the Government of the United States, delivered on board ship at Singapore and, by agreement between the two Governments, at other convenient ports, rubber in bales, of the grades which will be specified by the Government of the United States, to a value equivalent to that of the total value of the cotton to be supplied in accordance with article 1 of this agreement. In determining such equivalent value, the rate of exchange between Straits Settlements dollars and United States dollars shall be deemed to be the average of the buying rate during the period January 1st-June 23rd, 1939, in the New York market, at noon, for cable transfers payable in Straits Settlements dollars, as certified by the Federal Reserve Bank to the Secretary of the United States Treasury and published in Treasury Decisions.

(A) The quantity of rubber will be calculated upon the average market price, as published by the Department of Statistics in the Straits Settlements, for No. 1 ribbed smoked sheets, during the period January 1st-June 23rd, 1939, for spot delivery at Singapore plus 0.25 Straits Settlements cents per pound for cost of baling and delivery on board ship, with adjustments in price for other grades according to differences quoted in that period.

(B) The rubber will be inspected and accepted by experts appointed by the United States Government. Any disputes will be settled in accordance with the normal custom of the trade.

(C) The rubber will be made available for inspection and acceptance by experts appointed by the Government of the United States during a period of six months beginning at a date to be agreed upon by the two Governments, and such inspection and acceptance will be made within a reasonable time after the rubber is so made available. Delivery at the warehouse at the port of shipment with provision for free delivery on board ship will be made within a period of 15 days after inspection and acceptance, and storage and insurance charges will be borne by the Government of the United Kingdom for a period of two weeks but no more after delivery at the warehouse at the port of shipment.

ARTICLE 3. If either Government should find that delivery in accordance with the arrangements specified in articles 1 and 2 is likely to restrict supplies available to commercial markets unduly or to stimulate undue price increases, the two Governments shall consult with a view to postponing delivery or taking other action in order to avoid or minimize such restriction of supplies or such price increases.

ARTICLE 4. The intention of the United States Government and of the Government of the United Kingdom being to acquire reserves of cotton and rubber, respectively, against the contingency of a major war emergency, each Government undertakes not to dispose of its stock (otherwise than for the purpose of replacing such stocks by equivalent quantities insofar as may be expedient for preventing deterioration) except in the event of such an emergency. If, however, either Government should at any future date decide that the time has come to liquidate its stock of cotton or rubber, as the case may be, it may do so only after (A) consulting the other Government as to the means to be employed for the disposal of such stock and (B) taking all steps to avoid disturbance of the markets. In no case may either Government dispose of such stocks, except in the case of a major war emergency, before a date 7 years after the coming into force of this agreement.

ARTICLE 5. The Government of the United Kingdom will use their best endeavours to secure that the export is permitted under the International Rubber Regulation Scheme of an amount of rubber approximately equivalent to the amount of rubber to be supplied to the United States Government under this agreement in addition to the amount of rubber which would, under the normal operation of the scheme, be released to meet current consumption needs.

ARTICLE 6. Each Government undertakes, in shipping to its own ports the stocks of cotton and rubber, respectively, provided for in this agreement, so far as may be possible to distribute the tonnage equally between the ships of the two countries, provided that the shipping space required is obtainable at reasonable rates. Consultation for the purpose of giving effect to this article shall be between the Board of Trade and the Maritime Commission.

ARTICLE 7. Should the United States Government, before the delivery is completed of the cotton provided for in article 1 of this agreement, take any action which has the effect of an export subsidy, they will deliver to the Government of the United Kingdom an additional quantity of cotton proportionate to the reduction in price below that provided for in article 1 of this agreement caused by such action.

ARTICLE 8. This agreement shall come into force on a date to be agreed between the two Governments.

In witness whereof the undersigned, duly authorized thereto, have signed the present agreement and have affixed thereto their seals.

Done in London in duplicate this 23rd day of June 1939.

Certified to be a true copy of the foregoing agreement as received by the Secretary of State by cable from the American Ambassador at London.

CORDELL HULL,

Secretary of State of the United States of America.

JUNE 24, 1939.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment, the agreement will be reported to the Senate.

The agreement was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive N, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, an agreement between the Government of the United States and the Government of the United Kingdom for the exchange of certain reserve stocks of cotton and rubber, signed at London on June 23, 1939.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution is agreed to, and the agreement is ratified.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Archibald MacLeish to be Librarian of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I think the Senate ought not to advise and consent to this appointment. I am going to state as briefly as I can some of the reasons why I think we should dissent to this appointment.

In the first place, I shall read a communication from the American Library Association.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is that the communication which was sent to me, to which the Senator from Vermont called my attention a week or so ago?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I do not know whether or not it is the same one. I can tell by looking at it. I think not.

Several days ago I asked the majority leader whether he had received from San Francisco a communication of the librarians who were in session there—some 1,400 librarians. He has just called my attention to a communication which I have no doubt is the one which I understood had been sent to him; but I wish to read this one. It is dated "June 12, 1939, en route to San Francisco conference of American Library Association:"

The American Library Association urges the Senate not to confirm the appointment of Archibald MacLeish as Librarian of Congress, because he lacks the essential qualifications of a librarian. His ability and distinction as a man of letters are unquestioned. (We are not concerned with his politics.) But librarianship is not a literary pursuit. Writing is not of itself a suitable preparation for it.

Librarians, library trustees, and other citizen groups have worked for almost three-quarters of a century for the extension and improvement of libraries—with such success that the United States holds undisputed world leadership in library service. A primary reason for that success has been the emphasis on trained and experienced library administrators.

A hundred years ago every important library post was filled by somebody's political or personal choice. Now, nearly all are filled by men and women who have prepared themselves for that vocation. The appointment of a nonprofessional as head of the Library of Congress would endanger the merit system of appointment to all library positions carefully built up during three generations.

Mr. MacLeish could not qualify for the librarianship of any college or public library in America which attempts to maintain professional standards—as most do. He most certainly is not qualified to be the Librarian of the largest and most important library in the world.

The administration of the Library of Congress is not a simple task which can be learned quickly. It is complex and highly professional.

It involves personnel administration. The Librarian is solely responsible for selection, appointment, training on the job, promotion, and discharge. The staff numbers 850 people. Many appointments are made each year.

It involves financial administration of yearly expenditures of $3,000,000.

It involves general library administration in all its aspects. The Library of Congress is the head and center of the library system of America. Its first duty is to the Congress and other officers of the Government. But its varied services are also indispensable to scholars, special investigators, writers, the blind, universities, and all other libraries, in every State and Territory.

These services do not organize and run themselves. They must be continuously adjusted to educational and social changes. They are best operated, improved, and extended under the direction of a man who understands how and why they are performed. They would almost certainly deteriorate under amateur leadership. Those who use the Library would suffer.

The appointment of a man as a figurehead would do no honor to the appointee. It would, however, be a denial of the value of professional training and experience.

If any Senator thinks that the American Library Association may not fully represent all library opinion, he is respectfully urged to solicit the opinions of librarians and members of library boards in his own State.

The Congress and the people are proud of the Library of Congress. They should have as Librarian of that institution one who is not only a gentleman and a scholar but who is also the ablest library administrator available.

I think I add nothing to the communication when I say that the service which is described of the Library of Congress extends far beyond what has been set forth in the communication. The only usefulness of undertaking to show the breadth and scope of the service of the Library of Congress of the United States is to show that there should be selected for the Librarian of Congress a man who has the character and the special skill and knowledge required to conduct a great institution having a large personnel and performing a varied service to humanity. I think all Senators will admit that, and therefore it is not necessary to prove it.

The question, then, is whether this appointee is the type of man who, from all the great field of possibilities in America, should be picked out and placed in this leading Library of the United States.

I think that probably as fair a picture of the personality and character and color of this appointee as could be had could be gained from his own statement about himself. I have here an extract from Living Authors, by Stanley Jasspon Kunitz, published by H. W. Wilson Co., New York, in 1931:

Archibald MacLeish, the American poet, gives the following biographical sketch of himself.

This is Mr. MacLeish talking about Mr. MacLeish, and, of course, the test I wish to have applied to him is, Is he a librarian; is he of a character to become a librarian; is he an executive; is he of the potential capacity to become an executive? Those are natural questions. I read from Mr. MacLeish's sketch of himself:

Born May 7, 1892, in a wooden chateau overlooking, from a clay bluff and a grove of oak trees, the waters of Lake Michigan. Father a Scot, a Glasgow man, born a Presbyterian, ultimately a Baptist, always a devout Protestant; one of the early settlers of Chicago; 54 when I was born; a merchant; a cold, tall, rigorous man of very beautiful speech. Mother a Connecticut woman, daughter of a Congregational minister, herself a graduate of Vassar and a teacher there; her family a seafaring family from the Connecticut coast about Norwich; very passionate people with many mad among them; a very strong family resemblance from one generation to the next—small dark eyes and high cheekbones and similar voices; she was my father's third wife; intelligent and energetic and tireless and virtuous.

Four of us grew up—one to be killed flying with the British over Belgium. Public schools. Lake Beach. Oak thickets. Went to a fashionable Connecticut preparatory school for 4 years and hated it.

Went to Yale. Regular undergraduate life—football team, swimming team, chairman of the Literary Magazine, Phi Beta Kappa, senior societies; began writing, but learned little about it and had little life of my own. Went to Harvard Law School to avoid going to work; led my class the last year; worked terribly hard because of the competition, but could never believe in the law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if I may inquire of the Senator, a copy of the statement I have, both as published in the magazine and also sent to me by Mr. MacLeish, does not read exactly as the copy from which the Senator is quoting reads.

Mr. AUSTIN. In order to know anything about that I would have to see the Senator's copy. I have never seen any copy except this one.

Mr. BARKLEY. For instance, the Senator read something referring to Mr. MacLeish's mother, where he referred to her virtue. The article which I have, which Mr. MacLeish wrote, and which appeared in the magazine and in this book, says, "intelligent and energetic and entirely selfless and beloved." The Senator did not read that.

Mr. AUSTIN. I read it this way, "intelligent and energetic and tireless and virtuous."

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not suppose it makes any difference.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not think it affects the candidate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Evidently there is a discrepancy there.

Mr. AUSTIN. The sketch proceeds—

Married Ada Hitchcock, who is a singer. This while I was in law school. Son born early in 1917. War: Went abroad in a hospital unit so as to do the right thing, but not be hurt. In France, got shifted to the field artillery out of shame.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is the Senator now reading a statement from Mr. MacLeish himself?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is what it purports to be.

Mr. BORAH. Is that the statement in which he said he sought a position where he would not be hurt?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. Was not this statement made at a class reunion?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not know.

Mr. TOBEY. I think this statement was made by Mr. MacLeish as an alumnus of college, or of the university, to a class association meeting, at their annual reunion, and has in it a little facetious vein against himself. I think we ought to know the origin of this, as well as the substance.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator for affording any information about it at all that he has. I certainly am not trying to give this statement any color whatever. I am reading what purports to be a statement by Mr. MacLeish himself. If the circumstances in which it was made give it a significance different from what the circumstances in the Senate give it, there is no doubt at all he should have the benefit. Read here in the Senate of the United States it probably does have a derogatory effect. It certainly had that impression on my mind, and what is still to follow corroborates that impression.

The nominee's sketch of himself proceeds:

War; went abroad in a hospital unit so as to do the right thing but not be hurt. In France got shifted to the field artillery out of shame; few weeks at the front north of Meaux in July 1918; sent home to take battery in new regiment of 155 G. P. F.'s; ended up a captain of field artillery at Camp Meade with no distinction but fact that my brother Kenneth had been a grand flier and had been killed.

Taught for a year at Harvard to avoid (again) going to work. Wrote a little all the time but it wasn't any good. One book of undergraduate verses, Tower of Ivory (1917), published while I was in France. Practiced law for 3 years in the office of Charles F. Choate, Jr., in Boston, trying cases mostly and did pretty well, but couldn't write. Only one desire—to write the poems I wanted to write and not the poems I was writing. Winter of 1923 decided to go to France anyway on what we had. Date the beginning of my life from the year. Went in the fall of 1923 with two children. Lived in the Boulevard St. Michel and at St. Cloud and later in the Rue du Bac. One summer in Normandy. After that on the Mediterranean, cruising a great deal. Went one spring for 5 months to Persia, going down through the central cities to Bushire and west along the Persian Gulf to Mohamara and back through Shiraz and Ispahan to Teheran. All this time reading, mostly French poetry and chiefly Laforgue, Rimbaud, Leon Paul Fargue, St. J. Pierre, Valery. Also Eliot and Pound. Began writing in 1923. Published the Happy Marriage (1924), The Pot of Earth (1925), Nobodaddy (1925), and Streets in the Moon (1926). Came home in 1928 and lived on a farm. Have since published the Hamlet of A. MacLeish (1928) and New Found Land (1930). Traveled in the monte in Mexico alone for some time in the early spring of 1929, going over the route of Cortez from San Juan de Ulúa to Tenochtitlan. Do hack work in New York when I have to.

Burton Rascoe describes MacLeish as "a clear-eyed, deferential young man with an extremely Nordic head, quiet manners, and an ungovernable passion for discussing esthetics—esthetics in the round, in the general, in the specific, in the concrete—any way so long as it is esthetics."

Have Senators heard anything in this account which leads them to believe that this person, charming as he pictures himself, has had any experience or any training which has been recognized by men as fitting him for an executive position, having charge of 850 men engaged in a varied service, affecting all phases of human life, as we know it to be, in the Library of Congress? Have my colleagues heard anything in this which indicates the personality or the character or the qualifications of a librarian, a man having to do with the acquisition and preservation in a systematic way of the literature of the entire world? I have not. From my point of view, the background given in this statement is sufficient to make me pause and question before I accept this man as one who should be placed at the head of the Library of Congress.

Mr. President, Time magazine for April 25, 1938, in reviewing Mr. MacLeish's book, Land of the Free, said among other things what I am about to read. I ask unanimous consent that I may insert in the Record at this point the entire article, to certain parts of which I intend to call particular attention.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[From Time magazine, April 25, 1938]

Some time after the great depression, Poet Archibald MacLeish, growing more and more shocked by contemporary United States social and economic conditions, decided that his poetry had better get busy and do something about them. To carry out this decision, which seemed to necessitate writing poems about matters of immediate popular concern, Poet MacLeish began to top work his poetry on to popular art forms. First sizable sprout to grow from this top working was Panic (1935), a graft of lyric poetry on the drama. This verse-play depicted a scene from the currently expected crack-up of what Communists call capitalism, capitalists call civilization. Most of those who saw Panic agreed that it was more theatrics than theater, felt that it only confirmed the general rule that verse plays should be read, not seen—but also felt that in it Verse-Playwright MacLeish had made some good, if confused, topical points.

Next product of Poet MacLeish's top working was a radio-play poem, The Fall of the City, broadcast in 1937. A radio-studio innovation, it presented fascism as a spook in armor, stalking in on and taking control of a nation paralyzed by inertia, fear, and propaganda. Few listeners-in agreed on the poetic merits of what the rather wild air waves had been saying, but most did agree that if fascism should come to the United States it would come as a man, not a spook; agreed also, that in The Fall of the City, Radio-Play-Poet MacLeish had made some good, if eerie, topical points.

Latest socio-poetic graft that Poet MacLeish has produced is Land of the Free, in which he top works his poetry on to the art form of the news-picture magazine. In this book, 88 photographs of United States landscape and people (taken independently of Poet MacLeish, and mostly for the Resettlement Administration) are illustrated by a running verse commentary in which Poet MacLeish says his say about a sweet land whose liberty, for many of its inhabitants, went sour.

What these inhabitants look like, what their share of the United States has become, is recorded with indelible indifference by the heartbreaking or horrifying photographs in the Land of the Free. They showed piercingly characteristic, dead-beat scenes from all over the United States, with a heavy preponderance from below the Mason-Dixon line. Consequently, some may feel that Poet MacLeish's selection doesn't fight fair with all-American self-gratulation; that too many of its blows land below the Bible belt. Most people, however, will agree that these superbly taken, brilliantly presented photographs are the most exhorting testimonial yet published to the gutting that United States citizens have given the American Continent and that the continent is giving back to United States citizens.

The sound track of verse accompanying these photographs sometimes runs close to the story they tell, sometimes veers off in its own direction. No photograph in the collection really matches up with Poet MacLeish's main proposition:

Maybe the liberty we thought we had

Was room to be left to ourselves to have liberty. . . .

or its revolutionary corollary:

We wonder if the liberty is done: . . .

Or if there's something different men can dream

Or if there's something different men can mean by liberty . . .

Or if there's liberty a man can mean that's

Men: not land.

Mr. AUSTIN. The article reads in part:

The latest socio-poetic draft that Poet MacLeish has produced is Land of the Free, in which he top works his poetry onto the art form of the News-Picture magazine. In this book 88 photographs of United States landscape and people (taken independently of Poet MacLeish, and mostly for the Resettlement Administration) are "illustrated" by a running verse commentary in which Poet MacLeish says his say about a sweet land whose liberty, for many of its inhabitants, went sour.

That was written in 1938.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is the Senator quoting from Time magazine or the literary productions of Mr. MacLeish?

Mr. AUSTIN. From Time magazine of April 25, 1938, in reviewing Mr. MacLeish's book, Land of the Free.

Mr. BARKLEY. Time does not purport to quote from his book, but simply comments on it?

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, yes; it quotes from his book. I have read two quotations from it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I asked the Senator whether he was reading from Time magazine's comment on it or from Mr. MacLeish's book?

Mr. AUSTIN. I was reading from Time magazine, but it pretends to quote. I have answered both questions correctly, I believe.

The point is he made selections for his own book of photographs which would display a country that had gone sour in respect of its liberty for many of its people. The point is that in his editorial comment on these "horrible, piercingly characteristic pictures," as Time speaks of them, he used this sort of language:

We wonder if the liberty is done: . . .

Or if there's something different men can dream

Or if there's something different men can mean by liberty . . .

Or if there's liberty a man can mean that's

Men: not land.

And the other one:

Maybe the liberty we thought we had

Was room to be left to ourselves to have liberty. . . .

Here is a later one. Writing in the magazine Survey Graphic for May 1939, Archibald MacLeish presented the following positive creed of an ardent Democrat, in part, under the title "Liberalism and the Anti-Fascist Front." This purports to be a quotation from his article. If it is not, of course, it will have a different significance here. But I think the quotation from the article written by this gentleman should be read here in order to give evidence that some of the charges made against him are probably not well-founded, and, without my interrupting the reading, I am sure Senators will get the point of my remarks.

I call the Senators' attention to the fact that this was written last month, May 1939. Whether there are events existing now which have cast their shadow before them, I leave to Senators to consider.

Speaking still for myself, I can only say that I do not believe in the negative policy, the defensive policy, the antifascist policy. I believe only in an affirmative policy, an offensive policy, a pro-democratic policy. I believe that American liberalism must refuse to follow the communist lead, that it must refuse to forego its own nature and its own purposes, that it must refuse to identify democracy with the status quo, that it must become not less liberal, less radical, but more liberal, more radical. I believe that American liberalism must become more liberal, not less liberal as the danger in Europe becomes more acute. I believe that American democracy must invent and continually reinvent its democracy; that it must attack, not defend.

Briefly, I believe that American liberalism must accept the full obligation of its decision to defend democracy against fascism. It must ask itself, "What do we mean by democracy?" And it must answer that question. It must answer, "We mean by democracy a society in which the dignity of man is of first importance, a society in which everything else must be subject to, and must support, the dignity of man." In Marxist theory economics comes first—all politics is economics and economic necessity determines political action. In Fascist practice politics comes first, all economics is politics and the political police determine the operation of economic laws. In democratic theory man comes first—both politics and economics are subjected to the advancement of the dignity and decency of man.

What our American liberalism must do in this crisis, and in this crisis more than at any other time, is to apply the definition of democracy to the times and to say how and by what means democracy in these times can be strengthened and made vigorous.

More precisely and more practically, what American liberalism must do in this crisis is to forego the characteristic liberal attitude of critical correction and accept instead the risks of action.

It must put aside the irresponsible self-righteousness with which it sometimes judges the decisions of those charged with the government of the Republic, and accept instead its share of responsibility for that Government.

It must accept responsibility for steps already taken which lead in the direction a dynamic democracy should go—steps like the Tennessee Valley Authority, the Federal arts projects, the techniques developed by the Department of Agriculture for the democratic control of programs of production—and exert its strength to extend those experiments in their own fields and to invent their analogies elsewhere.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Where was what the Senator has just read delivered, and under what circumstances?

Mr. AUSTIN. I understand that it was written and published in the Survey Graphic for May 1939.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator find fault with Mr. MacLeish's definition of "democracy"?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not. I think that in any estimate of this candidate one should be entirely fair about him. If we are to judge whether he is a suitable person to become chief executive of a personnel of 850 men and women, we should consider all phases of his character, and I am presenting what I regard as that which is good as well as that which I would criticize.

I have no doubt that what I have read was written perhaps in the light of events of the current day. Yet I think it is a sincere statement by this man.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I was simply trying to ascertain the viewpoint of the Senator from Vermont in regard to that matter, because this is the first time I have seen the article or heard it read. It is characteristic of the Senator from Vermont to present matters ably, fully, and fairly.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I intend to present also editorials for this candidate as well as editorials against him, if I shall not be wearying the Senate too much by doing so.

My contention will not be that this man is a Communist. My contention is limited to this: That all there is about this man shows him to be a remarkable literary genius, a man with a remarkable style, both poetic style and prose style; that he is undoubtedly an independent, deep thinker and an idealist; and that he has the gift of ideality, which produces ideas. They come springing from him when others might have to dig and dig to formulate them.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I have not quite finished my sentence. I want a "but" in it. That is a famous word. But these qualifications are inadequate, if there is no more about this man than that, to constitute him a suitable librarian for the Library of Congress. That is my point.

I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wonder if the Senator would permit me, in connection with what he read from the May issue of Survey Graphic, to read a paragraph in an article in the February issue of the same magazine which could not have been written under circumstances connected with this appointment.

Mr. AUSTIN. I shall be glad to have the Senator from Kentucky read it in my time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. MacLeish is still talking about democracy and freedom. I shall read only a paragraph or two, because it is in line with what the Senator has said:

The will to defend democracy demands a belief in democracy. And belief in democracy demands that democracy should be a way of life with future and unachieved objectives such as men can continue to desire.

If the democracy to be defended is merely the status quo which the great corporations and the reactionary newspapers call democracy when they shout for its defense, then the belief will be cool and the will feeble.

If, however, the democracy to be defended is a future democracy, a true democracy which will admit the failures of this democracy and set them straight—if the democracy to be defended is a free man's way of dealing with a free man's evils in order to create a free man's world, then the will to defend and protect that democracy will be strong enough to sweep over any challenge. But that kind of will and that kind of belief are not achieved by refusing to permit democracy to be attacked. To refuse to permit democracy to face attack is to turn democracy into the status quo and freeze it in a form in which only a small minority can believe.

Democratic belief in democracy and the popular will to defend it, are achieved only by permitting democracy to face any attack, however slanderous, however murderous, answering the proposals of the attackers with such proposals as a democracy can make. Those who believe in democracy because they believe in the people will have no fear of the outcome. Those who believe in democracy for another reason may very well fear, but their fears will be irrelevant.

I feel sure that the quotation from the earlier article, supplementing the article to which the Senator has referred, will amplify this man's theory of democracy and what it means.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. I wish to keep the RECORD straight. The Senator from Kentucky has pointed out that the article which he read appeared long before there was the slightest indication that Mr. MacLeish would be nominated as Librarian of Congress. It seems to me that would give the impression that the article read by the Senator from Vermont might have appeared after Mr. MacLeish was nominated. Is it not a fact that the article which the Senator from Vermont read was also published before Mr. MacLeish was nominated?

Mr. AUSTIN. I cannot recall the date on which the nomination was made.

Mr. BARKLEY. It was some time in the neighborhood of the 10th or 12th of June.

Mr. AUSTIN. This issue of the Survey Graphic came out in May.

Mr. BARKLEY. It came out in May, and was undoubtedly written before May. Most articles in magazines are written in advance of their publication.

Mr. MALONEY. That is correct. I should like to make the further observation that it has been widely published that the nomination came to Mr. MacLeish as a complete surprise.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no doubt of that. I should judge from his own statement of his character that he is so modest and so understates his own good qualities that he himself would not admit that he was qualified if he were called upon to do so. He certainly would not seek the appointment.

It will be recalled with what freedom he confessed that he did not like work. Time after time in his biography he says he did this thing and that thing in order to avoid work.

Worked terribly hard. Went to Harvard Law School to avoid going to work. Led my class in last year. Worked terribly hard because of the competition, but could never believe in the law.

Of course, I cannot explain what he means by that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I have not quite finished. Let me finish this and preserve the continuity of it. Then I shall be glad to yield:

Taught for a year at Harvard to avoid going to work.

Again he says:

Do hack work in New York when I have to.

I think that pictures the type of man who would not be out hustling for advancement.

I now yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The copy of the article which Mr. MacLeish sent to me does not read exactly the same as the copy which the Senator has read. According to the copy I have, this is what he says with regard to his work at Harvard:

Went to Harvard Law School to avoid going to work.

That is the same. That, of course, is a Pickwickian, facetious way of referring to himself, because nobody could lead his law class at Harvard without doing a considerable amount of work.

Led my class in last year. Began writing but learned little about it and had little life of my own. Went to Harvard Law School to avoid going to work. Led my class in last year. Worked terribly hard because of the competition, but was never really good.

That is the language he uses in the copy I have, instead of the language quoted by the Senator from Vermont. I do not know that it makes much difference. He still deprecates his own ability, notwithstanding the fact that he led his class at the law school.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. All the letters which I have received in criticism—and most of them have been in criticism—are based upon the idea that Mr. MacLeish has not had experience as a librarian, and there the letters stop. Not one attacks his character or intellectual integrity or standing as a man; but there seems to be a view on the part of many that he should have experience as a librarian, just as it might be claimed that a man should have experience as a lawyer before he is admitted to the bar. As I understand, that is really the position which the able Senator from Vermont takes.

Mr. AUSTIN. No; it is not. Unfortunately, I have not made myself clear. The position which I take is better stated than I have stated it in a letter dated June 16, 1939, from Joseph L. Wheeler, librarian of the Enoch Pratt Free Library of Baltimore, Md., to the Baltimore Sun. He says, among other things:

What we need at the Library of Congress is continued competent leadership. The first criticism I heard of the President's appointment, in terms of amazement, was not from a librarian but from a retired professor, a lifetime user of the Congressional Library. No librarian worthy of the name protests Mr. MacLeish's appointment just because he is not a trained librarian, or just because he is a poet. It is because he has not had the experience nor the opportunity to exhibit the qualities of an administrator. Is he to acquire these at the head of the greatest library at the expense of the taxpayer? Too many libraries and their constituents have suffered from similar ill-advised appointments. In one large city only 3 years ago the people arose in disgust and in a public campaign thousands went about the streets bearing the slogan "We want a trained librarian." After all, the public is paying for a competent service.

Mr. BORAH. That states what I have in mind. Perhaps I did not state it clearly.

Mr. AUSTIN. It is not only because he is not trained. Training as a librarian is a good thing for a librarian to have; but if a man came to the Library of Congress with training and experience as an executive in control of the administration of an institution having a large number of employees engaged in various diverse activities requiring supervision, and judgment in handling and controlling a system so that the details of the institution will run smoothly and without collision, he need not have had training as a librarian to satisfy me. As the executive head of the Library of Congress, he would soon acquire the special knowledge and training of a librarian. That is what I mean.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, the Senator has in view that he should have had a vast amount of executive training?

Mr. AUSTIN. He should have sufficient executive training to be able to give some evidence of his capacity as an executive. As nearly as I can find out from my study of Mr. MacLeish, he has had none at all.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. He was an officer during the World War.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes, indeed; but that is wholly different. I cannot conceive of experience as a military officer in the World War qualifying a man to control a large institution such as the Library of Congress.

Mr. MALONEY. I did not offer it in that respect. The Senator said Mr. MacLeish had had no administrative or executive experience.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is what I meant.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in the last analysis, the objections are based really on the contention that he has had no experience in library work.

Mr. AUSTIN. No; I do not think so.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me so, because Mr. MacLeish is a man of character, a man of learning, a man of culture, and he has a fine conception of democracy and of the rights of men. The only thing he seems to lack is that he has not had library training. That appears to be the basis of the objection.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. I should like to say that at the hearings held by the Committee on the Library, at which I was present, the Library Association of America delegated two of their leaders to come before the committee and give testimony against the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. MacLeish. As they appeared there, I addressed this question to the spokesman of that group, "Is the sole objection of your Library Association to the confirmation of this man's nomination based upon the fact that he has not had technical library training?" He said, "Absolutely and solely." I submit that to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. That has seemed to be the only objection that has come to me through correspondence, and so forth. The question that arises is, Must we be confined in our selection to a person who actually has had library training when we find a person who is finely equipped in every other respect? In regard to this matter, it occurred to me that that is the one question involved—whether we must be confined in our selection to men who have had technical training as librarians, although they may be otherwise splendidly equipped.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is not my view; that is not my position. I think the question we are confronted with here is very much broader. We might well approve the appointment of a man who had never had any library experience if we were satisfied that he had education and training and had the characteristics necessary to make him an executive. I have already said, and I repeat for emphasis, that I think such a man would soon acquire the technical skill of a librarian.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. I notice that the qualifications of the gentleman whom Mr. MacLeish is nominated to succeed, were at the time of his appointment much like those of Mr. MacLeish. When he was made Librarian, Dr. Putnam had been graduated from Harvard, attended Columbia Law School in 1883 and 1884, and was admitted to the bar in 1886. He practiced a little law, just as Mr. MacLeish did. Then he went out into another field, as librarian of an institution; came back to Boston and practiced law again, and then became librarian at Boston before coming to the Congressional Library. So his career was parallel to that of Mr. MacLeish, in the beginning, at least.

Mr. AUSTIN. The answer, if one is necessary, to the statement of the learned Senator from Indiana is that Dr. Putnam did have administrative ability and the ability to direct and develop the Library. What have we to show that this nominee possesses any such ability?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is true that Dr. Putnam had had some experience as a librarian in the local library in Boston or somewhere near Boston, in Massachusetts, but he went from the legal profession to that library post. Dr. Putnam practiced law for some 10 or 12 years and went from the legal profession to the smaller library referred to, of which he became librarian. So, if the reasoning of the American Library Association that Mr. MacLeish ought not to be made Librarian because he has not up to now been a librarian is to be followed, the same argument would have prevented Dr. Putnam's appointment to his original library position, because he was a lawyer up to that time and had had no library experience.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, if anybody wants to give weight to that argument, which goes back to a remote degree, I am perfectly willing he should do so. It cannot influence me very much. I cannot see the force of it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. In connection with the reference to Dr. Putnam, one of my correspondents asserted that the Senate had rejected prior to the time of his nomination an appointment made by the then President—in fact, I think one or two nominations—on the ground that the nominee was not a trained librarian. I inquire of the Senator if he has any information to that effect?

Mr. BARKLEY. There was a rejection.

Mr. WALSH. I merely wanted to confirm what a correspondent pointed out to the effect that there was a precedent for rejecting a nomination because the nominee was not a professional librarian.

Mr. BARKLEY. My recollection is that it was not on that ground, because the Senate had previously confirmed other Librarians of Congress who had not been professional librarians. In one instance, as I recall, it confirmed the nomination of an ex-Member of Congress who was appointed by the President as the Librarian but was in no sense a trained librarian.

Mr. WALSH. In what year was Dr. Putnam appointed?

Mr. BARKLEY. He has been Librarian for 40 years, and was appointed in March 1899.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I have a statement here that came with some other letters in regard to the opposition of the appointment of Mr. MacLeish, which goes into the record of the time of which the Senator from Massachusetts speaks. I want to present it when the Senator from Vermont shall have concluded.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I should like to have inserted in the RECORD at this point in my remarks the entire letter from Dr. Wheeler, to which I have referred. I think it is worthy of consideration that he says on the point under discussion:

This unsound appointment will tend to disrupt the organization of a great institution. A librarian's duties are essentially directive and administrative. They include the selection and leadership of a competent staff. They must be based on the vision and experience to see and weigh opportunities.

You suggest that Mr. MacLeish would be surrounded by librarians with technical training. The head of a library like the Congressional must have fundamental qualities to which training is only an addition. On the same count you might say that he is surrounded by scholars upon whom he could call for advice. The Library of Congress is distinguished, among other things, by Dr. Putnam's creation of "chairs" filled not by dilettantes but by scholars, each outstanding in his field. What would such a man as the late J. Franklin Jameson say to serving under a poet and speaker like Archibald MacLeish? Your bracketing of Mr. MacLeish and Sir Anthony Panizzi, because neither had any training or library experience, places the ability and accomplishment of the giant, Sir Anthony, in striking contrast to that of MacLeish. That, indeed, is the ground for complaint at the appointment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the entire letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The entire letter is as follows:

[From the Baltimore Sun of June 16, 1939]

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR—MR. WHEELER, OF THE PRATT, ON MR. MACLEISH'S QUALIFICATIONS FOR LIBRARIAN OF CONGRESS

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN.

SIR: We were astonished at your editorial of June 7, mildly acquiescing in the President's appointment of Archibald MacLeish, poet, as Librarian of Congress, the greatest library in the world. It is well to have a librarian who is "a scholar and a gentleman," but to these assets should be added the administrative ability to direct and develop, as Dr. Putnam's successor, the immense collections and services of an institution that affects every public and college library user in the United States, especially thousands of research workers here and abroad.

This unsound appointment will tend to disrupt the organization of a great institution. A librarian's duties are essentially directive and administrative. They include the selection and leadership of a competent staff. They must be based on the vision and experience to see and weigh opportunities.

You suggest that Mr. MacLeish would be surrounded by librarians with technical training. The head of a library like the Congressional must have fundamental qualities to which training is only an addition. On the same count, you might say that he is surrounded by scholars upon whom he could call for advice. The Library of Congress is distinguished, among other things, by Dr. Putnam's creation of "chairs," filled not by dilettantes but by scholars, each outstanding in his field. What would such a man as the late J. Franklin Jameson say to serving under a poet and speaker like Archibald MacLeish? Your bracketing of Mr. MacLeish with Sir Anthony Panizzi, because neither had any training or library experience, places the ability and accomplishment of the giant, Sir Anthony, in striking contrast to that of MacLeish. That, indeed, is the ground for complaint at the appointment.

In Panizzi's day no one had special training and few any library experience. But we are now in an age of specialization, despite the President's recurrent delusion that almost anyone can undertake to do almost anything. The American Library Association, with due deliberation, recommended a far-visioned and successful educational statesman and leader who could continue Dr. Putnam's remarkable program and not permit it to deteriorate in the hands of an amateur. If the President demurred, he could consider other men who have the qualities of a scholar, administrator, and a gentleman, like the present librarian at Harvard University.

What we need at the Library of Congress is continued competent leadership. The first criticism I heard of the President's appointment, in terms of amazement, was not from a librarian but from a retired professor, a lifetime user of the Congressional. No librarian worthy of the name protests Mr. MacLeish's appointment just because he is not a trained librarian, or just because he is a poet. It is because he has not had the experience nor the opportunity to exhibit the qualities of an administrator. Is he to acquire these at the head of the greatest library at the expense of the taxpayer? Too many libraries and their constituents have suffered from similar ill-advised appointments. In one large city only 3 years ago the people arose in disgust and in a public campaign thousands went about the streets bearing the slogan "We want a trained librarian." After all, the public is paying for a competent service.

JOSEPH L. WHEELER,

Librarian, the Enoch Pratt Free Library.

BALTIMORE, June 14.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I hurry on. Here is an editorial published in the New York Sun of June 10, 1939:

[From the New York Sun of June 10, 1939]

A REAL LIBRARIAN NEEDED

President Roosevelt probably did not realize what he was stirring up when he nominated Archibald MacLeish for Librarian of Congress. The outburst against this choice has been widespread and justified. Mr. MacLeish is a poet, perhaps with the qualifications which attach to his nebulous art. But a poet is not expected to know everything, certainly not to be able to grasp at once what is required in modern librarianship. It would be a shame to have the Library of Congress fall into the wrong hands. It has been on the upgrade for 75 years, ever since Ainsworth R. Spofford, whose whole life was devoted to books and their collection, succeeded Dr. Stephenson as Librarian. Spofford was not a great technical expert. Compared with modern methods his work was rather sloppy. But he prevailed on Congress to buy books and to change the Library, which had been only a service for Members, into a national institution. The great building which was completed in 1897 and has served since as a home for the books which theretofore had been kept in an upper floor of the House of Representatives is Spofford's monument. Herbert Putnam, who succeeded him, had won repute as librarian of the Minneapolis and Boston public libraries, and he spent 40 years in scientifically assembling and adding to the riches which Spofford had begun to pile up.

To break a chain which has lasted since the Civil War in the lives of two men completely devoted to the National Library would be folly. The appointment of Mr. MacLeish is the eccentric favoring of a personal friend of Mr. Roosevelt. The Senate, for the sake of the Library, should reject the nomination. A real librarian is needed for the great collection.

It will be noted that in the editorial there is a reference which, if accurate, would tend to show that Herbert Putnam served also in the library in Minneapolis as well as in Boston before coming to the Library of Congress.

There is an editorial in the Baltimore Sun favoring the nomination to which I desire to refer and ask unanimous consent to have it all printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the editorial may be printed entire in the RECORD.

Mr. AUSTIN. The editorial refers to Mr. Wheeler's letter, and then it says:

Mr. Wheeler's protest would be more convincing had he not included in it this statement: "The head of a library like the Congressional must have fundamental qualities to which training is only an addition." For this very admission lies at the heart of the Sun's approbation of Mr. MacLeish. It lies also at the heart of this paper's long-continued admiration for Mr. Wheeler's work at the Enoch Pratt.

What is, after all, the secret of Mr. Wheeler's outstanding success? Is it his technical competence, the competence that comes with training? Only to a very small extent. The essence of Mr. Wheeler's contribution to the Baltimore library is that he brought curiosity, energy, and especially imagination to his job. It was his imagination which was stirred by the comparative passivity of the library as it existed before he came here. It was the thought that the people of Baltimore were not using the resources they possessed.

His great achievement has grown out of that thought.

And so forth. All of this editorial, I understand, will be inserted in the RECORD, by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Baltimore Sun of June 16, 1939]

ANOTHER POET

On this page today we print an emphatic letter from that useful citizen of Baltimore, Mr. Joseph L. Wheeler, librarian of the Enoch Pratt Free Library. Mr. Wheeler, like the president of the American Library Association and like, also, several other spokesmen for that association of professionals, protests against the nomination of Archibald MacLeish to be Librarian of the Library of Congress and against the assertion by the Sun that the appointment is a good one.

Mr. Wheeler's protest would be more convincing had he not included in this statement: "The head of a library like the Congressional must have fundamental qualities to which training is only an addition." For this very admission lies at the heart of the Sun's approbation of Mr. MacLeish. It lies also at the heart of this paper's long-continued admiration for Mr. Wheeler's work at the Enoch Pratt.

What is, after all, the secret of Mr. Wheeler's outstanding success? Is it his technical competence, the competence that comes with training? Only to a very small extent. The essence of Mr. Wheeler's contribution to the Baltimore library is that he brought curiosity, energy, and especially imagination to his job. It was his imagination which was stirred by the comparative passivity of the library as it existed before he came here. It was the thought that the people of Baltimore were not using the resources they possessed.

His great achievement has grown out of that thought. He went out to make Baltimore conscious of its library. This he did with great gusto. Then, next, he made them conscious of the library's shortcomings and stimulated them to demand better service. He had the wit to see in which directions growth might profitably be stimulated. He built up, for instance, the collection of works having to do with art and music. He persuaded the industrial interests in the town that their ends would be served by a more intensive use of the industrial sections. He brought the general populace to take a greater interest in books other than fiction by instituting that long series of engaging window displays.

There was technical proficiency, of course, in this policy. But what animated it and made it work was the imagination which inspired it and the energy which drove it through. There are hundreds, perhaps thousands, of technically proficient librarians in the country. Only a handful of them are to be mentioned in the same breath with Mr. WHEELER.

The pride in his profession which doubtless stimulated Mr. WHEELER to write his letter of protest to this paper is a useful pride. But only personal modesty could have obscured his understanding of the significance of his own achievement and of the fact that he himself is a poet whose technical proficiency is a secondary consideration.

Mr. AUSTIN. The New York Herald Tribune published, on the 9th of June, an editorial which I ask to insert in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune of June 9, 1939]

A SHOCKING NOMINATION

The more the President's nomination of Archibald MacLeish as Librarian of Congress is considered, the more deplorable it seems. There is no question of Mr. MacLeish's high talents as a poet or the excellent quality of his mind. Nor are his left-wing predilections in politics and economics in any wise pertinent, in our view.

What does matter is his complete lack of training for any library post. Here is an important and valuable profession and a field—incidentally, in which this country leads the world. For two generations it has had its regular training schools, with steadily rising standards. Its outstanding leaders combine with this technical training years of varied experience, the result constituting an equipment comparable with the fusion of learning and practice possessed by the members of any other profession—by a doctor or an engineer, for example, who has ripened in his career.

It seems to be the President's easy notion that Mr. MacLeish can hire these skilled and learned technicians to do his job for him. Such a suggestion seems to us as unsound as it is unfair. To call such a conception shocking seems to us a calm and accurate statement. The outrage hits not only the leaders of the library profession who might have aspired to this post of unique responsibility and opportunity but as well the whole rank and file of library workers who are giving their lives to a precious public service. The affront is disheartening and dismaying.

The attitude of the American Library Association has been scrupulously correct, in our judgment. For a year it has sought to help and advise the President in his search for a successor to Dr. Putnam. Rebuffed at every turn, it in the end sees its requests ignored and its advice flouted. We are at a complete loss to understand either how President Roosevelt could bring himself to make a purely personal appointment to a post of such high distinction and special learning, or how Mr. MacLeish could bring himself to accept a nomination for which he is so completely unequipped.

Mr. AUSTIN. I call attention to the following in the editorial:

What does matter is his complete lack of training for any library post. Here is an important and valuable profession and a field, incidentally, in which this country leads the world. For two generations it has had its regular training schools, with steadily rising standards. Its outstanding leaders combine with this technical training, years of varied experience, the result constituting an equipment comparable with the fusion of learning and practice possessed by the members of any other profession—by a doctor or an engineer, for example, who has ripened in his career.

Mr. President, I would not consciously or voluntarily omit some contributions from the pen of L. W. Buxton, editor of the Boston Herald, who is a native of Vermont, who probably can name more of the mountain peaks of the Green Mountains than can any other living person, and whose editorials I highly respect even when I disagree with them, as I do in this case. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point two editorials from the Boston Herald—one of Thursday, June 8, and one of Saturday, June 10.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorials are as follows:

[From the Boston Herald]

LIBRARIAN MACLEISH

The enthusiasm in Washington when the President named Archibald MacLeish as Librarian of Congress, to succeed Herbert Putnam, will be duplicated here, in New York, and wherever Mr. MacLeish is known. It was said of Herbert Hoover that he selected the ideal man when he named Justice Cardozo to the Supreme Court, and almost as much may be said of the honoring of Mr. MacLeish.

He was first man in his class at the Harvard Law School, and declined an appointment to the faculty. He was one of the most promising young lawyers in Boston when he left one of the leading law firms to give all his time to literature. As an editor of Fortune, a Pulitzer prize winner in poetry, a writer of excellent prose, a man of affairs, an administrator, and, as the President characterized him, "a gentleman and a scholar," he deserves immediate, unanimous, hearty confirmation.

The President will be criticized, perhaps, for his failure to pick a trained librarian. The obvious reply is that far more than technical ability is requisite for the supervision of one of the great libraries of the world. A skilled orthodox librarian could have been found easily enough, but none with the qualifications of Mr. Putnam. The purely professional features of the position can be learned easily by a man of Mr. MacLeish's endowments and experience.

A pleasing personality and a marked aptitude in speech, public and private, should be of great assistance to him in his relations with Members of Congress. The entirely nonpolitical nature of the appointment makes it all the more pleasing.

[From the Boston Herald]

OPPOSITION TO MACLEISH

Neither the organized nor the unorganized opposition to the nomination of Archibald MacLeish as Librarian of Congress seems to have a substantial foundation. The president of the American Library Association, who has sent out telegrams to various associates urging protests to Senators, is presumably disturbed because Mr. MacLeish lacks specialized training as a librarian. That is an understandable attitude. It indicates, however, a narrowness which does not reflect any great credit on the A. L. A.

There is far more to the task of a Librarian of Congress than the carrying out of technical assignments. Congressmen, 531 of them, must be served and appeased. Political pressure must be resisted constantly. Skill in administration, close contact with men of affairs and cooperation from a score of sources, literary and nonliterary, are essential if the high standards of Herbert Putnam are to be maintained. The nonprofessional tasks are perhaps more important than the professional; and we doubt that any schooled librarian could perform them nearly as well as Mr. MacLeish.

Indeed, the noncareer librarians have perhaps made more enduring contributions to library administration and upbuilding than the career men—and the story is the same in American diplomacy. The list of such librarians is most impressive.

The great Justin Winsor lacked technical acquirements. Archibald Carey Coolidge, who did so much to make the Widener Library at Harvard what it is, was not a professional librarian. The new head of the Yale University library, Bernard Knollenberg, has not pursued librarianship as a life career. President McKinley's appointee, John Russell Young, who made great improvements in the Library of Congress, was also lacking in knowledge of the Dewey decimal system and some other subjects taught to students of library schools. The Army Medical Library, unrivaled in the world as a medical library, was the creation of a surgeon named John S. Billings. The greatest law library in the world, the Harvard law library, has never had a professional librarian at its head, and was created by professors.

Herbert Putnam himself was primarily a lawyer. He began his notable career at the Boston Public Library and continued it at Washington after he had interrupted his western library activities by a bar career of a few years. Edmund Gosse, librarian of the House of Lords, and Sir Frederick Kenyon, of the British Museum, a famous repository of books, would fail, with those famous Americans, in the narrow test which apparently the head of the American Library Association would apply.

The MacLeish choice seems to us not only good but brilliant. There is probably not a trained librarian in the United States who has his manifold qualifications for a distinguished career as head of the great institution. Men and women entirely familiar with the more or less mechanical aspects of library administration are to be had by the score. Many of them are on the staff of Mr. Putnam and will be available for his successor.

Mr. AUSTIN. In one of these editorials this point made by the Senator from Idaho is referred to, namely:

The President will be criticized, perhaps, for his failure to pick a trained librarian. The obvious reply is that far more than technical ability is requisite for the supervision of one of the great libraries of the world. A skilled orthodox librarian could have been found easily enough, but none with the qualifications of Mr. Putnam. The purely professional features of the position can be learned easily by a man of Mr. MacLeish's endowments and experience.

A pleasing personality and a marked aptitude in speech, public and private, should be of great assistance to him in his relations with Members of Congress. The entirely nonpolitical nature of the appointment makes it all the more pleasing.

I think I shall not take the time of the Senate to read from the other editorial, entitled "Opposition to MacLeish," which will be inserted in the Record by unanimous consent already obtained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been so ordered.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have received from librarians in many parts of the United States, and particularly from many libraries in my own State of Vermont, protests which I think do have the color of being limited to that one point—that confirmation should be denied this appointment because it has the effect of discouraging the sturdy development in the United States of a profession in which special skill is aimed at, in which certain ideals are sought with reference to the management of great collections of literature, not only their preservation but facilitating access to them by the people; collections so administered and managed that they will contribute to the welfare of a great community, organized and directed by a man having the character and the directive ability requisite to keep going all of the different activities which are centered within the walls of a great library, such as the Library of Congress, and have them going in such a way that they will be readily accessible to anyone who may seek its facilities. If I am engaged in a lawsuit before the Supreme Court of the United States to determine the boundary line between two of the States of the Union, I want to be able to have access promptly, easily, without red tape, without obstruction to ancient maps and documents, the old records of the Federal Government, and the collection of records of the various States. I may even want to have access to records relating to the mother country in order to be able to serve the people of my own State far away.

We want for Librarian a man who is able to organize and to keep in operation an institution which of itself is an institution of learning. It is the schoolhouse of the whole continent. The Library of Congress is the Mecca of persons who come here not merely to acquire formal culture but to obtain information for practical use. They may desire it for so humble a use as raising potatoes, or they may come here to secure information for designing some new and useful improvement of great service and utility.

Therefore, so far as I am concerned, I want it understood that I would encourage the development of the profession of librarian, and I would not discourage it by going outside of the family of librarians—which is a very large family—to make a selection for one of the choicest and most important posts within our reach. I think of us as parties to the transaction. We have an interest in this nomination, not solely because under the Constitution and under the statutes we are required to advise and consent to this nomination but we are interested because this is particularly, primarily, and foremost the Library of the Congress. This is our Library, and we want it led by a man who will make it of the greatest utility to us as servants of all the people of the country. But, as I have said, giving due weight to the complaint made by librarians all over the United States, and particularly from my own home State; giving due weight to their claim that the nomination fails to recognize the efforts of a half century of development of a profession and that it is a discouragement to those who have sought to elevate this profession and to place it in a position of greater service to the country, far beyond that is my contention that in this particular case there is no evidence whatever which tends to show that this brilliant littérateur and poet has any qualifications at all for an executive, for an administrator, or for a librarian.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I rise to speak in favor of the confirmation of the nomination of Archibald MacLeish to be the Librarian of Congress.

I am a member of the Senate Committee on the Library. Like my fellow Senators, I have received many communications from librarians and trustees of libraries in my State of New Hampshire. Each of these communications came to me requesting or demanding that I refuse to sanction this confirmation. The sole reason given was that to which I referred a few minutes ago in interrupting the Senator from Vermont, when I quoted the first speaker of two who came before the Senate Committee on the Library as representatives of the Library Association of America, and who said in answer to my question that "the only possible objection we have against Mr. MacLeish is the fact that he has had no technical library training." Opinion is unanimous on that score, and solely on that score, from those whose communications have come to me in opposition to this appointment.

I attended the hearings before the committee. It is not my privilege to have talked to Mr. MacLeish. I have read his writings. I have gone into the matter very thoroughly. I have tried to put myself in the position of a jurymen, to listen to all the evidence and then to act wisely, refusing to take any position in answer to correspondence until today. I now say, sir, that I consider it both a duty and a privilege not only to vote for the nominee's confirmation, but to speak for him on the floor of this honorable body.

I have a reason for the faith that is within me; and I shall buttress my argument by evidence, by testimony of men far better qualified to speak than I.

If the Senate will bear with me, I shall read into the RECORD some of these gentlemen's names and communications.

The first is a gentleman whose name is known throughout the business world of this country as successful, not only as businessman but as a philanthropist, one of the great American citizens of our day. I refer to Louis Kirstein, of the firm of William Filene's Sons Co. Louis Kirstein has been not only one of the most successful businessmen of our country, but is a philanthropist; a man who loves libraries and library work, and sees beyond the circumstances and surroundings of the present the fact that the people of this country should have the privileges he did not enjoy as a boy. To that end he gave a great library to the people of Boston, and equipped it "lock, stock, and barrel," filling it with books by the greatest masters in the world. He writes me as follows:

With respect to Archibald MacLeish, I want to repeat I am confident that the charge he is a Communist is just silly.

As to his not being an experienced librarian would say, it seems to me, from the experience I have had, that the position of head of the Congressional Library, which is probably one of the very greatest libraries in the world, requires something more than a librarian with only a technical knowledge. It seems to me it needs an administrator and executive of high ability, which Mr. MacLeish certainly is. My own opinion is that Mr. Putnam has done a wonderful job in gathering this marvelous collection at the Library, but I think now that it is important that this be generally known and much more use made of it than is being made by people who make frequent use of the Library. I am reliably informed that, in addition to serving Congress and the Government, its use is confined pretty much to advance scholars. It has so much that millions of people are interested in that I want to repeat that I believe it requires someone who has vision and imagination coupled with the necessary energy and viewpoint to apply it.

I am sorry to bother you with so long a communication, but I am convinced that Mr. MacLeish is the outstanding man for this position.

I now read a letter from the assistant librarian of Dartmouth College, Alexander Laing, in which he says to me:

The position of Librarian of Congress calls for the broadest and most humane philosophical interpretation of all the rights of all the public to the use of knowledge as it is accumulated in books. The most excellent technical administrator may be less than competent in our current world, which has witnessed burnings of books at the doors of some of the world's greatest libraries. I believe, therefore, that the new Librarian of Congress should be a man capable of social and political action, to safeguard at every point the right of the American people and of their representatives to free access to all knowledge on all subjects. I am not competent to say whether Mr. MacLeish is an ideal choice from that point of view, but he certainly is a better choice than any professional librarian I know of whose age might make him a logical competitor.

Sincerely yours,

ALEXANDER LAING.

I also wish to read a letter from a distinguished citizen of my State of New Hampshire, a member of the State senate, former professor at Harvard, in which he says, under date of June 20:

MY DEAR SENATOR TOBEY: I have received from the New Hampshire Library Association a request that I write you in opposition to the confirming of Archibald MacLeish as Librarian of the Library of Congress.

In this case I wish personally to urge you to take action exactly opposite to that requested by the Library Association. You will no doubt receive scores of letters opposing the appointment, as a result of the campaign by the association. I have no doubt that you will know how to discount the numerical importance of letters which result from such a campaign, and that you will realize that those who are on the other side are not organized and not making any concerted drive, but that they may be fully as numerous, although you may not hear from as many of them.

I am strongly of the opinion that this is an excellent appointment. There are plenty of trained librarians who can be hired to do all the varied kinds of technical work which the Library requires. No doubt the Library is already provided with a staff of such trained personnel which could be added to as needed. What is needed at the head of an institution such as the Library of Congress is a man of broad vision who will consider and initiate policies which are not matters of technical librarianship and which can be carried out by the technical people under him. I fully believe that Mr. MacLeish is such a man.

I wish now to read the testimony of the director of the library of the great University of Chicago. I think this is a classic. It speaks volumes. He says:

To the Senate Committee on the Library:

The President has nominated Archibald MacLeish for the Librarianship of Congress. Protest is lodged on the score of communistic leanings and by two officials of the American Library Association on the score of professional unfitness. Neither charge will stand examination.

Chicago has known the Scotch MacLeishs long and favorably. The father of the nominee, Andrew MacLeish, was a successful merchant and wise philanthropist. The mother, former president of Rockford College, is still a beloved figure of amazing energy. There is certainly no communism in the forebears, and there is equally none in the son. You will search in vain for one syllable in his writings or activities to support such an indictment. To be sure he is not content with things as they are. The human wreckage about us deeply moves him. To this he gives powerful expression, but, as he has written, he remains convinced "that democracy can be saved and that the American way is the best way out."

I, CHARLES TOBEY, of New Hampshire, join in that statement. Archibald MacLeish, as I interpret him, is a man after my heart. He realizes down deep in his consciousness what constitute the great objectives of this country; not the victories of government; something more than business success or a system of business economics. What are they, in the last analysis? MacLeish sees, with me, that they are men, women, and children, 120,000,000 people of this country, those whom he is serving in his life work, and those whom he will serve as Librarian of Congress. I say to this man's critics, to the library associations of the country, if that be treason, make the most of it. This letter continues:

The other charge is more serious. The president and the secretary of the American Library Association, without awaiting action by the council, which alone has the constitutional power of formulating the association's policy, have launched a holy war against confirmation and bulletined all executives to swell the protest. MacLeish, they say, is not trained for the position.

They are right in asserting the necessity of training. The question is, What training is best?

Well, in the first place, this is the Library of the Nation's law-making body and MacLeish is a lawyer, as was the present incumbent. It is a little more important that the Librarian know the inside of books he is dispensing than the outside. The chemists of a laboratory will be better served by a fellow chemist in the library than by a mere business manager or housekeeper. MacLeish knows his law. Justice Frankfurter could tell you something about MacLeish, as Justice Holmes could have done before him, for in his graduating class 20 years ago at the Harvard Law School he was ranked highest for "scholarship, conduct, and character."

He has been a notably successful practitioner, but, more important still, his study has sunk deeper than the memorizing of decisions. To him law is a social science and its business is justice. In all liberating legislation Congress would find MacLeish an understanding servant.

But the Library of Congress is far more than a law library. It has become the National Library. MacLeish is equally at home in the arts. No one will deny his rank as one of the four leading American poets now alive, and, what is more, he has made it pay without sacrificing his art a whit. He is at home in the literature of his time, whether at home or abroad, for he has resided in France and spent considerable time in South America. He knows what is going on and is a vigorous part of it.

No; Archibald MacLeish will adorn the place, and it is safe to say that Congress will have reason to read his official reports with avidity. Certain it is that his staff will love him dearly and swear by him because he is all loyalty and valor—a shining figure for all his modesty.

The two critics talk of the big staff at the Library of Congress and MacLeish's unfitness for such association. Let's examine that a moment. The last printed report of the Librarian of Congress shows 3 administrative officers and 34 heads of divisions and chief assistants. Of these 37 persons who run the National Library, just 3 went through a library school and 19 are not even members of the American Library Association. The present incumbent of the office seems to operate on a different theory from that of the two critics. People are appointed for their knowledge, and so it would appear that MacLeish would not be so lonesome in Washington after all.

This is not a condemnation of library schools. They are highly useful up to a certain level. Thereafter come university training or its equivalent—experience and horse sense. Thus, when asked to advise the trustees of the Enoch Pratt Free Library, Baltimore's public library, I gave them the names of three college men with library-school degrees. When, however, advising the president of the Johns Hopkins University in the same city, I gave the name of a faculty member. Both counsels were accepted and the outcome has in each case been most happy. Again I chose a professor for the associate director of the University of Chicago libraries, and got roundly denounced by the schoolmen. Yet this year they nominate him for the second vice president of the American Library Association. I am equally sure of my counsel to this committee.

The twin critics are nervous, too, about his management of money. MacLeish the Scotsman! They are wasting their worries. He has managed his own affairs magnificently, proved a capital editor, and a highly competent curator at Harvard. No organization that has ever had his services has willingly parted with them.

This is not the old abuse to which the two critics refer—favoritism or pension. No political debt is being paid or sinecure found for a spent preacher or teacher. Here is a man in the peak of his power thoroughly at home in a great library, clear-headed and brilliant. The fact is that MacLeish will have come to his place after severer training than his two critics have ever known.

Earlier in the year they lectured Yale University for choosing a scholar as librarian. They now repeat the lecture to the President of the United States. Both can stand it.

MacLeish did not seek the place. He was besought. Can his two critics say as much? Not if the persistent rumor of years mean anything.

The Senate will do itself honor by voting for confirmation with unanimity. The prestige of the Library of Congress will be safe in the hands of Archibald MacLeish.

Mr. President, I digress here to bring up a subject to which I do not like to make reference, but certain matter has been sent around to the Members of the Senate charging that the man MacLeish is a Communist, or on the edges of the Communist circle, or playing with Communists. If it is in order, so long as we are talking about Communists, and in view of statements made on the floor of the Senate yesterday, in passing, though not in connection with this nominee, I wish to read a definition of communism, a definition given us many years ago by a great Democrat, a great American, Grover Cleveland. This is his definition of communism. Keep it in your hearts, if you have it in your hearts lightly to condemn any man because of such charges. This is how Grover Cleveland defined communism:

Communism is a hateful thing, and a menace to peace and organized government. But the communism of combined wealth and capital, the outgrowth of overweening cupidity and selfishness, which insidiously undermines the justice and integrity of free institutions is not less dangerous than the communism of oppressed poverty and toil which, exasperated by injustice and discontent, attacks with wild disorder the citadel of rule.

Mr. President, let us now return to the charge of communism made against this man. It is charged that Mr. MacLeish some time ago wrote an article which contains the statement that the time has come for poets in America to sing of revolution.

Mr. President, I do not take exception to that statement. Let us have poets who sing of revolution. We are in a state of evolution and revolution all the time, and have been all down through the ages. I hold in my hand that great document which still finds expression in the hearts of all true Americans, the Declaration of Independence, and in the preamble we find language such as poets may use when they sing of revolution. Thomas Jefferson and other great patriotic Americans had a hand in writing it. Here is what Jefferson and his collaborators said about revolution:

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed. That whenever a form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new government. * * *

Mr. President, some may perhaps call that language revolutionary, but that is the language used by Thomas Jefferson, and that is Americanism. That language sets forth the acid test of democracy's ability to govern itself, which is the test of democracy's permanence.

Now again about communism. Mr. MacLeish signed with others an invitation a few months ago inviting people to an American Writers' Congress in the city of New York. He wrote an article which the magazine, The New Masses, a Communist paper, published. To me that article shows forth the man. He is defending the sending of ambulances to aid the loyalists in Spain. He is defending the statement he made with respect to those engaged in the war in Spain. He said:

The word "liberal" is still a word to use with pride. Issues of freedom and truth are more important to the liberal mind than being seen in the right company.

He further said in the same article:

The further truth is that the man who refuses to defend his convictions for fear he may defend them in the wrong company has no convictions.

Mr. President, this man is a straight-shooter, if I know one. He rings true. He is the kind of man I want to see placed in authority, a man fit to occupy the position as Librarian of Congress.

Mr. President, we talk about technical training, but we find situations in Government and in private business which are somewhat on all fours with the one before us. In the appointment of the Secretary of the Navy we did not take a commander from a gunboat or a battleship. We took a man named Swanson and made him Secretary of the Navy.

When we put in Harry Woodring as Secretary of War we did not choose him because he was a military expert, an expert in gunnery or in aircraft defense. He was not chosen because he had a special knowledge of the job he was picked to occupy. He was placed in charge of the War Department because he had character and ability requisite in a Cabinet member.

When the President makes a choice of a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission he does not try to find a man who has had long experience in railroad operation, a technical engineer. He chooses a man who has ability and who will faithfully perform his duties of regulating the railroads of the country pro bono publico.

When the General Electric Co. wanted a head for that great industrial organization it did not pick a technical engineer who had special knowledge of turbines and electrical apparatus. It picked Owen D. Young, a man with no engineering training, but a man of outstanding ability as a lawyer and of great personal charm and high character.

So I could go right down the line, Mr. President, and cite any number of cases of similar character.

In conclusion I submit that we should place the emphasis upon research and scholarship rather than on technical training as a librarian.

In my judgment, after an honest, careful looking into the matter, and a survey of all the evidence, I am convinced that Archibald MacLeish is well qualified for the office, and I make bold to say that the Senate will honor itself today if it will confirm his nomination to be Librarian of Congress.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not think it necessary that anything further be added to this discussion, but as chairman of the Committee on the Library I have in some sense been the victim of this opposition or borne the brunt of it in the sense that I have probably received more letters from people in the United States about it than anyone else here, simply because I happened to be the chairman of the committee.

Mr. President, I wish to say just a few words that might be regarded as personal to Mr. MacLeish. I never knew him until he came down here at the invitation of the committee in order that the committee might look him over and examine him, size him up, and decide for itself whether he fitted into the position of Librarian of Congress.

I think it is true that without exception Mr. MacLeish made a very favorable impression on all the members of the committee, without regard to their politics. I will say that in the performance of the duties of the members of the Committee on the Library, there has never been any political division. I do not recall at any meeting of that committee since I have been a member of it, or chairman of it, when partisanship entered into it, or when any vote was based upon whether a man was a Democrat or a Republican.

Mr. MacLeish is 47 years of age. He was born in Illinois, and his family, evidently, were well-known and highly respected people in and around Chicago. He went to Yale University, graduating with high honors. Then he went to the Harvard Law School, and graduated at the head of his class. Soon after we entered the World War, Mr. MacLeish, although he was married and had a baby 1 month of age, enlisted in the Ambulance Corps. I think he refers to himself rather facetiously when he says in his own autobiography, or the article which he wrote for this book, that he joined the Ambulance Corps in order not to get hurt. He was really comparing himself with his brother, who joined the Air Corps, and who was killed in combat on the front either in Belgium or France during that war.

Mr. MacLeish voluntarily had himself transferred from the Ambulance Corps to the Field Artillery in France, and as a member of the Field Artillery he was engaged on the front during June and July 1918, and rose to the rank of captain of the company of Field Artillery.

He came back and went on a farm in Connecticut. He began to write. He wrote for magazines, such as the New Republic and the Nation. I think it is to be assumed—and I have always so understood—that anyone who would be invited to contribute as an editor to the New Republic and the Nation would of necessity be a man of liberal inclinations and proclivities.

I have for a long time been a reader of those two magazines, and I like to read them because whether I agree with them or not, they certainly stimulate thought. They are original in some respects in that regard, and occupy a field that is not full by any means.

Mr. MacLeish desired to be a writer. After graduating at the head of his class in the Harvard Law School he practiced law in Boston for 3 or 4 years as a member of the firm of which Mr. Charles Choate is a member. The information I have received was that he was a successful trial lawyer; that he separated himself from that firm voluntarily in order that he might write, that he might devote himself to literature, which he evidently preferred to the law. But the information that has come to me reliably is that that firm would accept him back now as a member of it if he were available. That shows that he was not only an able lawyer but a successful trial lawyer. Of course, that experience, as we all know, gives a man a broad background. It brings him in close touch with human nature and human problems.

Mr. MacLeish became a contributing editor or associate editor of Fortune magazine, and he wrote some very able and brilliant articles as contributing or associate editor of Fortune. As has been demonstrated here today, his articles in the Survey Graphic, both for May and February, which have been referred to, show that he is a man of exceptional ability in the facility of expressing ideas. He has a facile pen. He has a sort of originality and freshness of expression of his ideas.

There has been an effort to make light of Mr. MacLeish because he is a poet, but he is much more than a poet. James Russell Lowell was a poet, but he was not such a poet as disqualified him to be Ambassador, as I recall, of the United States to the Court of St. James. One of the most brilliant men who ever sat in the Senate was a man from the State of Kansas, John J. Ingalls, and I believe one of the greatest poems in the English language is the poem of John J. Ingalls entitled "Opportunity." I do not subscribe altogether to the philosophy of that poem, but it is a great poem and will live in the English language.

So, Mr. President, from the standpoint of character, background, experience, scholarship, vision, and understanding of our great problems in this complex, modern day in which we live, I believe Mr. MacLeish possesses all the qualifications that are needed for Librarian of Congress.

Mr. President, I have received from members of the American Library Association perhaps a thousand letters and telegrams protesting against this nomination. Not one of them attacks the character, or even the views of Mr. MacLeish on political, social, or economic problems. Not one of them attacks his eminent scholarship. As the Senator from New Hampshire stated a while ago, when a former president of the American Library Association, together with one of the executive committee who happens to be the librarian of the free public library in the city of Louisville, in my State, came here to protest against this nomination before the Committee on the Library, before any member of the committee had asked either of them a question they volunteered the statement that they did not wish to be understood as attacking or impugning or in any way reflecting upon the character, ability, or scholarship of Mr. MacLeish, but that they opposed him solely on the ground that he had not been a trained librarian. All the letters and telegrams which I, as chairman of the committee, have received in opposition to Mr. MacLeish are based upon the fact that he is not one of them, in the sense that he is not a trained librarian.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Did the Senator receive from my colleague in the House of Representatives, the Honorable CHARLES A. PLUMLEY, a letter dated June 20 relating to this appointment?

Mr. BARKLEY. I have not seen such a letter. It may be at my office. The Senator knows how busy we have all been. I did not have an opportunity to read all my mail. I have not seen the letter.

Mr. AUSTIN. The reason I interrupt at this time is that if the Senator is willing to have it done I should like to have the letter inserted in the RECORD following his remarks.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Vermont is granted, and the letter will be inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. BARKLEY. I can very well understand the attitude of the American Library Association, because they desired a member of their organization to be appointed Librarian of Congress. They presented to the President the name of the secretary of the American Library Association, who is not now a librarian, and who for many years has been the secretary of the American Library Association. According to the testimony of the two members of that association who came before the committee, he has been a trained librarian, but for a number of years has occupied the position of secretary of the American Library Association.

Mr. President, I think that the American Library Association was and is justified in promoting its organization; and in the case of the librarian in the ordinary technical library in the ordinary city serving a limited clientele, in many cases with two or three or half a dozen assistants, being able to decide what new books ought to go to the library, how they ought to be cataloged and scheduled, in order to give information to those who inquire about books, I can very well understand the advantages of some training in the profession of librarian. I can very well understand the feeling of disappointment, if not of resentment, among the members of that organization when the President went outside their number to select the Librarian of the greatest library in the United States, the Library of Congress.

I would not intimate, because I do not think, that their disappointment or resentment was intensified in any degree because they did not succeed in persuading the President that he ought to appoint their secretary as Librarian of the Library of Congress. As I stated the other day, I myself had a candidate for Librarian of Congress. He is a member of the American Library Association. He is a distinguished scholar. He has had many years' experience as a librarian. He knows books and he knows how to run a library. The President did not see fit to appoint him; and I suppose by the same token I ought to oppose this nomination because my candidate was not successful.

Inasmuch as I do not take that narrow viewpoint, I shall not attribute to the American Library Association any such narrow viewpoint in the intensity of their opposition to this nomination. I place their opposition on the ground on which I think they place it, purely as a professional matter, in that Mr. MacLeish is not qualified, in their judgment, to be Librarian of Congress, because he is not a technical librarian.

Mr. President, all the letters I have received, even from members of the American Library Association, have not been in opposition to this nomination. In that connection I have before me a communication from Mr. Milton James Ferguson, president of the American Library Association, at present librarian at the Brooklyn Public Library in Brooklyn, N. Y., with which he submits to me and to the committee and the Senate a memorandum in opposition to the nomination. The memorandum is along the line of that read by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin], and I shall not take the time to read it. However, in justice to this organization I ask that the memorandum be included as a part of my remarks and inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the memorandum will be placed in the RECORD at this point.

The memorandum is as follows:

THE LIBRARIAN OF CONGRESS

The American Library Association urges the Senate not to confirm the appointment of Archibald MacLeish as Librarian of Congress, because he lacks the essential qualifications of a librarian.

His ability and distinction as a man of letters are unquestioned. (We are not concerned with his politics.) But librarianship is not a literary pursuit. Writing is not of itself a suitable preparation for it.

Librarians, library trustees, and other citizen groups have worked for almost three-quarters of a century for the extension and improvement of libraries, with such success that the United States holds undisputed world leadership in library service. A primary reason for that success has been the emphasis on trained and experienced library administrators.

A hundred years ago every important library post was filled by somebody's political or personal choice. Now nearly all are filled by men and women who have prepared themselves for that vocation. The appointment of a nonprofessional as head of the Library of Congress would endanger the merit system of appointment to all library positions, carefully built up during three generations.

Mr. MacLeish could not qualify for the librarianship of any college or public library in America which attempts to maintain professional standards—as most do. He most certainly is not qualified to be the librarian of the largest and most important library in the world.

The administration of the Library of Congress is not a simple task which can be learned quickly. It is complex and highly professional.

It involves personnel administration. The Librarian is solely responsible for selection, appointment, training on the job, promotion, and discharge. The staff numbers 850 people. Many appointments are made each year.

It involves financial administration of yearly expenditures of $3,000,000.

It involves general library administration in all its aspects. The Library of Congress is the head and center of the library system of America. Its first duty is to the Congress and other officers of the Government. But its varied services are also indispensable to scholars, special investigators, writers, the blind, universities, and all other libraries in every State and Territory.

These services do not organize and run themselves. They must be continuously adjusted to educational and social changes. They are best operated, improved, and extended under the direction of a man who understands how and why they are performed. They would almost certainly deteriorate under amateur leadership. Those who use the Library would suffer.

The appointment of a man as a figurehead would do no honor to the appointee. It would, however, be a denial of the value of professional training and experience.

If any Senator thinks that the American Library Association may not fully represent all library opinion, he is respectfully urged to solicit the opinions of librarians and members of library boards in his own State.

The Congress and the people are proud of the Library of Congress. They should have as Librarian of that institution one who is not only a gentleman and a scholar but who is also the ablest library administrator available.

JUNE 12, 1939.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to say that I do not agree with the position taken by the American Library Association. A perusal of the memorandum will show that their sole position is based upon his lack of experience as a trained librarian.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The memorandum from Mr. Ferguson to which the Senator refers suggests that if any Senator wishes to explore the subject further he should consult the librarian in his own city. I thought that was a good idea. The librarian in my home city, Grand Rapids, Mich., happens to be a peculiarly able person, one who also is particularly detached professionally. He has no relations whatever with politics or anything of the nature. I should say he is one of the great librarians of the Nation. So I telegraphed him and asked him what he would do if he were confronted with the MacLeish nomination. If the Senator will permit me I should like to read a few sentences from his reply.

Mr. BARKLEY. I shall be glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The letter is from Mr. Samuel H. Ranck, librarian at Grand Rapids. He says:

With my present knowledge, therefore, I cannot agree with the position taken by Mr. Ferguson. I think the Senate should carefully examine Mr. MacLeish's abilities for leadership and general administration.

Then Mr. Ranck expresses his own professional disappointment that the selection was not that of a trained professional librarian, but he adds:

I could cite a considerable number of instances where men of scholarly interests or pursuits became librarians and made most valuable contributions to the library profession. The whole thing depends on the character of the man and his outlook on life.

He refuses, then, to commit himself, but the entire tenor of his letter, if I have any right to interpret it, is that he would not be satisfied to dismiss Mr. MacLeish solely because he lacks the credentials of a professional librarian. On the contrary, I should say that, although he would prefer someone else, he declines to join in the protests against him.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the Senator's interrupting me for that purpose, and I congratulate the librarian to whom he telegraphed for his frankness and candor under the circumstances.

Mr. President, in order to be entirely fair to the American Library Association, I ask also to have printed in the RECORD at this point a telegram sent from San Francisco where the American Library Association was in session on June 20, addressed to H. M. Lydenberg and H. F. Brigham, who appeared before the Library Committee on this nomination; and also a statement issued by Mr. Harold F. Brigham, of Louisville, the head of the Free Public Library there, along the same line.

There being no objection, the telegram and statement were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF., June 20, 1939.

H. M. LYDENBERG,

H. F. BRIGHAM:

The June 12 printed statement, also sent under date of June 11, with personal letter to members of Senate Library Committee, now has formal approval of executive board by unanimous vote, and of council with vote of 56 for to 4 against, and of association in general session with estimated vote of about 2,000 for and possibly as many as 200 against. From sentiments here expressed we believe that fully 90 percent of all members of the library profession think that confirmation would be most unfortunate. They are concerned with the probable detrimental effect on the service of the Library of Congress to its readers. They are even more concerned with its inevitable effect on all other libraries because of the implication that special training and experience are not necessary for successful administration of libraries large and small. It is evident here that confirmation would have a most disastrous effect on the morale of the younger members of the profession who feel that it is futile to prepare for librarianship if special training and experience are to be disregarded in filling the most important library posts. Petitions protesting confirmation were signed by 1,425 members on this first day of conference. Signers are from all States, District of Columbia, and Hawaii, except Delaware, Maine, Nevada, both Dakotas, Vermont, and West Virginia. If it were not for the presence here of many library leaders the committee room would be crowded with protesting librarians.

Charles H. Compton, St. Louis; Forrest Spaulding, Des Moines; Carl Vitz, Minneapolis; Joseph L. Wheeler, Baltimore; Ralph Munn, Pittsburgh; Althea Warren, Los Angeles; Judson T. Jennings, Seattle; Harriet Long, Salem, Oreg.; A. F. Kuhlman, Nashville; Milton J. Ferguson, Brooklyn.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS APPOINTMENT—STATEMENT BY HAROLD F. BRIGHAM, LOUISVILLE, REPRESENTATIVE OF AMERICAN LIBRARY ASSOCIATION

The agitation against confirmation of Archibald MacLeish is in no way directed against the President's nominee personally, nor does it imply disrespect for the President. It is undertaken solely in the best interests of our National Library and of library service generally as this is affected and influenced by our National Library. It assumes that the President has been ill-advised in selecting his nominee.

The appointment of a nonlibrarian to the Nation's foremost library position is held to be without justification for four essential reasons:

(1) Administration of a great library demands a person qualified by library experience and special knowledge of library service and practices to manage and direct such a library. An amateur would still be an amateur even after years of groping in an effort to learn the job by experience alone.

(2) The unique position of leadership occupied by the Library of Congress in the field of library service, both nationally and internationally, demands the appointment of a head librarian who can maintain the Library's position of leadership without backward step and without loss of the position achieved through distinguished leadership over many years.

(3) The appointment of a nonlibrarian to this particular position can be considered in no other light than as an overt, unfriendly, and prejudicial act by an entire profession of some 30,000 librarians of the country, not to mention the many additional thousands of library trustees, educators, and friends of libraries, who have done so much in the past generation to establish the present-day high standards of library personnel and service.

(4) The appointment of a nonlibrarian to the Nation's foremost library position is sure to be demoralizing in its influence on library appointments and library service over the country as a whole, encouraging a reversion to the old sentimental and political appointments to library positions, and a denial of the things that have made the very foundations of modern library progress.

For these reasons it is earnestly hoped that the Senate of the United States will not confirm the appointment as Librarian of Congress of anyone but a thoroughly qualified and experienced librarian of demonstrated ability as a library administrator.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have a letter which I received from a member of the American Library Association, which, I think, in terms much more convincing than anything I might say, presents the situation with respect to this nomination. The letter is addressed to the Committee on the Library of the United States Senate. It reads as follows:

I am sorry that the American Library Association is opposed to the appointment of Archibald MacLeish as Librarian of Congress. As a life member of the A. L. A., I do not share its disappointment. There are exceptions to all rules, and a professional class which owes as much as it does to outsiders like Dante Alighieri, William Shakespeare, Thomas Jefferson, Andrew Carnegie, James Lennox, A. E. Newton, Henry Huntington, J. P. Morgan, et al., ought to welcome a distinguished "fellow traveler" along the bibliophilic road, whether or not he has had training or experience in library administration or economy.

The Library of Congress is not a small public or college library. It is a congeries of libraries with administrators and technical experts in many fields. In a real sense, it is a national university and, in fact, it has a number of chairs in science and the humanities, and more will develop as time goes on. Very few of the heads of its departments or divisions had library schooling or training other than that received in the Library of Congress itself. Herbert Putnam entered the library profession from the law without previous library training or experience and has made a notable success.

It is entirely proper that this or that public or college library should have trained librarians as their heads, for they must know every detail of their libraries and often instruct their staffs in their duties. Not so with the National Library or with the few great public and university libraries, the direction of which is comparable to a university itself. In such institutions and particularly in the largest of them all, the Library of Congress, it is far more important to have as director a man of judgment in selecting men, of vision in inspiring them to do their best, with a talent for expression, and with a love for books than a mere technician trained in the classification of knowledge and the rules of cataloging books, or even a mere library administrator.

As a man of the world, a proved executive, not only a poet but a writer of note, and, above all, a lover of mankind, Mr. MacLeish will carry on gloriously the work of his predecessor, who has so ably distinguished the Library of Congress and the profession.

I have here, Mr. President, scores of letters from librarians all over the United States, endorsing the nomination of Mr. MacLeish, though not so many as have been sent me by members of the American Library Association, inspired by a telegram or letter from the secretary of that organization asking its members to telegraph their protests, for I have in my files one letter from a librarian in a Midwestern State, copying the letter sent to him by the secretary of the American Library Association, asking him to write to me or to telegraph me and protest against this nomination.

I do not state that all these 1,400 librarians would not have written me anyway; it may be that all of them would have done so; but it so happens that the secretary of the organization did ask them to write, and it so happens that in San Francisco, when they were in session, the secretary of the association circulated petitions or had them circulated to be signed by the members who were in attendance. I have here the petition signed by several hundred members of the American Library Association who were in attendance, I presume, at the convention at San Francisco only a few days ago. They had a perfect right to do that, and I do not criticize them for doing it, but I say that it is not to be dismissed as a mere circumstance, and we have a right to consider the circumstances in determining the weight to be given the protest.

Mr. President, I believe that there is no greater man in the field of library accomplishments and attainments than Dr. Herbert Putnam, who for 40 years has been the head of the Congressional Library. Congress passed an act providing for his retirement as Librarian Emeritus in honor of his great work and his constructive administration of the Library of Congress.

I believe that Mr. MacLeish will be a worthy successor to Dr. Putnam. Not only does he know books, not only does he know their contents, not only is he widely read in history, in philosophy, in poetry, and in economics, but, Mr. President, Mr. MacLeish is the sort of a man whom any Member of the Senate might be glad to visit and sit down with after dinner or in the evening and discuss for an hour or two not only books, not only catalogs, not only library shelves, but discuss the economic, social, and moral problems that confront a great nation of 130,000,000 people. That is the kind of man I should like to see at the head of the Library of Congress.

As has been stated here, the Library of Congress has sufficient technicians. They know how to catalog books; they know where they are; they will help to decide what additional books should be placed in the Library. But there is a philosophy of literature that is nearly as important as is the technical knowledge of what literature is; and I believe that Mr. MacLeish expressed the desire and ambition and aspirations of the American people for their own Library when he said before the committee that he believed that the Library of Congress should make its knowledge, its history, its philosophy, and all that it contains available for the use of the American people, not only for the American Government, not only for the Congress of the United States, whose agency it is and always has been, but that the great Library of Congress should be made available with its philosophy, its information, its inspiration, and its teaching to the American people, not by sending books all over the country to be read out of the Library, which is a privilege not enjoyed by the average citizen of this country, but that it might be a great institution for enlightenment, inspiration, and education, and might in a real sense become a great university, as it is described here in the letter which I have read.

Therefore, Mr. President, I hope that this nomination will be confirmed. I believe that this man will justify the faith we have in him when he has served during whatever tenure of office he may hold as the Librarian of the Library of Congress.

EXHIBIT A

JUNE 20, 1939.

HON. ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
Chairman, Library Committee,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I recognize the probable futility of opposition to the appointment of the gentleman named by the President to be the Librarian of Congress.

I am impelled, however, by reason of some years of experience at the head of an educational institution serviced by a library, to say what I am about to say and what I would say were the man my own brother who is named.

I hold no brief for anybody or any candidate. I do not oppose the nomination by reason of charges which have been made with respect to his communistic leanings, though I do feel they should be investigated and, were they established, should preclude him from any and all consideration. I might add that in my judgment he, or any man named, should, like Caesar's wife, be above suspicion.

My opposition to his confirmation is found in the fact that, as against the qualifications of those several men in this country who have made a life work of the study of library administration, his intellectual and literary qualifications are against him rather than in his favor. A man may be the greatest scholar but the poorest executive in the land. Librarians are in a class by themselves, and it takes years of hard work and preparation to qualify one's self for such a responsible position.

To go out into the highways and byways to select literati to fill executive positions with so great responsibility attendant, when men of competent ability and experience have given themselves and their lives in an endeavor to fill such vacancies, impugns our own interest and integrity of purpose and effectually raises a bar against effort which might be made by those who in days to come might attempt to qualify themselves to fill such vacancies if the occasion should arise. "What is the use?" says the young man who has a peculiar and demonstrated penchant along these necessary and recognized lines leading toward the life work of a librarian. "Why should I give years in order to fit myself, when some poet or author or writer, who has no experience and has no training and knows no more about the intricate details of library work than a goose does about God, will be appointed?"

The man selected for the post of Librarian of Congress should be able to satisfy your committee that he has had the necessary experience, has demonstrated the necessary fundamental practical qualifications as an executive to manage and direct the work incident to the proper discharge of the manifold duties of such an office.

Few men possess such qualifications; they are seldom if ever found in those who have devoted their lives to writing poetry or as authors or novelists, however high they may stand in the field of literature. The job of being Librarian of Congress is not something to be offered a la Nobel or Pulitzer prize or award.

That institution, which in some aspects affords the greatest educational opportunity to be found in this land, should be presided over by the ablest, best-trained, and most efficient librarian to be found in this country, and you know it just as well as I do.

Sincerely yours,

C. A. PLUMLEY.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an editorial from the Baltimore Sun approving this nomination, an editorial from the New York Times, and two or three other editorials which I have received.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the editorials referred to may be printed in the RECORD.

The editorials referred to are as follows:

GOOD APPOINTMENTS

Two excellent appointments to official posts were announced on Tuesday. The President nominated Archibald MacLeish for the place as Librarian of Congress and, in Maryland, the hall of records commission chose Dr. Morris L. Radoff to be State archivist.

Mr. MacLeish is one of the country's outstanding creative writers; Dr. Radoff is a scholar whose work as editor of the State historical records survey richly commends him. The former will become the ranking librarian of the country; the latter will be in charge of the State's historical records. So far as we know, Mr. MacLeish does not have any formal training in technical librarianship, but we fail to see that this lack of experience constitutes a handicap. He is, after all, a man of wide experience as well as a poet who stands in the front rank of contemporary writers. The Library of Congress unquestionably has its share of experts the benefit of whose advice and specialized knowledge Mr. MacLeish will have; he will bring to his work not only the imagination which shows clearly in his poetry, the experimental temperament which marks his admirable poetic dramas for the radio, but also the critical intelligence that informed his Turnbull lectures at the Hopkins and the vital, broad interest in American affairs which characterizes his writings from Conquistador to Land of the Free.

The high and special qualities which men of genuine creative powers possess are likely to be of considerable value in any field of work. After all, it is to Anthony Panizzi, an Italian, friend of Foscolo and Merimee, and student of poetry, that the British Museum owes much of its present-day greatness. And if nations have found that men of letters serve them well in diplomatic and governmental posts—and one recalls a long list of such men from Chaucer and Spenser, through Lowell and Irving, to Claudel and Ayala—there is certainly no reason to think that similar talents will not be happily and beneficially employed in the great national storehouses of literature. As a matter of fact they have been, as the cases of Coventry Patmore and Henry Francis Cary, in England, and of Charles Nodder and Remy de Gourmont, in France, suggest.

[From the New York Times of June 8, 1939]

A POET FOR LIBRARIAN

Archibald MacLeish, named by President Roosevelt to succeed the admired Dr. Herbert Putnam as Librarian of Congress, is not a professional librarian. He is a number of other things that should commend him to those who wish to see the great traditions of our national library carried forward. He is an eloquent and impassioned poet—certainly one of the two or three at the top of our American list. Unlike some poets, he has a brilliantly logical mind, which the Harvard Law School recognized 20 years ago by ranking him highest in its graduating class for "scholarship, conduct, and character." He has been notably successful as a practicing lawyer and as an editor. There is every reason to believe that he has both the vision and the executive ability to give continued life to an institution which deals not only with books but with all the arts.

The charge has already been made that Mr. MacLeish is tainted with economic heresy. The truth seems to be that, like most poets, he is not entirely satisfied with the world as it is. His poems are alive with pity and indignation. In a necessarily more limping prose he has professed himself as believing "that democracy can be saved and that the American way is the best way out." So warm and generous a spirit, keenly sensitive to the finest cultural traditions, aflame with love of liberty, can hardly be a danger to the Library of Congress.

LIBRARIAN MACLEISH

The enthusiasm in Washington when the President named Archibald MacLeish as Librarian of Congress, to succeed Herbert Putnam, will be duplicated here, in New York, and wherever Mr. MacLeish is known. It was said of Herbert Hoover that he selected the ideal man when he named Justice Cardozo to the Supreme Court; and almost as much may be said of the honoring of Mr. MacLeish.

He was first man in his class at the Harvard Law School, and declined an appointment to the faculty. He was one of the most promising young lawyers in Boston when he left one of the leading law firms to give all his time to literature. As an editor of Fortune, a Pulitzer prize winner in poetry, a writer of excellent prose, a man of affairs, an administrator, and, as the President characterized him, "a gentleman and a scholar," he deserves immediate, unanimous, hearty confirmation.

The President will be criticized, perhaps, for his failure to pick a trained librarian. The obvious reply is that far more than technical ability is requisite for the supervision of one of the great libraries of the world. A skilled orthodox librarian could have been found easily enough, but none with the qualifications of Mr. Putnam. The purely professional features of the position can be learned easily by a man of Mr. MacLeish's endowments and experience.

A pleasing personality and a marked aptitude in speech, public and private, should be of great assistance to him in his relations with Members of Congress. The entirely nonpolitical nature of the appointment makes it all the more pleasing.

[From the Boston Herald of June 10, 1939]

OPPOSITION TO MACLEISH

Neither the organized nor the unorganized opposition to the nomination of Archibald MacLeish as Librarian of Congress seems to have a substantial foundation. The president of the American Library Association, who has sent out telegrams to various associates urging protests to Senators, is presumably disturbed because Mr. MacLeish lacks specialized training as a librarian. That is an understandable attitude. It indicates, however, a narrowness which does not reflect any great credit on the American Library Association.

There is far more to the task of a Librarian of Congress than the carrying out of technical assignments. Congressmen, 531 of them, must be served and appeased. Political pressure must be resisted constantly. Skill in administration, close contact with men of affairs, and cooperation from a score of sources, literary and nonliterary, are essential if the high standards of Herbert Putnam are to be maintained. The nonprofessional tasks are perhaps more important than the professional; and we doubt that any schooled librarian could perform them nearly as well as Mr. MacLeish.

Indeed, the noncareer librarians have perhaps made more enduring contributions to library administration and upbuilding than the career men—and the story is the same in American diplomacy. The list of such librarians is most impressive.

The great Justin Winsor lacked technical acquirements. Archibald Carey Coolidge, who did so much to make the Widener Library at Harvard what it is, was not a professional librarian.

The new head of the Yale University library, Bernard Knollenberg, has not pursued librarianship as a life career. President McKinley's appointee, John Russell Young, who made great improvements in the Library of Congress, was also lacking in knowledge of the Dewey decimal system and some other subjects taught to students of library schools. The Army medical library, unrivaled in the world as a medical library, was the creation of a surgeon named John S. Billings. The greatest law library in the world, the Harvard law library, has never had a professional librarian at its head, and was created by professors.

Herbert Putnam himself was primarily a lawyer. He began his notable career at the Boston Public Library and continued it at Washington after he had interrupted his western library activities by a bar career of a few years. Edmund Gosse, librarian of the House of Lords, and Sir Frederick Kenyon of the British Museum, a famous repository of books, would fail, with those famous Americans, in the narrow test which apparently the head of the American Library Association would apply.

The MacLeish choice seems to us not only good but brilliant. There is probably not a trained librarian in the United States who has his manifest qualifications for a distinguished career as head of the great institution. Men and women entirely familiar with the more or less mechanical aspects of library administration are to be had by the score. Many of them are on the staff of Mr. Putnam and will be available for his successor.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I am not going to make any lengthy speech on this nomination or attempt to make any oratorical speech; I could not do that if I wanted to; but, like other Members of the Senate, I have had a number of protests, especially from librarians and the Library Association against the nominee. Most of these librarians, of course, have taken the library course in college. It cost them money to do that. They have an organization built up to protect their own interests, just as attorneys have organizations to protect their interests. It is perfectly natural when an appointment is made for a position such as the head of the Congressional Library in Washington that the Library Association should protest against anyone being appointed to a position of that kind who is not a librarian. I doubt if there is an attorney, a Member of this body or the body at the other end of the Capitol, who would not protest bitterly against the nomination to the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States of a man who was not a lawyer, and probably against anyone who had not been a judge or had not had some experience on the bench, although there is nothing in the law, as I understand, or in the Constitution to prevent the appointment of a layman to the Supreme Court.

It seems to me that the position of Librarian is largely a technical one, and that the head of the largest library in the world should be qualified both as an administrator and from a technical standpoint to be Librarian.

Of course, I have not had from anyone any complaint about the character of Mr. MacLeish or his ability as an attorney or as a writer. I have noticed in some of the newspapers charges of radicalism, but that does not affect me in the least. I do not blame people for being radical. It seems to me it indicates that they have been doing some thinking for themselves anyway. But, Mr. President, I feel that in a case of this kind the librarians especially have a right to protest. I agree with them that someone who has had technical knowledge and training should be placed in the position of head of the Library of Congress.

The Senator from Kentucky read a letter from some librarian who spoke of Dr. Putnam who is retiring as not having been a librarian. Well, of course, he had been a librarian and held positions as such both at Minneapolis and Boston. I do not know how much technical training he had had but at least he had been a librarian and knew library work.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] brought up the question of the past history of appointments to the position of Librarian of the Library of Congress. Someone sent to me an article of a little over a page. I presume it came from some librarian, although I do not know where it came from, as it is not signed. I have no doubt of the correctness of the statement but I admit I have not attempted to verify it. The article goes on to say that the Senate did not confirm in 1899 an appointment by President McKinley of a nonlibrarian as Librarian of Congress. It goes on further to state that before that time, after Mr. Spofford, who served from 1864 to 1897, had retired, a newspaperman, a politician by the name of Young, had been appointed. Mr. Young lived only a year or two after his appointment and thus a vacancy occurred in President McKinley's administration. A number of politicians and people who were interested in getting the job had applied and been recommended for the position. Mr. McKinley was apparently in sympathy with making such an appointment and he recommended to the Congress the appointment of a retiring Member of the House by the name of Barrows. The Library Committee refused to approve that appointment or to recommend it to the Senate, and so the appointment was not made. Adjournment was had, Mr. Putnam was appointed during the recess, and his appointment was afterward confirmed by the Senate at the next session of the Congress.

I mention this merely to straighten out the statements made by the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Kentucky in regard to this particular situation.

I suppose in all probability the nomination of this gentleman as Librarian of Congress will be confirmed. Nevertheless, I think the librarians of the country should be given consideration, and that their protests should be considered in voting on this nomination.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I shall be brief; but I do not think I would be fair to myself or to this distinguished man, who is from my State, if I did not comment upon the nomination.

If I desired to bask in the brightness of this man's brilliance, I would make a speech. He is so unusual a man, in my opinion, that my praise of him would reflect favorably upon me.

A little earlier, immediately after the nomination of Mr. MacLeish came to the Senate, there was a careless reference to the man's Americanism. That seems completely to have been dissipated, and I congratulate the Senate and its entire membership that it has left that reference entirely out of the discussion this afternoon.

In addition to the fact that Mr. MacLeish is an able lawyer, an outstanding poet, and a brilliant scholar, as well as a soldier, he is a playwright and an author. While, as the majority leader pointed out, he has not had much, if any, experience in cataloging books, nor probably is he familiar with the technical details of library work, the persons in the Congressional Library who do catalog books, and the persons in the other great libraries of the country who catalog books, will enjoy the experience of cataloging books and manuscripts prepared and written by this versatile and scholarly man.

I think he has had a more splendid experience up to this time than had the great Librarian, Mr. Putnam, at the time of his appointment to the Library of Congress. It is true that Mr. Putnam had some experience in two smaller libraries before he came here, but Mr. MacLeish has spent a very considerable time in libraries in connection with his love of literature and poetry and art and as a playwright and as an author. He has necessarily lived a good part of the time in libraries doing research work. He is a Pulitzer prize winner; and the majority leader pointed to the fact as he read some correspondence that Mr. MacLeish was a "fellow traveler" of several great Americans. The majority leader did not mention that Mr. MacLeish was a "fellow traveler" of those Americans who have a right to the royal purple of our country because of their participation in the war; but he did point out the facts regarding the competency of Mr. MacLeish to a sufficient extent, as did the other Senators who have spoken, to make it unnecessary for me or anyone else to speak at length.

I congratulate the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] for the fairness of his presentation and should like to go beyond that and congratulate him for making what I thought was a splendid argument in favor of the appointment of Mr. MacLeish.

I should like to ask for a roll call on this nomination in order to have the RECORD show that there is very, very little, if any, opposition to the appointment; but because so many

Members of the Senate are compelled to be elsewhere in connection with important conferences which must be completed by tomorrow, I myself shall not ask for a roll call. I should like, however, to have the RECORD show that it is my opinion that there will be, if any, not more than a few votes against the confirmation of the nomination.

I ask unanimous consent that there may be added to my remarks an interesting letter which recently appeared in the Hartford Courant and which in a scholarly way points out the rich qualifications of Mr. MacLeish.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Hartford (Conn.) Courant]

LIBRARIAN OF CONGRESS—MR. MACLEISH DESERVES RECOGNITION OF SCHOLARLY TALENTS

TO THE EDITOR OF THE COURANT:

The conferring of an honorary degree of doctor of letters on Archibald MacLeish by Yale University rekindles smiles that met the howls of dismay emanating from New Jersey's Representative THOMAS, and from some librarians, when the President nominated Mr. MacLeish to head the Library of Congress.

Very little intelligence is required to discard the cloak of communism with which Representative THOMAS would envelop Mr. MacLeish. A more disconcerting note is heard in the opposition of the librarians, for the public assumes that they, in accordance with their training for their positions, do a bit of thinking for themselves. We hope that the protests in no way expressed the sentiments of the majority of that group.

To assume that technical qualifications necessary for the ordinary librarian should likewise be necessary in greater degree for this post is childish. The Library of Congress is more than a receptacle or depository for books. It is one of the rare cultural centers in this country.

With the exception of the various cultural projects undertaken during the past several years primarily to give sustenance to needy artists in all fields—music, drama, and literature included—our Government has done little, if anything, in the century and a half of its existence to encourage and foster a development of American culture among the masses of the people. Contrasted to the direct patronage given art by the governments of other countries over a period of centuries—England, for instance, has a poet laureate—our record in that respect is a sorry one.

Under no circumstances would I withhold extreme praise and credit to the private philanthropists who endow our colleges and libraries and who build their memorials in concert halls and museums. As far as they go they are splendid. But to this day the rank and file of our people do not avail themselves of their gifts—probably because in that all-important period during which children become adults, the preparation for the material battle of life has been emphasized, and acquaintance with the things that are quite as important but less tangible, neglected.

To repeat, the Library of Congress is not merely the world's greatest depository for books. Nor are its frescoes and mosaics, its columns and statuary, its marble and murals, its sole claim to distinction; neither is its amazing music library, containing one of the world's greatest collections of instrumental and vocal scores and original manuscripts. Through the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation a concert hall was added to the Library some years ago. Some of the choicest string ensembles and solo concerts during recent years have been broadcast from this auditorium. Many of the visiting artists have played the Stradivari (four of them) given the Library by Mrs. Matthew John Whittall.

The Gutenberg Bible, of which the Library of Congress has one of the three perfect copies extant, the letters and handwritten documents of most of the Nation's great, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution which repose in the Library—these are not to be considered merely important insignia of the past which lend tone to the Nation's greatest library. They are ties that link us to the past, the past to us, and the present to the future. In the very possession of those ties, the Library of Congress is a symbol of our permanence.

Each division of the Library is headed by men who are experts in their respective fields of learning. The employees of the Library are technically qualified to carry out the routine and special duties assigned to them—just as are the employees of our library here.

It is the spirit of the Library of Congress which embraces and expresses art in all its branches that fully vindicates the selection of a scholar and a man of letters to be its head, rather than an expert at card cataloging. It is one thing to know what a book contains. It is quite another thing to know why the book contains what it does.

It is proper that the man selected to head the Library be one whose genius has been recognized by the Pulitzer Prize Committee, whose own manuscripts will be listed in its catalog, who has been engaged in research, and who now has been honored by his alma mater with an honorary degree. It might be added in passing that Yale decided to confer the honorary degree before Mr. MacLeish was signaled out for honor by the President 2 weeks ago. Honorary degrees are not won easily, nor over night.

Those of us who are library addicts offer our admiration to a President who "travels" with the scholars when he deals with things scholastic.

DAREL.

HARTFORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

Mr. AUSTIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HARRISON. On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

So the nomination of Archibald MacLeish to be Librarian of Congress was confirmed.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the President will be immediately notified.

WILLIAM S. BOYLE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is now desired that the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the nomination for district attorney for the district of Nevada.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination of William S. Boyle, of Nevada, to be United States attorney for the district of Nevada was temporarily passed over at the request of the Senator from Kentucky. It is now the order of business, and is before the Senate.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I objected before the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States Senate, and now on the floor of the United States Senate I object to the confirmation of William S. Boyle to be United States district attorney for the district of Nevada, for the reason that the nominee is personally obnoxious and personally offensive to the junior Senator from Nevada. I hope that confirmation will not follow.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have taken issue with my colleague on this question. There is no bitterness whatever involved. However, I do not think that the evidence justifies the charges my colleague has made.

I take issue with my colleague in his statement as to the constitutional provision with respect to the authority of the Senate in consenting to a nomination made by the President requiring confirmation. I do not think the Constitution vests in any single Senator or any group of Senators the right to advise and consent to a nomination made by the President, whether or not the nomination is to an office within the State of the Senator attempting so to advise and consent. I think the Constitution grants the Senate of the United States the authority, as a Senate, an organized body, sitting as a Senate, to advise and consent to nominations.

I do not think it was ever intended by the framers of the Constitution that even in the Senate, as an organized body, the Members should vote against confirmation of a Presidential appointment merely because a Senator did not approve of the nomination. In my opinion, the word "consent" has a different meaning from the word "approved."

Mr. President, in the 26 years I have been a Member of the Senate, nominations have been sent to the Senate of which

I did not approve, nominations of men whom I would never have nominated if I had had the nominating power. In many cases I thought the nominees were poorly qualified. In some cases when appointments were made in my State I did not like the appointees personally. Some, particularly during the Republican administration, were appointed who had been quite bitter critics of me politically. Possibly at times their criticism took the form of personalities. Yet in the 26 years during which I have been in the Senate I have never yet used the courtesy ground or practice or custom, whatever it may be called, of objecting to an appointee because he was personally obnoxious to me. If the Senate shall confirm that practice I can conceive that great confusion may arise, particularly when a change in administration occurs. If carried to the extreme it will mean that no nomination may be confirmed unless both Senators from the State of the appointee shall say that he is not personally obnoxious or unsatisfactory to them.

In the case now before the Senate there is nothing in the testimony against the nominee, nothing against his character, nothing against his ability or his qualifications. I take it if Senators will read the hearings which are on their desks they will find that the only ground, in my opinion, on which the junior Senator from Nevada could sustain his charges, is the testimony of the former United States Attorney, now Governor of the State of Nevada, Governor Carville. In a telegram sent to the junior Senator from Nevada during the hearings he stated in effect that in June 1937 he, Carville, being interested in Senator McCARRAN's coming campaign in 1938, dropped into Mr. Boyle's office and asked him how he stood with Senator McCARRAN, and that Mr. Boyle said, "You know that Senator McCARRAN and I are enemies."

That telegram was sent during the hearings, not before that time. The alleged conversation took place over 2 years ago. Mr. Boyle denied it. The matter is at issue. So far as I am concerned, I have absolute confidence in the integrity of both those men, but I believe that when one thinks back a period of 2 years and tries to remember whether a conversation was had, and the construction of the conversation, he will find that his memory is not very sound or reliable. Boyle remembers nothing of such a thing and denies it. Carville states it as a fact.

Be that as it may, even if Boyle did say in 1937 that he and the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] were enemies, the evidence in the record is uncontradicted that Boyle supported Senator McCARRAN in 1938, both in the primaries and in the general election. I do not know that I could hold enmity against a man, even if we were not friends in 1937, if he supported me in my primary fight and my election fight subsequently in 1938.

That is the only testimony in the record of any hard feeling between these two gentlemen, except that Mr. Boyle, who appeared before the committee and testified, said that if there was any enmity between the junior Senator from Nevada and himself, it was on Senator McCARRAN's side, because he said he would bow to him on the street and Senator McCARRAN would not return the bow.

I think that is all the testimony in the record which I remember, and if I have forgotten any testimony with regard to ill feeling between these two gentlemen, the junior Senator from Nevada, of course, will call attention to it.

Let me now read a statement I made in the presence of the junior Senator from Nevada and the other members of the subcommittee on this subject. I prefer to read it because it was made in the presence of the junior Senator from Nevada and the full membership of the subcommittee, and I do not desire to diverge from it. This is my statement:

Senator PITTMAN. I have looked over the record here, and I feel that I should make a statement; but I did not want to do injustice to Mr. Boyle any more than I would do injustice to Judge Carville, both of whom have been personal friends of mine for 20 years.

I have already put in the record, or read into the record, my correspondence with Judge Carville. I sent a copy to the Attorney General, and that letter is in the record also.

When this nomination came here for the advice and consent of the Senate on January 24, 1939, the chairman of the committee, Senator ASHURST, sent me one of the regular forms, which reads as follows:

"Sir: Will you kindly give me, for the use of the committee, your opinion and information concerning the nomination of William S. Boyle, to be United States attorney for the district of Nevada. (Recess appointment.)

"Under a rule of the committee, unless a reply is received from you within a week from this date, it will be assumed that you have no objection to this nomination.

"Respectfully,

"HENRY F. ASHURST, Chairman."

That was addressed to Hon. KEY PITTMAN, United States Senate. In reply to that I wrote this:

"I did not endorse Mr. Boyle for appointment because several of my friends sought my endorsement. I consider Mr. Boyle well qualified in every particular. I hold him as a friend.

"KEY PITTMAN."

I then inquired if Senator McCARRAN had made any comments upon the nomination, and was informed that he had not.

The first time that I heard that Senator McCARRAN was going to raise objection to Mr. Boyle was in this committee room. I had not the slightest idea whether Senator McCARRAN would make an objection or not.

Now, in answer to a question in the record, and the question was directed straight at me by Senator McCARRAN: "Did you endorse Mr. Boyle?" I replied: "No; I did not."

However, I think that the circumstances in regard to this whole matter should be made public. In the first place, when the administration became Democratic, in 1933, it was my intention to endorse a gentleman out there by the name of McKnight, and I thought at the time that Senator McCARRAN would endorse him, although I do not know whether I had any reason to believe that at all. When the time came for making an appointment, or near that time, I think the Attorney General called on both of us to make some suggestion—in fact, I know he did—and I suggested Mr. McKnight. It was only in a tentative state at that time, because I do not think the office was vacant; and, later on, when the time came for appointment, I got a letter from the Attorney General asking for suggestions. I had already made verbal suggestions, but, when the time came, I thought McKnight should be appointed. I called up Senator McCARRAN over the phone and I said, "I suppose you have a letter from the Attorney General suggesting that we recommend somebody for district attorney out there," and I said, "I am ready to join with you in the recommendation of Mr. McKnight." Senator McCARRAN then stated, in effect—I do not remember the details—that McKnight was personally obnoxious to him.

Senator McCARRAN. I do not concur in that statement.

Senator PITTMAN. How was it?

Senator McCARRAN. Well, I do not want to correct you.

Senator PITTMAN. Well, this is only historical.

Senator McCARRAN. I did not make that statement.

Senator PITTMAN. Well, the language was strong.

Senator McCARRAN. Put it that way.

Senator PITTMAN. Well, I am not trying to repeat the language. So I made some investigation and the evidence that I received, Senator McCARRAN, was sufficient in the circumstances to lead me to believe that you had a right to feel that McKnight was personally offensive; and the result was that I did not recommend McKnight, but wrote him very fully and told him exactly why I would not do it. I did endorse another man, and then I withdrew that endorsement and joined in with Senator McCARRAN in endorsing Judge Carville. I have the very highest regard for Judge Carville, and always have had. I think we have been personal friends for over 20 years. I may say the same thing with regard to Mr. Boyle. I think Boyle is a younger man than Judge Carville. I have also been a personal friend of Boyle's for over 20 years. Boyle was an active politician. Judge Carville was not. Boyle was chairman of the Democratic State central committee at one time, and, as far as I know, has always been active as a Democrat.

He was a very close personal friend of James Farley, and represented Farley in Franklin D. Roosevelt's campaign before the national convention of 1932. He was quite active. Farley met Boyle at that time, when he had charge of the pre-convention campaign of Franklin D. Roosevelt, and evidently became very much attached to him, because he wanted to know if I would support Boyle for United States attorney. That was back in 1933. I told him I could not, because I was going to support McKnight, and I thought that McKnight was entitled to it by his long service in the party and by reason of every factor that I knew of. I think McKnight was almost unanimously endorsed at that time. I told Mr. Farley that Boyle was a friend of mine and that I would be very glad to endorse him for the position of assistant attorney general in charge of water litigation in Nevada, and I did. I subsequently received a lot of resolutions and letters from Democratic labor clubs and other labor organizations urging me to support Boyle for United States district attorney, but I did not change my position in the matter. That is all.

Now, that is the history, as far as I can recollect it, of the original Boyle appointment and the original Carville appointment. I was importuned to endorse Carville, and I declined to do so for the reasons stated in the letters; and I took no part whatever in the appointment of Boyle; but I must say I feel this way about it: That if the evidence came to me, such as it came in the matter of the proposed appointment of Mr. McKnight, as far as I am concerned, I would not request you, Senator McCARRAN, to present the evidence to the committee.

Senator McCARRAN. On McKnight?

Senator PITTMAN. On McKnight. If the same character of evidence came in in regard to Boyle, I would not ask you to present it to this committee, because while the evidence might have been doubtful, it was sufficient in this kind of matter.

I do not see this case in the same light at all. I do not think that Boyle sought this appointment. I think that from all the evidence that is in the record here from Mr. Keenan that Mr. Farley decided to get Boyle appointed in 1933. I think that he has higher admiration for Mr. Boyle than he has for any other man in the State of Nevada.

Now, Boyle has some rights in this matter. I do not think he sought this appointment; at least, there is no evidence of it that I have. He had been in the Department for 4 or 5 years. He had been back here a number of times and is personally known to the Attorney General and Mr. Keenan, according to the testimony.

Senator McCARRAN. I do not want to interrupt you, but would you mind saying that he was under appointment, drawing $6,000 a year, and that this appointment now draws $4,500?

Senator PITTMAN. Yes; I think that is correct; but Boyle was appointed by the Attorney General. As near as I know, the circumstances are as stated. He has been serving as United States attorney for several months—almost a year. As far as I know, there was never any statement made during that period of time that you intended to object to his appointment on the ground that he is personally obnoxious.

Now, my view of making an objection on the ground that a man is personally obnoxious was offered at the time of the proposed appointment of Senator Rublee to the Interstate Commerce Commission in 1913. Rublee had run against Senator Gallinger, who had served for a number of years. Gallinger made the objection that Rublee was personally obnoxious. He was asked why, and he stated that Rublee had made a speech in his campaign which constituted a personal attack on him which he could not forgive, and that he had instigated the publication of an editorial in some paper up there. The matter was taken up by the Judiciary Committee and the speech was presented to them and also the editorial. The report of the committee, as I remember—it was discussed quite freely—was that while Rublee in his campaign had criticized—in some cases quite severely—the vote and action taken by Senator Gallinger with regard to many questions that there was no personal attack in the speech. The editor of the paper that contained the editorial, so the report shows, stated that he published that of his own free will and accord, without the knowledge or consent of Mr. Rublee. That was debated quite extensively on the floor of the Senate. Unfortunately, at that time we had a closed executive session, so there is no record; but the majority of the Senate at that time felt that there was not sufficient evidence to justify the charge that the appointee was personally obnoxious.

Now we come down to the case of Judge Robinson, of Virginia. I voted in this committee for a favorable report on Judge Robinson.

Senator McCARRAN. My recollection is that you voted for an adverse report. I hope I am wrong.

Senator PITTMAN. That is right. I voted for an adverse report on Judge Robinson because I believed that the testimony before the committee disclosed the fact that Senators CARTER GLASS and BYRD had sufficient reasons to believe that the appointee had been conscious of a conspiracy to humiliate the two Senators from Virginia.

In that case, when some wanted to bring the matter before the committee, to pass on the question of the matter of the objections, I took the position that the committee should hear the evidence, and the committee decided to hear evidence to see whether or not the objection was reasonable or whether it was simply a captious objection based on the theory of veto power. There were a number of witnesses who testified. It was admitted that there were conferences between the Governor and Judge Robinson.

Senator McCARRAN. Senator, I hope you are right in that last expression. I am relying on my memory, and I would not want to contradict you. I know of no evidence of conferences between the nominee and the Governor.

Senator PITTMAN. My impression is that the Governor himself stated that he had talked with Judge Robinson; but be that as it may.

Senator McCARRAN. Well, Senator, I do not want to interrupt you. That is the record as best I recall it.

Senator PITTMAN. The Attorney General requested those two Senators to submit two names to him for his consideration; and, according to the testimony of GLASS and BYRD, they went down to Virginia, among a lot of friends they had down there—judges and lawyers—and performed the very embarrassing service of handing in two names.

A publication came out in the paper down there, stating that the Governor had a veto power on any appointments made in Virginia. That article was taken, according to my recollection—a clipping from that paper—and sent to the President; and, as I recollect it, the President answered it simply by stating that he never answered newspaper articles. In that situation, without any further notice to GLASS and BYRD, Judge Robinson was appointed. I think that is an entirely different situation from the present cases. There is no evidence here that Boyle sought this position or that he sought anybody's support in the matter. He was connected with the Attorney General's office. The testimony of Mr. Keenan is that he was directed to investigate, or had investigated, rather, the record of Mr. Boyle. I do not know whether he investigated the record of Judge Carville or not, but he investigated the record of Mr. Boyle and Boyle was appointed. Boyle has been on the stand here, and he testified very frankly before this committee that he spoke to Senator McCARRAN on the street a number of times and Senator McCARRAN never spoke back.

He testified here that he voted for Senator McCARRAN, both at the primaries and the election. That stands uncontradicted. We have the testimony here of Mr. Malia, I think it is—the president of one of the Catholic societies of Reno—and I assume he would not hold that position unless he was a man of some prominence. I do not know whether I know him or not; I am not sure; but he sent in here a sworn statement which no one has seen fit to contradict, that Mr. Boyle did work among the Italians for Mr. McCARRAN in the primary election. Those matters have never been questioned and stand before the committee.

Now, it seems that this is based very largely—the charge that Boyle is personally obnoxious—on the ground that Carville was an efficient, competent man, which nobody denies, and that the appointment of Boyle was solely for the purpose of taking a slap at the junior Senator from Nevada. Admitting that that is true, for the sake of argument, I do not see that Boyle had anything to do with that. He is not connected with it in any way that I know of. Farley did not desire to take a slap at Senator McCARRAN—Farley supported McCARRAN.

Now, you have put in the evidence today a telegram from Mr. Edward W. Clark, national committeeman, saying that he endorsed the reappointment of Carville. I have put in the RECORD, also, a letter from the same Edward W. Clark, national committeeman, urging the confirmation of Mr. Boyle. Apparently the national committeeman out there likes them both. The junior Senator has put in the RECORD today a telegram from Mr. Swartz, chairman of the State central committee, showing that in June 1938 he had endorsed the reappointment of Mr. Carville; and I have put in the record a letter from Mr. Swartz, urging the Senate committee to report favorably on the confirmation of Mr. Boyle. It is a perfectly natural thing. They are both good men. They are both good Democrats.

Now, I have placed in the RECORD here letters from every member of the supreme court of Nevada, from, I think, all—or practically all—of the district judges of Nevada, and from numerous other cities, which I presume you will remember, urging this committee to report favorably on the confirmation of Mr. Boyle. When you get down to it, all of these men, I think, would have endorsed the appointment of Judge Carville. None of them seem to have seen anything wrong with Mr. Boyle, and practically all of them are endorsing the confirmation of Mr. Boyle. Now, personally I will say here that I have never favored interference in a State fight by outside Federal officials, and I do not now. I do not know to what extent there has been interference, except insofar as the junior Senator has stated there was interference from the outside.

Mr. Boyle has testified here before you that he got the chairman of the National Democratic Committee, Mr. Farley, to help in Senator McCARRAN's campaign. I think that it would be very unfair to Mr. Boyle to hold him responsible for something over which he had no control. He has had nothing to do with a slap, so far as I can see from the evidence. After having served for nearly a year, without any charge having been made, to my personal knowledge, to have him thrown out of office, carrying the imputation that there was something wrong with him, I do not think is fair.

There is no evidence that there is anything wrong with Mr. Boyle. I think if you are going to establish the practice in the United States Senate that a Senator has the veto power of appointments in his State on the ground alleged by Senator McCARRAN, in accordance with the evidence presented by Senator McCARRAN, that the constitutional authority of a President to appoint would be nullified. If the President had tried to defeat a Senator or had interfered in his campaign, and such action were ground to raise this question, it would be impossible to ever have an appointee in the State unless he was approved by both of the Senators.

That is the statement which I made before the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee at the time my colleague [Mr. McCARRAN] made his statement. The evidence shows that the President made statements to my colleague's primary opponent derogatory of my colleague, and that my colleague's opponent repeated those statements in his speeches, and that they were not denied by the President. Undoubtedly there is evidence there, which stands uncontradicted, that the President of the United States was opposed to the reelection of my colleague, and made statements to my colleague's opponent which the opponent used, and the President refused to deny them. On the other hand, there is not a scintilla of evidence which I can find that Mr. Boyle had anything on earth to do with that matter, or any knowledge of it.

There is no question from the evidence that Mr. Boyle was recommended by Jim Farley, national committeeman, the same Jim Farley who urged me to recommend Boyle in 1933; and there is not any doubt that Jim Farley did not participate in any "purge" in any State during the last election. There is not any doubt that he opposed the so-called "purge" of any candidate in any State. In fact, most of the time he was supporting candidates whom it was charged the President was against.

Some persons may think that Mr. Boyle was appointed by the President as a slap at my colleague; but, as a matter of fact, from 1933 on Jim Farley was trying to get his friend Boyle in as United States attorney, and I know that Farley did so.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, there seem to be two allegations here by way of objection. One is that—

Mr. Boyle is personally offensive to me—

That is, to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN]— because he has lent himself to a conspiracy to take from me my standing as a Member of the Senate of the United States.

That is No. 1.

No. 2:

And has lent himself to defeat the will, or rather the words, of the Constitution of the United States, which says that the Senators of the United States shall confirm, recommend, and advise.

Is there any evidence in the record to sustain those two allegations?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not know of any evidence in the record to show that Boyle lent himself to this conspiracy.

Mr. BAILEY. Was there a conspiracy?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not know whether there was or not. There is not any evidence of a conspiracy except that the President did not appoint the man whom my colleague recommended.

Mr. BAILEY. That would not be a conspiracy.

Mr. PITTMAN. I myself do not think so, but that is all I know about. There is no evidence of anything else. He lent himself by being appointed.

That is all I have to say on the matter.

Mr. NORRIS obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me to ask the Senator from Nevada one question?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is agreed that this nomination was made without the recommendation of either the senior Senator from Nevada or his colleague?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know that it is important; but how did it come about that neither Senator from Nevada recommended the nominee?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is shown in the testimony. Judge Carville, while he was United States attorney, wrote me a letter requesting my endorsement for his reappointment. I wrote him a letter and told him that while I was out in the State my endorsement for the office had been sought by five Democrats who were very close personal friends of mine, all of them qualified, and all had been my political supporters, and I did not desire to take a stand against any one of them; that I would make no recommendations to the Attorney General, but that if the Attorney General asked me with regard to the qualifications of any of the candidates I would state them. I stated to Judge Carville in the letter that I admired him, my friendship for him was the same, and if the Attorney General reappointed him it would be entirely satisfactory to me.

That is the reason why I joined in no recommendations. However, as the testimony shows, Boyle was appointed Assistant Attorney General in 1934 on my recommendation.

That is the situation with regard to the nomination.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, may I inquire whether either of the Senators from Nevada was notified in advance that the nomination of Mr. Boyle was to be made?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; at least, I was not.

Mr. BONE. So the nomination came as a matter of fresh news to both Senators from Nevada?

Mr. PITTMAN. I was out in the State when he was appointed.

Mr. McCARRAN. The first knowledge I had of it was when the press carried the news of nomination.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I was on the subcommittee which heard the evidence in this case. I was in the minority when they came to make their report. I believe the nomination of Mr. Boyle ought to be confirmed.

I desire to discuss briefly the constitutional provisions which, in my judgment, are controlling.

In clause 2 of section 2 of article II we find the constitutional power which the President has exercised, and which the Senate is now exercising, in regard to appointments.

He—

Meaning the President—

shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States—

That is as far, I think, as it is necessary to read in order to discuss the powers of the President and the Senate.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact, although it may be unnecessary, that the public generally confuses the power of nomination with the power of appointment. Notice the difference in the provision in the Constitution:

He shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint.

He has not yet appointed anyone in this case. He is not required to get consent of the Senate to nominate. There is no constitutional provision which requires the President to consult with Senators. He may consult with all the Senators, with no Senators, with anyone he pleases to consult, so far as his power to make a nomination goes. When he comes to make an appointment, then he must have the consent of the Senate, and he does not make an appointment until he gets that consent. That is what we are to pass on now. If we approve, not the appointment, but if we approve the nomination, then the President is empowered, although he could not be compelled, to make the appointment when we have approved the nomination.

We ought to bear these two powers distinctly in mind. The Senate has nothing to do with nominations under the Constitution. It is up to the President to nominate, and he is absolutely supreme. He can discuss a nomination with a thousand people, if he so desires, and he can make the nomination without discussion with anyone. That refers to nomination.

When it comes to appointment the President must first get the consent of the Senate, and the Senators can consent or refuse to consent for any reason on earth. They can have a reason or no reason. It may be this or it may be that. But each Senator answers in his own breast for his own vote, and there is no power under the Constitution that can compel a Senator, when he casts his vote, to give a reason, whether it is a good reason or is not a good reason. He is not required to consult with anyone on earth.

I wish Senators would bear those two things in mind. We are talking about the Constitution, and under the Constitution the President is supreme, under the language I have read, in the making of a nomination. The Senate and the individual Senators who compose it are likewise supreme in giving their consent, and I am proceeding on that theory.

I know the question of a nomination being personally obnoxious has long been a binding rule with some Senators, and it is up to the individual Senators. I would not find fault with any Senator. He could remain silent and say nothing about it, but it is up to each Senator whether or not the objection that a nomination is personally offensive is good. When the objection is made and the evidence is taken, it is up to each Senator to say whether the evidence is sufficient upon which to base a charge of a nominee being personally offensive.

If I can, I wish to make myself perfectly clear on those constitutional provisions, because I think they are controlling. They have controlled me ever since I have been in the Senate, and I have never believed that I had a right to say that a man was personally offensive to me and that it followed that the nomination should be rejected for that reason. That is merely my idea of the matter. If any Senator has a different idea, I do not find fault with him or complain for a moment.

The President nominated Mr. Boyle, which, it seems to me, everyone must admit he had a perfect right to do. He nominated him without the recommendation of either of the Senators from Nevada, and still he was absolutely within his constitutional power. I think it is generally understood that nominations are made by Mr. Farley in reality, or perhaps the Attorney General, and the President merely carries out the recommendations; but I do not know, and I do not care. Therefore no one has violated the Constitution.

The evidence in the case shows that prior to this nomination, a little more than 5 years ago, when Mr. Roosevelt first became President, he had a nomination of United States attorney for the district of Nevada to make. The junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] wanted a man by the name of Carville nominated. The senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] wanted a man by the name of McKnight nominated. When the senior Senator found that the junior Senator felt that McKnight was personally offensive to him, he investigated, and concluded that the junior Senator was correct, that he had reason to believe that McKnight was personally offensive. The result was that the senior Senator from Nevada withdrew his recommendation in favor of McKnight, and that took McKnight out of the picture. Later on, before the nomination was made, the senior Senator joined with the junior Senator, and they agreed in recommending Carville. Mr. Carville served for 2 years, as I recall, and with distinction, according to the evidence, though I think much of it might have been immaterial, and if a court had been passing on it, it might have rejected it all.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Judge Carville served the full 4 years.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I said 2 years, but I should have said 4, because the term was for 4 years.

To my mind, when Mr. Carville was not reappointed, the administration made a mistake. I think the junior Senator from Nevada recommended Mr. Carville for reappointment. He had made an admirable record. There was very important litigation tried. I know nothing about it except what the evidence shows, but the evidence showed that he made a remarkable record, entitling him, in my judgment, to reappointment on his record. But he was not reappointed. He became a candidate for Governor, was nominated and elected, and is now Governor of Nevada. As I see it, that eliminates him from the picture.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BONE. Perhaps this question is not wholly germane to the matter before us, but since the Senator has served in this body as a distinguished Member of it for many years, and has referred, in passing, to the matter of reappointment of a man who has faithfully and efficiently discharged the duties of his office, I wish to ask the Senator now whether he thinks it is wise to reappoint a man who has served efficiently in a public office, against whom there is neither a breath of scandal nor any charge of inefficiency. As a general thing, does the Senator think it the wise, the just, and the proper thing to reappoint him, there being no charges against him?

Mr. NORRIS. I think so.

Mr. BONE. I am not attempting to color any discussion of the pending matter with this question. It is a side issue, to be sure.

Mr. NORRIS. If this matter were presented to me today as a question between Carville and any other man, even though he might not be as good an attorney—although he was good enough to make a wonderful record—I would be in favor of Mr. Carville. But I do not think that question is in this case.

Mr. BONE. I did not ask the question as having even the remotest bearing on this particular matter. I merely wanted to get the Senator's judgment as to what he thought was a decent and proper course to be taken, for instance, by a party organization.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Did I understand the Senator to say that the reappointment of Mr. Carville was agreeable to the two Senators—

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Or that they recommended it?

Mr. NORRIS. The junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] recommended his reappointment. The senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] has told the Senate why he did not do so. However, he stated then, and he now will admit if he were asked the question, that Mr. Carville made a very fine record and was a very efficient United States attorney.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under those circumstances I am a little at a loss to understand why the Department—I suppose it would be the Attorney General—did not recommend to the President that Mr. Carville be reappointed, but that a man be appointed who was not acceptable to either of the Senators.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know about that. I suppose Mr. Farley had his reasons.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so I may answer the question from the record?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I will answer the Senator's question from the record as best I can. I refer now to page 62 of the printed hearings. On July 13, when the President's train passed through Nevada, the secretary to the President, Mr. McIntyre, left the train momentarily and conversed with an acquaintance of his on the platform at Sparks, Nev., which is a division point at which the President's train stopped, and his friend inquired of Mr. McIntyre, "Why was not Judge Carville reappointed?" Mr. McIntyre's answer was, "To take a slap at Pat."

That is the record undenied.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. I myself do not think it demonstrates anything. If Mr. Carville were still available for the position, and if our rejection of the present nominee would result in putting Mr. Carville into the office, I concede that such action would be well to take, and I would favor taking it. I have never hesitated to say that I thought the administration made a mistake when it failed to reappoint Mr. Carville. However, for reasons which I do not believe are fully explained by what the Senator has said, Mr. Carville was not reappointed. Perhaps there are reasons of which I know nothing. However, it is not within our power to remedy the situation either under the Constitution or outside the Constitution, as I view the situation.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I wish to read from the record as follows:

Mr. KEENAN. I was asked to look in the record by the Attorney General.

Senator PITTMAN. Did you consider Boyle's appointment a better appointment than Carville's?

Mr. KEENAN. I hadn't got to that. That record was searched, and as reports were made to me there was no question whatsoever but what Mr. Boyle was distinctly superior and an abler man, and so known in his own community, and had an excellent record at the bar; and we felt he would be an abler man at the bar than Judge Carville.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, as I said a while ago, I thought Judge Carville, on his record, should have been reappointed, even though he was not the ablest attorney who might have been gotten for the office. I may be entirely wrong about that. That is only my idea. I feel that a man who has made an able and faithful record under some very difficult circumstances, as Mr. Carville did, should have been reappointed as a reward for faithful service. Mr. Keenan said Mr. Boyle is a better attorney than Mr. Carville. I do not agree. They are both qualified from the legal standpoint to fill the office. The evidence shows that distinctly and without question.

However, Mr. Boyle was appointed. Suppose we should reject him. That will not result in the appointment of Mr. Carville. If the President appointed Mr. Carville now he would not take the position. He is now Governor of Nevada. The evidence shows that Mr. Boyle, the nominee, stands without a single blemish; that he is one of the ablest attorneys of the State. Mr. Keenan thought he was a more able attorney than Mr. Carville, and he gives that as the reason for Mr. Boyle's selection. However, all that is past and gone, as I see it, and whatever wrong was done cannot be remedied now.

There is not a scintilla of testimony in the record tending to dispute the evidence that Mr. Boyle is one of the ablest attorneys in the State of Nevada, and that he is fully qualified for the position. He is recommended by every member of the supreme court of the State, by every district judge in the State, and by organizations of all kinds, and there is not a line from anyone objecting to him or questioning his qualifications.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator spoke of the Constitution. I agree with the position taken by the Senator with regard to the constitutional provision. However, even though the Senate of the United States were to reject the nomination, it would not imply that there was any blemish on his character, or that there was anything against him. Does the Senator take the position that because under the Constitution the President of the United States has the power to appoint someone who may be obnoxious to one Senator or both Senators of his State, the President should use the power which he has in order to punish a Senator because of a vote which he may have cast in the Senate?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not say that, and there is no evidence before us that the President made the appointment to punish anyone. The evidence, in fact, is to the contrary.

Assume that Senators were to draw the conclusion, however, from the evidence, that the President did not want the junior Senator from Nevada reelected. Take that as a true assumption. Does it follow that whoever the President appoints to an office must necessarily be personally obnoxious to that Senator? Boyle did not seek the appointment. He did not go after it. I believe the Attorney General has wanted Boyle in that office ever since the beginning of the present administration. I think that is true, although the record does not show it.

Mr. WHEELER. The senior Senator from Nevada said it was not the Attorney General who wanted Mr. Boyle in office, but it was Mr. Farley.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I meant. Did I say the Attorney General?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I meant Mr. Farley.

Mr. WHEELER. Does the Senator think the Postmaster General, whoever he may be, should dominate the patronage and the appointments in the State, and ignore the Senators from that State?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not think he ought to dominate them, but Mr. Farley is chairman of the national committee of the Senator's party. In all parties I know anything about, a man holding such a position has had great influence; and I suppose we must all admit that that is the way in which Federal officials are very often appointed.

Mr. WHEELER. In the 16 years I have been a Member of the Senate I have not known the Postmaster General of the United States to name appointees in a particular State over the objection of either one of the Senators. Perhaps it has been done; but, if so, it has never been called to my attention during my service in the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. I have known it to happen. The Senator from Nevada called attention to the Rublee case. I was in the Senate when that case arose, and participated in the debate. I think it was during President Wilson's time.

Mr. WHEELER. Was not the Rublee case a different sort of case? It was the case of an appointment on the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. NORRIS. No; it was an appointment on the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. WHEELER. It has always been recognized that a different rule applies to appointments outside the State from that applying to appointments within the State. The Senator will recall the Hanford MacNider case, which came before the Senate. That case came before the Senate when I first came here. Senator Brookhart was on one side, and Senator Cummins on the other. As I recall, Senator Brookhart objected on personal grounds to Hanford MacNider being appointed to some position. The Senate sustained Senator Brookhart as against Senator Cummins.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not have the same recollection as the Senator. I know there was such a case; and, of course, I was in the Senate when it occurred.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senate sustained Senator Brookhart.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not recall.

Mr. WHEELER. I can furnish the record.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator says it is true, I will accept his statement; but I have no recollection of it.

I do not wish to take up very much time. As I see it, no objection was made to Boyle by either Senator, personally or otherwise, until after the committee was in session and had commenced the hearing, when the junior Senator from Nevada announced that the appointee was personally offensive to him. Mr. Boyle has testified on the stand—and his statement is uncontradicted—that he supported the junior Senator from Nevada in the primary and general elections, and that he had no enmity whatever against him. However, it was evident from what Boyle said that the junior Senator from Nevada had some enmity against Boyle, because Mr. Boyle said the junior Senator from Nevada did not speak to him when he accosted him on the street.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Is not the Senator from Nebraska overlooking the telegram placed in the Record from the Governor of Nevada, who was formerly district attorney?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I have a distinct recollection of it.

Mr. McCARRAN. In the telegram the Governor states positively that Boyle stated to him in his office that Boyle and the junior Senator from Nevada were enemies.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. Boyle does not agree to that. That was long before this contest arose. I am assuming that whether he remembers it or not, probably both felt that they were enemies. In the campaign of the junior Senator from Nevada in the primary, which I understand was a bitter campaign, Boyle supported the junior Senator from Nevada. Then came the general election, and Boyle supported the junior Senator from Nevada for election. If they were enemies, it seems to me that such conduct certainly ought to have blotted out any enmity. Even if the Governor was correct in his telegram, it seems that such feeling did not control Boyle. He was broad-minded enough to forget it all and support the junior Senator from Nevada in the two campaigns, the primary and the general election.

Mr. WHEELER. What evidence is there that Boyle supported the Senator?

Mr. NORRIS. Boyle himself testified to it. There is an affidavit to that effect.

Mr. WHEELER. He said he voted for the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. No; he supported the Senator. There is an affidavit to that effect.

Mr. WHEELER. Any man may say, "I supported John Smith." Persons have told me that they supported me, when I happened to know, as a matter of fact, that the record showed that they did not vote for me. After election everyone says he supported us.

Mr. NORRIS. Perhaps it is all a lie. However, there is nothing to intimate that Mr. Boyle is not a very high-class man. He has testified that he got Farley to do some work in support of the junior Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. The attitude of Mr. Boyle is very much like the old jingle which runs something like this:

The devil was sick, the devil a monk would be;
The devil was well, the devil a monk was he.

When Mr. Boyle thought I would be defeated, he was against me; but when I was returned to the Senate, he said he was for me.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is now testifying. He had an opportunity to testify before the committee. This is the first time I have ever heard anything of that kind against Boyle. I was favorably impressed by him. In all the recommendations—and there are stacks of them—there is no intimation from anybody or any organization that there is anything wrong with Mr. Boyle. Everything points to the conclusion that he is a competent, able, efficient, and high-class man.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. May I read the evidence on that point?

Mr. NORRIS. Very well. If the Senator will wait a moment, I shall have concluded.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think this is a good place to read the evidence.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. PITTMAN. I read the affidavit of Al Marlia:

STATE OF NEVADA,
County of Washoe, ss:

Al Marlia, being first sworn, says: That he is a citizen of the United States and over the age of 21 years; that he regards Pat McCarran as one of his best friends, that he has known William S. Boyle for many years and regards him likewise as one of his best friends; that he personally knows that William S. Boyle supported Pat McCarran in the primary and general elections of 1938 and particularly among the Italian people whom Al Marlia was associated with as president of the Sons of Italy in Sparks, Nev.

AL MARLIA.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this the 22d day of March, A. D. 1939.

W. B. SHAVER, Notary Public.

Al Marlia is also president of the Catholic Society of Reno.

One other letter, and I shall have concluded:

BATTLE MOUNTAIN, NEV., April 30, 1939.

HON. KEY PITTMAN,
Chairman of Subcommittee, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: In regard to the controversy over Billy Boyle, I do not understand what it is all about, but on his behalf I want to say this. I was in Austin with him during the campaign and on several occasions due to the fact that he was appointed in Governor Carville's place as United States attorney.

In other words he was put on the spot as to what stand he was going to take in regard to Carville for Governor and McCarran for Senator. In every case he declared his unqualified support for Carville and McCarran. And in all cases stated he was ready to take the platform and campaign for them at any time.

In regard to his legal ability, I think Mr. Boyle takes his position ranking with the very best in our State. I am of the firm belief there is some gross misunderstanding as to Billy's loyalty to our party and to the candidates above mentioned.

I earnestly solicit your consideration of his past services before taking serious action, which I think would be gossip, in fairness to Mr. Boyle and the State Democratic organization.

Trusting you are well and with kindest regards from Mrs. Shovelin and myself.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) DAN F. SHOVELIN.

Everyone admits that Dan F. Shovelin is one of the most prominent men in the State. He is a friend of Boyle, a friend of the junior Senator from Nevada, and a friend of mine. None of us would question his word.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, just a word more.

Suppose we should reject the nomination. What position would we be in? The President would have to make another nomination. If we should reject this nomination because prior to this time the President was unfavorable to the reelection of the junior Senator from Nevada, would we not be in the same position when another nomination came along? If we should carry the thing to its logical conclusion, I think in effect we would be amending the Constitution of the United States and driving the President into a position in this case in which he would have to seek the favor of the Senator and obtain his consent before he could send to the Senate the nomination of any man who would stand any chance of confirmation if the Senator makes the same objection. Furthermore, if this objection is made because of what happened back in the campaign when it is said the President was trying to defeat the junior Senator from Nevada, will not the same principle apply to everybody else? If that is a good reason for making this objection to Boyle, it would be a good reason for making it against anybody the President might appoint. The result would be that we should get nowhere. We should get out on a limb where, if our action was correct and logical, we should have in effect, as I have said, amended the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. President, may I say just a word about this situation? It is embarrassing to me, of course. I am on the best of terms with the junior Senator from Nevada. I would not do him an injury for anything in the world. I have admiration for him, and it would be an easy thing to go along with him in this matter. I would not have gotten into the fight if I had not been pushed in so that I had to act officially. I have taken the same position ever since I have been in the Senate. I have opposed being governed by this kind of a rule. At least, I have taken the position that the ground of personal obnoxiousness would not control me. I have done so under both parties. I am now taking a position which does not differ from that which I have taken for nearly 30 years, ever since I have been in the Senate. It is sometimes embarrassing; but I feel, under my conscience, that it is the only thing I can do, and that any other rule, if carried to its logical conclusion, would make the President of the United States absolutely subject to the control of Senators. His hands would be tied, and he could not do anything unless his action was approved by the Senators from the State concerned.

It would not always happen that way, of course; but if we follow out the principle to its logical conclusion, I see no other outcome to it.

This sort of thing has occurred to me. Since I have been in the Senate men have been appointed to positions in my own State whose greatest qualification was that they hated me. A certain Member of the House was building up a machine all the time to get my place, and dozens and dozens of postmasters were appointed primarily on the ground that they would become part of the machine to fight me. I never once raised this objection, however. I never once said a word about the matter in the Senate. If in my judgment the nominees were qualified, I kept still and let their nominations go through. I tell you, Mr. President, life is too short to try to borrow trouble that we can just as well avoid, and we will feel better the next day after we have avoided it.

It seems to me we shall be making a great mistake if we let this rule control our official action, especially when, as I believe in this case, there is absolutely no ground for calling the rule into existence.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate only a minute, because the hour is late. I shall deal with the record and nothing but the record.

The record shows that on the 13th day of July 1938, during the primary campaign, the President's train passed through the State of Nevada. The secretary to the President was asked why the district attorney who had served so ably and well was not reappointed. Let me say that that district attorney had made a Nation-wide record, a record that extended from the Atlantic to the Pacific, because of the peculiar nature of the cases with which he was called upon to deal. The secretary to the President, Mr. McIntyre, replied that the district attorney was not reappointed to "take a slap at Pat," meaning the junior Senator from Nevada.

On the very same day the President in that train is alleged to have made, and does not deny having made, a statement which was published through the press of Nevada to the effect that he wanted me defeated. My opponent in the primary used the President's language and published it everywhere. Clippings from the newspapers of Nevada were sent by the chairman of the Democratic State committee to the President, with a letter asking him whether or not he had made the statement, and to that letter the President made no reply, save and except that he acknowledged the receipt of the letter.

Prior to that, and in June of the year before, it is asserted by the now Governor of Nevada, Mr. Carville, who was then United States district attorney, that Mr. Boyle made the statement to him, though it may be denied, that McCARRAN and he (Boyle) were enemies.

So I say there was a conspiracy in which my archenemy, the man who had declared to the district attorney of Nevada that he was my enemy, was selected for appointment over a man who was outstanding in the Nation—outstanding because of his ability as a prosecutor. He was laid aside; he was repudiated, as well as I was repudiated. It was done to take a slap at me, and Boyle entered into that conspiracy, and has carried it on ever since.

Oh, he may come before the Judiciary Committee and say now that he was my friend. If he had been my friend, he would have been my friend in 1937, when he declared to the now Governor of Nevada that he was my enemy. Men do not make such declarations unless they come from the heart. The bitterest enemy I had in Nevada was selected, for what reason? To take a slap at me at a time when throughout the length and breadth of Nevada there was being published the most scurrilous stuff, as it is set out in this record, attacking me because I knelt at a shrine to which my mother led me—attacking me on every ground that my enemies could think of—and this man now says he voted for me and worked for me. He had declared himself to be my enemy, and he never publicly opened his mouth during that campaign so far as I know.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to his colleague?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think the Senator will agree that Mr. Boyle testified that he took up the matter with the Knights of Columbus, of which he is an active member, and they thought it would be better not to answer the attacks.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. Boyle testified in substance as the senior Senator from Nevada states.

Let me clarify this matter with one sentence. There is no personal feeling between the senior Senator and the junior Senator from Nevada on this matter. Neither one of the Senators from Nevada recommended Mr. Boyle. We have gone through this entire matter and will go out of it just as we have done for 30 years, during which time I have supported the senior Senator from Nevada on the platform and otherwise. We will close this matter with no impairment of my regard and respect for the senior Senator from Nevada and his fairness. He has done his best here to sustain an unfortunate situation; but that does not take it out of my heart. You cannot force something down into the heart of a man when he knows that to confirm this appointment means a slap at me, as the secretary of the President declared.

I bring it home to the Members of the Senate who are present tonight. When will the hour come when you will stand as I stand here, and what will be your request on that occasion?

I ask only that this nomination be rejected.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, as a member of the committee I wish to say just a word in explanation of how I shall vote, which will be exactly as I voted in the committee.

In the committee I stated my views, which are the same as those which the Senator from Nebraska has so ably expounded this afternoon. It had been my intention to discuss the constitutional aspects of the situation somewhat at length, but observing the clock, I do not feel like going into the constitutional phases of the question at this time.

I wish to make the statement that my vote is based purely upon the constitutional phase of the question.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, so far as the constitutional question is concerned, I fully agree with the Senator from Nebraska; but I wish to call attention to the fact that the Senate should not confirm the nomination of this man, and I feel quite keenly about the matter because of similar situations which have arisen in my State.

After the court fight began, men came to my State and stated that the President had told them to do certain things, for instance, they said he told them to come out and "kick hell" out of me. That was never denied. In addition to that, they picked out and appointed to office a man who was running a newspaper, and who was constantly making vicious attacks against me. If they did that to me, they would do it to someone else.

If we confirm this nomination, I think it will be a reflection upon the Senate of the United States. It is not only a question of the particular individual who is here concerned, but it is the policy that is being adopted in some of these instances which should have our attention.

I submit that the Senate should not confirm appointees who are personally obnoxious to either of the Senators from a State, I do not care who the appointee is, or what he is. We should not confirm appointments if the appointments are personally obnoxious to either of the Senators; and, so far as I am concerned, that applies whether a man is a Republican or a Democrat. During the Hoover administration, the President was about to appoint a Republican from my State to the Interstate Commerce Commission. I went to the President and told him that the man was personally obnoxious to me, because he had personally attacked me, not only in campaigns, but in private conversations. Mr. Hoover refused to send the name in, notwithstanding the fact that he had intended to appoint the man previous to that time.

So far as I am concerned, if any Republican came to me in my State and said, "This man who has been appointed as a United States marshal, or to some other office, is personally obnoxious to me," I certainly would not recommend him, and I would not appoint him.

I think the Senate should not confirm this nominee, under the circumstances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMATHERS in the chair). The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask for a division on the vote.

On a division, the nomination was rejected.

R. 6977) to extend the time within which annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States may be commenced, for the year commencing at 12 o'clock m., July 1, 1938, which had been reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the word "meridian", to strike out "October" and insert "September", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That to comply with the provisions of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which requires on each mining claim located, and until a patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor to be performed or improvements aggregating such amount to be made each year, it shall be sufficient, for the year beginning at 12 o'clock meridian, July 1, 1938, if such work or improvements are in good faith commenced on or before 12 o'clock meridian, September 1, 1939, and prosecuted with reasonable diligence to completion.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have examined the bill and the report on it, and, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will read.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

REJECTION

Executive nomination rejected by the Senate June 29, 1939

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

William S. Boyle to be United States attorney for the district of Nevada.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JUNE 29, 1939

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, in whose presence the ages are hourless, out of the vastness which is Thine, impart unto us needful wisdom and understanding. We pray for that stillness of spirit which banishes before it feeble fears with their impotence and ills; O Soul of our souls, urge us upward that we may find ourselves in Thee. Thou who art Thyself the perfect reward of all toil, all sacrifice, and all agony, we beseech Thee to teach us the royal way of living by inspiring in us pure desires and from our lips clean words; forbid that we should take Thy holy name in vain. O Master of the hidden flame, let the measureless wings of Thy love and mercy shadow us and Thy Holy Spirit revive the deepest undertones of our immortal souls. In the Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FRAZIER, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2618. An act to extend the period during which direct obligations of the United States may be used as collateral security for Federal Reserve notes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 326. Joint resolution making appropriations for work relief, relief, and to increase employment by providing loans and grants for public-works projects for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5610) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, further insist upon the disagreement of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 59 to 71 inclusive, and 101, and agree to the further conference asked by the Senate, and that conferees be appointed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. COLLINS, CASEY of Massachusetts, MAHON, STEFAN, and CASE of South Dakota.

AMENDMENT TO HOUSE RESOLUTION 152

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Accounts I submit a privileged resolution for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 235

Resolved, That House Resolution 152 of the present Congress, adopted April 5, 1939, is hereby amended by striking out the sum "$25,000" where it appears in section 1 thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the sum "$125,000."

With the following committee amendment:

In line 4, strike out the figures "$125,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$100,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record by inserting in the Appendix a brief statement of H. B. Ellison, financial editor of the Christian Science Monitor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein an article written by Mr. Ray Smith, of Indianapolis, Ind.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein an article on the subject of neutrality.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record, and to include therein a short newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

THE N. L. R. A., THE N. L. R. B., AND P. W. A.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, may I have the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN], who expressed an interest when I spoke on June 23—RECORD, page 7798—and referred to the situation existing in Somerset County, Pa., where men asking for jobs on the construction of a turnpike which was being financed by State and Federal funds were asked to pay a union membership fee of $15 and monthly dues before they could be put to work.

My further statement was to the effect that men were not permitted to work on these jobs, although they were relief propositions, until they joined a union.

Some doubt was expressed as to the accuracy of my information, although the editorial put in the Appendix on that same day disclosed the facts to be as stated by me.

This morning by wire I learned that my analysis of the situation was correct. It appears that on June 15, John R. Frankel, general counsel of the A. F. of L. in Pittsburgh, gave a statement to the Associated Press to the effect that P. W. A. had refused to recognize the Somerset County Independent Construction Workers Association, the independent union, as a referral agency, and that contractors observing contracts with the Somerset County Independent Construction Workers Association would not be paid.

Further information discloses that at present, under one construction contract, men are denied work unless they belong to the A. F. of L. affiliate; that, under three other contracts, men are denied work unless they belong to the Somerset County Independent Construction Workers Association, the independent union. Work has not been started under any other contracts.

When the Associated Press statement came out, quoting Frankel as authority for the statement that the independent union would not be considered as a referral agency, the C. I. O. started an organizing campaign in an endeavor to oust the A. F. of L., and the independent workers were thus forced to form an independent union, which they did.

At the present time, it is apparent that no one can obtain work on the construction of this turnpike unless he belongs to some union, and the independent worker is thus caught between the jurisdictional fight between the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. and forced in self-defense into a position where he is required to pay either one or the other a membership fee and dues or form his own union and pay membership fees and dues.

It is my contention that men who work should be free not only to bargain collectively but to join or not to join a union and that at no time in this country of ours should any man be required to join any organization in order to obtain work upon a relief, or, for that matter, any other job.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I think it is improper that any worker should be obliged to pay before he is given a job.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then I hope the gentleman will join me in bringing the National Labor Relations Act out for amendment for, under the act as interpreted and administered by the Board, the independent worker, the employee who does not wish to belong to a union, is not protected.

One amendment proposed by me was to section 7 and added the four words, "or not to join", so that the provision read that an employee should be free to join or not to join a union, thus making it clear that coercion, intimidation, and force should not be used to restrict the freedom of any American citizen, nor to permit the levying of tribute upon the man who toils.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a prize-winning essay of 50 words written by an academy student of the Western Illinois State Teachers College, which is quite apropos the pending legislation.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial of a nonpartisan nature.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

RED INK DEFICIT OF THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I want to call your attention to the red ink that is being used by the United States Government. In 1933 we used red ink to the extent of $1,784,000,000; in other words, our deficit for the year was that amount. In 1934 we were in the hole to the extent of $2,895,000,000; in 1935 the red ink was to the extent of $3,210,000,000; in 1936 our red ink was to the extent of $4,550,000,000; in 1937 our red ink or deficit was to the extent of $3,143,000,000. Mr. Speaker, in 1938 we used red ink to the extent of $1,384,000,000, and in 1939 the red ink you will use to the extent of $3,500,000,000. Horrible, terrible, nation wrecking, unsound, and unwise.

Mr. Speaker, just think of the red ink that this New Deal administration has been using. Never in the history of the world have we ever approached such astounding figures. The situation is terrible and we should stop it immediately. Something should be done to change the rules, regulations, and laws of the New Deal or else America will be wrecked.

Mr. Speaker, I say to you, I say to the majority leader, and I say to the chairmen of the various important committees of this House you ought to stop the use of this red ink.

Mr. Speaker, I accuse this present administration of the same and worse administration of affairs, worse than that when President Roosevelt made the statement at Sioux City, September 29, 1932, and I quote the President:

I accuse the present administration of being the greatest spending administration in peacetimes in all our history: one which has piled bureau on bureau, commission on commission, and has failed to anticipate the dire needs or reduced earning power of the people. Bureaus and bureaucrats have been retained at the expense of the taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, that statement made by the President should make him bow his head in shame when he looks back over the years of his own administration. How a man can have such a change of heart certainly shows up the man; certainly he cannot have a defense for such a change. If he has, let him inform America why he has changed so completely from 1932 to 1939. He promised a balanced Budget by 1936. Instead of that we are worse off today and getting worse every day. We must get sound men at the head of our Government or we will fail as our Constitution provides, and in that event, God save America.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR WORK RELIEF—1940

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 326) making appropriations for work relief, relief, and to increase employment by providing loans and grants for public-works projects for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

There was no objection, and the Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia, Mr. CANNON of Missouri, Mr. LUDLOW, Mr. THOMAS F. McMILLAN, Mr. SNYDER, Mr. O'NEAL, Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia, Mr. TABER, Mr. WIGGLESWORTH, Mr. LAMBERTSON, and Mr. DITTER.

NEUTRALITY ACT OF 1939

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House Joint Resolution 306, the Neutrality Act of 1939.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion, may I say that both the gentlemen from New York [Mr. BLOOM and Mr. FISH] feel that in order to take care of some Members who desire to speak in general debate, general debate should be extended 30 minutes, 15 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] and 15 by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]; and I make that unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I would like to know the program for today? Is it the intention to press this bill to a vote tonight?

Mr. RAYBURN. It is.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. No matter what hour that may come?

Mr. RAYBURN. I would not want to stay here until 1 or 2 o'clock in the morning, but if we can reach a vote by 9 or 10 o'clock; yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM].

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House Joint Resolution 306, with Mr. COOPER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. IZAC].

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Chairman, many times you have appeared before various committees to find two or three Members sitting in the hearings, which were considered more or less important. I want to tell you that for 3 months your Committee on Foreign Affairs has held hearings on this important piece of legislation, and usually from 80 to 90 percent of the membership of that committee was present. That at least should give us credit for having given due consideration to the pending legislation.

The objectives of any neutrality act, of course, are first to take care of the needs of our own people. That was the paramount objective of our committee. Second, to treat all nations alike. Into the American mind has come the feeling that neutrality means keeping us out of war. Those terms, however, are not at all synonymous.

I want the Members to bear in mind as I go along with my remarks the fact that the American people are demanding some kind of neutrality legislation for the express purpose of keeping us out of war. I am convinced the only reason that the Committee on Foreign Affairs held hearings as early as 1935 and passed a neutrality bill was because of the demand of the American public that we have something more than international law on which to rely in case the world again catches fire as it did in 1914. The present act is an evolution of the act of 1935. We have placed in the act something which I opposed, and which I will always oppose, a partial embargo. Whenever you have a partial embargo it is bound to be unneutral because no two nations are situated alike. It is no fault of ours that they are situated differently. Some have means of carrying goods across the sea. Some rely for their defense, let us put it, on submarines. Some have raw materials and some have not. We cannot hope to equalize the assets and resources of foreign nations, but we can do this: we can treat them all alike. When you place in a neutrality act a partial embargo it is bound to make you take sides with this group or that, the "have" or the "have not" nations. The present act has a partial embargo in that it embargoes what my friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish] calls "lethal weapons," or death-dealing weapons. Do you realize there are seven categories of those weapons, seven different types of implements of war that have been placed in these lists that eventually have become embargoes against the belligerent nations?

There are only three types of nations and an embargo is bound to affect those three types differently. First we have the "have" nations. The "have" nations are those who do not lack for natural resources, raw materials. They are not bothered so much if we place an embargo on arms and ammunition because they have the raw materials with which to make them. Then there are the war-bent nations, the nations intending war or actually engaged in war, and you and I know what nations they are. Do you think for one moment they are going to rely for their implements of war on another nation's supplying them with the finished product? An embargo does not affect them. Is it not ridiculous to suppose that Germany today, with the Krupp works and the Skoda works, two-thirds of the great munitions works of the world outside of this country in their hands to produce implements of war and munitions of war, would depend on some other nation for its war supplies? Why, no. If I were a dictator, the first thing I would do would be to build arsenals to make my own implements of war.

So in the last analysis the only group of nations you are affecting by denying them implements of war is the poor, undefended, small nations like Holland, Belgium, and the Scandinavian countries, and those who are not in a position to have their own arsenals and munitions factories.

That is why I say the present act is unneutral to that extent. Do not misunderstand me. There are many fine things in the present neutrality act, such as the Munitions Board, which I am sure all people of whatever political belief are firmly convinced should remain in a neutrality bill.

To go further, many of you served in the Artillery during the World War. You know as well as I do that your 3-inch guns were the soixante-quinzes of the French Army. You did not use a single 3-inch gun from this country during the World War. Why? Because they made their own munitions over there. What did they need from us? The raw supplies, the materials which are not embargoed and never have been embargoed.

This is why I tell you it is so ridiculous to continue having in a neutrality act a partial embargo. It may sound appealing to the sensibilities of the American people to tell them that we will not ship death-dealing implements, but we give the other countries the molds and the machinery and the raw materials, the acids, the cotton, the things they must have to build the implements of war.

Forgetting nations, whom are you discriminating against? You are discriminating against our own people. You are saying to the agricultural districts, "Go ahead; ship your wheat and your cotton"; but to your people in the East, in the manufacturing districts, you are saying, "Oh, you cannot do that. You cannot manufacture those things and send them away to other countries because they will be used as death-dealing instruments."

When you send implements of war abroad great care is required in handling and in packing. A great amount of space is taken up in ships. For instance, when you manufacture bombs or ammunition of all kinds, such as smokeless powder, and send it across the seas, a very large amount of space is required. Most of these implements have to be crated. But when you send these nations the raw cotton and the scrap iron and the oil, they are shipped in bulk and require fewer bottoms to transport the amount required. You are giving them the very things they need, not the things they do not need.

So, I say to you that the thing we are fighting today—and this is the meat of the coconut—is the arms embargo. We want to eliminate section 1 of the old bill and substitute therefor a new section which has no embargo on war materials.

I have tried to be consistent about this proposition. I did not support that feature of the present act but accepted it because it was the best neutrality bill we could get, and the American people demanded a neutrality act. If you want to keep war away from this country when the whole world is afire, in my opinion there is only one way to do it, and that is why I am an isolationist. You must actually put an iron ring around the Western Hemisphere and keep everybody out of there, but it cannot be done according to international law.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from California.

Mr. IZAC. If you will embargo everything I will go along with you. If you find Europe afire and you want to stay out of it there is one way to stay out of it that I know of, and even that I would not guarantee; and that is, as I say, erect an iron ring around the Western Hemisphere and deny to the nationals the ships and implements of war, planes, submarines, and surface vessels the use of the waters of the Western Hemisphere. The State Department says you cannot do this, that the 3-mile limit is where they stay and that brings the war to our very borders. But it is far better to have an absolute embargo on all things than a partial embargo denying the very things that poor, defenseless nations must have for their own self-defense.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Could the gentleman tell us of any nation that is in the category he mentions, that is, buying any lethal weapons from us now? Is it not true that Holland and Switzerland and Sweden and the Scandinavian countries not only produce such arms as they need, but buy them in Europe from friendly powers?

Mr. IZAC. No; that is not entirely correct. Holland has an order here for planes at the present time and in case they are encroached upon by one of the aggressor nations the first thing they would have to do, of course, would be to come to us for arms and ammunition.

Let me now develop my thought further. We say the whole world is afire and most people are thinking in terms of the European continent. I am looking with my eyes in the other direction. There it is, Mr. Chairman, that trouble is brewing for the American people—in the Orient.

Today, how much do you suppose we ship to the Orient—even though we have the right because Japan and China are not supposed to be at war, the neutrality act is not invoked, and we have the right to send munitions of war to Japan? Why, she laughs at that. She says, "We make our own things over here. We have bought the machinery from America. We are making our own bombs." Would it not be ridiculous for them to send a ship, a great, big, 30,000-ton vessel of 18 knots speed, to come over here to get bombs and grenades? She gets the scrap iron and the oil and the other things she needs under the present Neutrality Act and those are the things she has to have to continue the war.

So I show you, as plainly as I can, that the present act does not mean we are neutral. It does not keep the nations of the world at peace, and therefore we are remiss in our duty to the American people in that we are deluding them that by having this feature in the act we are keeping the peace and keeping this Nation, incidentally, out of war. True, we have kept out of war, but it was as a result of the action of our President, in my opinion, who had all the opportunity in the world, if he wanted it, to get into a war, but he has not wanted to do so, and I bring that to your attention. He has not wanted to, much as you hear about our President leading us into a war. He has been in power here for 6 or 7 years and during all of that time nations were at war or were at each other's throats, both in the Orient and over across in Europe, and he never resorted to the slightest pretense of going into war. He tried to maintain the dignity of the American Republic in the eyes of the world, and I think he has done so, but here you are tying his hands in not giving to some of the smaller nations the right to defend themselves.

Mr. BREWSTER and Mr. KNUTSON rose.

Mr. IZAC. I yield first to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. In pointing out the supplies of raw materials shipped to Japan, is it not true that when we do not fabricate those munitions we do, to some extent, ship what becomes a part of its peacetime economy?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. IZAC. It is true that if we should have a boom in war supplies, it would undoubtedly have some effect in getting us into a war, as it did before. I think that was one of the reasons, but I tried to point out that there is not the slightest chance for the aggressor-bent nations, the war-bent nations, to have to come to us for those things. In another month England and France will be in practically as good position as the other axis powers in providing the munitions that they must have. We do not have to furnish that to them, but we do, and they expect it, have to send them the things to continue the war, and those, I maintain, are wheat, cotton, oil, scrap iron, and the things they make their munitions with.

Mr. BREWSTER. Does not the gentleman admit himself out of court? As I understand, there is nothing in this act to prevent the shipment of those things.

Mr. IZAC. That is why I say unless you go along on a complete embargo against the world at war you will not be able to stop that kind of shipment; but at the present time, this is what you have. You say you can send all those things, but do not send the finished product. Is not that foolish?

Mr. BREWSTER. Do you not conclusively prove that by not shipping munitions we will retain our peacetime economy, which is what upset us in the last war when we lost that?

Mr. IZAC. No. I should say the cotton growers and the wheat growers would still want to ship to a nation or nations at war, and they are going to continue to demand that they make their profit, cost what it may. That is what I object to.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. As I understand the gentleman's position it is this: If you are going to be effective and start on an embargo policy, you must embargo not only arms and munitions, but everything?

Mr. IZAC. Absolutely.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Embargo all or nothing?

Mr. IZAC. Absolutely. If we are to go on as a peaceful nation and take our place in the family of nations, the only thing you can do is to ship to everyone or permit them to come and get the goods, but do not attempt to have a partial embargo that takes sides. It is the most unneutral part of the present act.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield.

Mr. SHANLEY. As a matter of fact, if this peacetime idea is to prevail, we ought to stop the present boom in airplanes, and I do not think there is a man in the country, conversant with the conditions of our national defense, who would demand that we attempt to slow up the present airplane production in this country.

Mr. IZAC. No; because everyone feels that we need those ourselves. Of course, the Army and the Navy came before our committee and they pointed out that during the World War we could not depend on the Washington Navy Yard, the finest establishment of its kind in the world, but we had to send to all of our communities and get 90 percent of the guns and materials we had to have in the World War. When you limit the production of our factories so they cannot even have the experience, of course, it will be a factor in case this Nation is ever attacked; but I like to allay the fears of the American people. I see no reason why this Nation should go into war. If we adopt this bill—and I like the bill, because it is at least treating everyone alike—I say that we are giving notice to the world that we unfetter our hands, that we are masters of our own destinies; we will make the terms as we meet them, and in the meantime we will treat all nations alike. That is something you cannot say about the present act, and that is why I appeal to you to repeal the present provision of the embargo of arms.

Now, one other word and I am through. You are hearing so much about international law. Yes; international law is better than the present act, I grant you, but it is not better than we propose. International law you may come to, but I will tell you what the American people will tell you when you get back home, and probably before you go back home. If you throw out all neutrality legislation they will say, "You cowards. You threw up the sponge." That is what they will say. They want some kind of neutrality legislation, and they are entitled to it, and this bill, I believe, gives it to them. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL], one of the most sincere and consistent advocates of the cause of peace and keeping America out of war in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I do not question the motives of any Member of this Congress. It is not a question of motives, but it is a question of methods, whether we are going to involve ourselves in a foreign war or not, and because of that I must choose for myself and vote against this neutrality bill, because I believe it is a step leading, as it did in 1917, to have us unite with foreign countries in their foreign entanglements and their foreign wars.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I do not have the time now.

I quote from the Recessional, by Rudyard Kipling, a poem that you remember, too:

Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget.

As I have been listening during the past few months to the propaganda in the newspapers throughout the country and here on the floor of the House, it is the same thing I heard from 1914 to 1917. For that reason it seems to me that we have to watch our step and not forget the terrors of the World War. We must refuse to enter in any way into entanglements with foreign nations that tend to involve us with them in their wars.

Yesterday I attended a reception to Crown Prince Olaf, of Norway, and Crown Princess Martha; and again at the legation tonight we will have the privilege of meeting them. He is of Danish descent. She is of Swedish descent, and they represent Norway. I want to call the attention of the Members of this House to how those three Scandinavian countries settle their differences. Instead of flying at each other's throats they sat around the table in 1815 and again in 1907, using their reason, using their common sense and their patriotism, if you please, to settle their international questions and differences peaceably. [Applause.]

I believe we could and should do that in the world today. I am proud of my descent from that Norwegian ancestry that has the good sense to settle its questions peaceably.

We talk about the Prince of Peace. Let us follow His teachings. I respectfully submit that He was not only the most idealistic of men but the most practical. Caesar, Napoleon, the Kaiser strutted the stage of life for a brief time and naught but their evil deeds live after them. But the life and ideals and teachings of the Master has made possible the civilization of today. We need only to put them into practical use today to prevent war, to solve our economic problems, and right our social wrongs. Let us remember that if we want peace we must think peace and we must talk peace and we must act peace. The only way to do that is to refuse to have anything to do with those nations across the seas which want to entangle us in their methods of solving their problems, meeting vice with vice and force with force. [Applause.]

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman point out in what particular this bill causes any foreign entanglement?

Mr. HILL. It will aid Great Britain and France in getting implements of war, and this will lead us into war.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. The bill, as drawn, does not aid one nation more than another; it makes us neutral by providing for the treatment of all nations alike.

Mr. HILL. But we have the reality of some nations being able to come and get what they want from us, and other nations not. We must face facts as they are, and not a theory, as the gentleman would have us.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. The present law is unneutral; it is in conflict with international law. The pending bill is neutral and does not show partiality to any country.

Mr. HILL. We heard the same arguments in 1917. We should not heed them today.

My time is up. I close by calling attention to the fact that this distinguished Prince Olaf and Princess Martha are now in the gallery, and it is indeed an honor to have as our guests these representatives of such a real democracy as Norway. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield one-half minute additional time to the gentleman from Washington in order that the gentleman from Connecticut may ask him a question.

Mr. SHANLEY. As a matter of fact, did not those heroic Scandinavian countries pursue their neutrality only under a rigid adherence to international law? Is it not a matter of further fact of record that they asked the United States during the World War to champion the cause of the neutrals, as was done in 1780?

Mr. HILL. Yes; that is true; but it was real neutrality.

Mr. SHANLEY. After all, their ability to stay out of the last war was due to their adherence to the tenets and principles of international law.

Mr. HILL. But the principles we are following in the present bill would eventually bring us into alliance with Great Britain and France. This was the result in 1917. This will be the result now, in case of a world war, if we pass this legislation. I for one do not want to repeat that experience. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota, born in Norway and who has served in this House with great distinction for the last 24 years, the Honorable HAROLD KNUTSON.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, this is a great occasion, for we have the honor of having with us today the Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Norway, a fine and wholesome young couple. [Applause, the Members rising.] Norway is the land I am proud to call my native land.

As the preceding speaker so ably pointed out, the Scandinavian countries have set to all the world an example of neutrality that we might well follow. They have been able to maintain neutrality through stress and storm because they will to remain out of all entanglements with other countries. [Applause.] If we get into a future war, the chances are it will be because we want to get into it.

The measure now before the House, known as the Bloom bill, is one of the most important and, in my judgment, the most dangerous measure to come before this body in two decades. [Applause.]

Why its proponents should refer to it as a neutrality bill is beyond my understanding. It is anything but that. This is probably the first of a series of measures that will be presented as a prelude to our participation in the next war on the side of the "haves" as against the "have nots."

The Bloom measure is clearly designed to definitely align the American people and all their resources in manpower and material in the tense struggles now being waged across the seas to preserve existing boundary lines.

Mr. Chairman, the Roosevelt-Hull foreign policy closely parallels the foreign policy of Woodrow Wilson. Today we witness the same preaching of hatred, we hear the same false tales of atrocities, we have the same name calling by highly placed officials, such as polluted the air back in 1915-17. The same group of international bankers ply their disloyal and nefarious practices. The measure before us might have been written at 10 Downing Street or Quai d'Orsay. Certainly it is strangely deficient in its Americanism. The Bloom bill is loosely and poorly drawn. In places it is adroitly ambiguous and throughout it confers powers upon the President that do not square with American principles and traditions.

Let us briefly examine some of its provisions.

The Bloom bill in a number of places is susceptible of several interpretations. Under section 1 (a) the President is to issue a proclamation if he finds that a state of war exists between foreign states and that it is necessary to preserve the security or promote the peace of the United States or to protect the lives of citizens of the United States. In this proclamation the President is to name the states involved in the war. A proclamation might be issued under this section naming nations A, B, and C. Section 1 (b) provides that whenever the conditions which caused the President to issue any proclamation under the authority of subsection (a) have ceased to exist, he is to revoke the same. If nation A ceases to be involved in the war before the termination of such war, there is no way under the provisions of section 1 whereby the President can eliminate nation A from the application of the various provisions of the joint resolution without revoking the whole proclamation, as it might apply to B and C, who are still at war.

Under section 3 (a) it is unlawful for any citizen of the United States, or vessel flying the flag of the United States, to "proceed through any areas defined from time to time by the President to be areas of combat operations and so specified in his proclamation." Under the wording of the bill it would be unlawful for an American citizen or an American vessel to proceed through such area, but they could enter it and retrace their course without violating the law.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Does not the gentleman know that an amendment will be proposed to that section?

Mr. KNUTSON. I am discussing the bill we have before us. I do not know what amendments will be offered. I cannot, therefore, discuss something we do not have before us.

Under section 4 (d), the President is given power to prohibit the export of articles or materials "until all right, title, and interest therein shall have been transferred to some foreign government, agency, institution, association, partnership, corporation or national." Under international law, the status of goods as free goods—that is, goods entitled to neutral protection—has never depended on the nationality of the owner. It has always been considered to be the domicile of the owner that governs.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the Speaker's attention to the fact that his royal visitors have walked out on us.

Mr. KNUTSON. Never mind; sit down and be your age. This is too serious a matter to treat with levity—at least, it is to me.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Now that our visitors have left, I wish to remind the gentleman, in response to the suggestion made that we had to ship arms to protect Scandinavian countries, that Norway in May of this year bought the staggering total of $387.93 worth of war munitions.

Mr. KNUTSON. They will probably be used against poachers.

The author of this bill—I do not want to be personal, because I think he is not in the room [laughter]—in drafting subsection (d) of section 4, evidently labored under the delusion that international law can be set aside by domestic legislation.

As I read section 4, the President is empowered to impose sanctions and lay embargoes and I quote the language that confers such power:

(a) It shall therefore be unlawful except in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe, to export or transport, or attempt to export or transport, or cause to be exported or transported, from the United States * * * any articles or materials until all right, title, and interest therein shall have been transferred to some foreign government.

And so forth. Under this phraseology he can make the provisions of the law applicable to one nation or group of nations as against another nation or group of nations. That, in effect, gives him full power to impose sanctions and lay embargoes.

Under the second sentence of section 5 (a) all community chests, welfare organizations, hospitals, and other similar local charitable organizations are prohibited from soliciting contributions to relieve local human suffering and to meet local emergencies unless such solicitations have been approved by the President. There is nothing in this sentence to indicate that the solicitations which are prohibited are to have any connection whatsoever with the war described in the President's proclamation issued under section 1.

Section 10 (h) repeals the provisions of the act of August 29, 1916, relating to the sale of ordnance and stores to the Government of Cuba. The 1937 Neutrality Act carried an identical provision for repealing this act, so the act has already been repealed once and I see no necessity for going through the motions of repealing something that has already been repealed.

When the Bloom bill is taken up for amendment it is my purpose to offer a motion to strike out all after the enacting clause and to amend section 1 of the 1937 Neutrality Act. The effect of this amendment will be to amend the arms embargo provisions of the 1937 Neutrality Act and to leave all other provisions of that act now in effect, unchanged.

The amendment I shall offer reads:

Amendment proposed by Mr. KNUTSON to House Joint Resolution 306: Strike out all of section 1, and insert the following:

"That section 1 of the joint resolution of August 31, 1935 (Public Res. No. 27, 75th Cong.), as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"PROVISIONS RELATING TO WAR MATERIALS AND LOANS

"SECTION 1. (a) Whenever a foreign state is at war with any other foreign state, the President shall by proclamation so declare, and shall include in such proclamation the names of the states involved in the war, and, from time to time, by amendment to such proclamation include the name of any other state when it becomes so involved, or exclude the name of any state when it ceases to be so involved, as the case may be. A state named in such proclamation as involved in the war shall for the purposes of this section be deemed to be a state to which such proclamation applies.

"(b) Whenever a proclamation issued pursuant to subsection (a) is in effect, it shall, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3, be unlawful—

"(1) for any person to export from any place in the United States to any State to which such proclamation applies any arms, ammunition, or implements of war which the President by regulations issued under subsection (d) defines as such, or any articles or materials which the President by regulations issued under subsection (d) defines as capable of being converted into arms, ammunition, or implements of war, or

"(2) within the United States for any person, or either within or without the United States for any person who is a citizen of the United States, to make any loan, directly or indirectly, to the government of any state to which such proclamation applies, or of any political subdivision thereof, or to purchase or sell any obligation of any such state or political subdivision issued after the enactment of the Neutrality Act of 1939."

unless the President has by proclamation designated such state as having agreed to and as complying with a code of warfare acceptable to the United States.

"(c) Whenever a proclamation issued pursuant to subsection (a) is in effect it shall, notwithstanding any provision of subsection (b) or of section 3, be unlawful—

"(1) for any person to export from any place in the United States any arms, ammunition, or implements of war which the President by regulations issued under subsection (d) defines as such, or any articles or materials which the President by regulations issued under subsection (d) designates as capable of being converted into arms, ammunition, or implements of war, to any state that is in arrears or in default in payments due on any debt of such state to the United States; or

"(2) within the United States for any person, or either within or without the United States for any person who is a citizen of the United States, to make any loan, directly or indirectly, to the government of any state or of a political subdivision of any state that is in arrears or in default in payments due on any debt of such state to the United States, or to purchase or sell any obligation of any such state or political subdivision issued after the enactment of the Neutrality Act of 1939.

"(d) As soon as practicable after the enactment of the Neutrality Act of 1939, the President shall by regulations define every article and material which constitutes arms, ammunition, or implements of war, and every article and material which is capable of being converted into arms, ammunition, or implements of war and shall not amend or modify such regulations during any period during which any foreign state is at war with any other foreign state.

"(e) Whoever violates any of the provisions of this section shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $250,000 or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.

"(f) As used in this section "citizen of the United States" in the case of a person other than an individual means a person organized under the laws of the United States, the laws of any State of the United States or any political subdivision of any such State, or the laws of any Territory, district, or possession of the United States."

"SEC. 2. This joint resolution may be cited as the 'Neutrality Act of 1939'."

In short, my amendment would bar all sales of war material to such belligerent nations as refuse to subscribe to a code of civilized warfare, or who are in default in their debts to us.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield one-half minute additional time to the gentleman from Minnesota and I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. FISH. I do this simply for the purpose of saying to the Committee that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] is the only Member of the House left who voted against the entrance of this country into war in April 1917 and still is one of the most valuable Members of the House. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] such time as he may desire.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, it is my judgment, and I think my judgment will be concurred in by everybody who has been attendant upon these debates, that these have been the most interesting and the most elucidating debates we have listened to in this session of Congress; they have been really brilliant and entrancing. I find myself, however, although I have listened assiduously and religiously to both sides, being drawn back irresistibly, as a magnet draws steel to itself, to the position that this is in effect not a neutrality bill. I shall feel constrained, consequently, to vote against it. [Applause.]

In the first place neutrality is a state of mind. Neutrality is a mental process. We are neutral or nonneutral depending on the circumstances of the occasion. There is an element of right and justice that governs our neutrality. Complete neutrality cannot be legislated. In order to secure just neutrality it would be necessary for us to wait until the occasion presented itself. It is not to be claimed that the present Congress is more capable or more patriotic than future Congresses. Neither is it to be claimed that the present Chief Executive is more capable or more patriotic than a future Chief Executive may be. It is safe to assume that the present Chief Executive will be as capable and patriotic in 6 months from today as he is today. Eight weeks ago and 8 months ago the war clouds were hovering close over the world. They have lifted somewhat now. We are not involved now with any country in such a way as that we irresistibly may be drawn into any world conflict. We are in a good position now to maintain our neutrality. The Congress of the United States is the mouthpiece of the people. The Constitution gives to Congress the right to declare war because Congress is the mouthpiece of the people. When Congress grants through statute any additional powers to the President or anyone else Congress to that extent and in that respect surrenders that much of its power and places that much restriction upon itself. To illustrate this I need only to point out the difference between the situation that arose when Italy waged its war against Abyssinia and annexed that country, and the situation that arose between the contending groups in Spain, and the situation which arises from the war now being waged between Japan and China. In the war between Abyssinia and Italy we were not vitally concerned economically or racially. Our interest was that we disliked to see the liberty and freedom of one country invaded without right by another. In the contest between the different groups in Spain we were not nationally interested except as these groups represent different political and religious views and except as they were encouraged or discouraged by other European powers. In the contest between China and Japan our interests would not be the same as in a contest between Great Britain and Germany. Why, therefore, commit ourselves to any rule of conduct until we know the nations to be involved in any certain contest, and the principles at stake and the object sought to be attained. As I have already stated, there are many factors that must be considered in determining whether one should remain neutral or whether he should assume an active affirmative position or a passive, retiring position.

I therefore feel that since we are at peace with the world our best policy is to remain at peace and do nothing that can be construed by any nation as an unfriendly act or to be construed by any other nation as an unduly friendly act. Of course, I do not mean that we should retreat into a complete state of isolation. My position is that we should await emergencies and meet them in a straightforward way when they rise up to confront us. Our people and those in charge of our Government are intelligent and patriotic. We have the financial and physical power to protect ourselves, if necessary. We have heretofore shown to the world that we are not imperialistic and do not covet the lands or possessions of any other nation. We have the assurance that the American people are almost unanimously opposed to war. With all these factors contributing together we have every reason in the world to retain our present attitude and to await developments.

This bill that we have for consideration before us could well be postponed until a later date. But since it is before us we must dispose of it.

In the first place this bill does not in any way deal with the subject of embargo on arms and munitions. That provision of the law was allowed to lapse and become ineffective by expiration of the time limit in the law and while until a few months ago our would-be neutrality law carried in it a provision against the sale and shipment of arms and munitions to belligerent nations, this bill studiously avoids any consideration of that proposition. It should be amended to contain such a provision.

If I were to be compelled to lay down two propositions upon which the American people are almost unanimously agreed with reference to this matter of war and neutrality they would be—

First. The American people are opposed to war.

Second. The American people believe that the sale of munitions and arms to belligerent nations will more quickly contribute to war than any other one cause.

I am therefore opposed to the Bloom bill because it will increase the probability of our getting into war by giving the President unreasonable authority, and I am further opposed to the bill because it does not contain a provision providing an embargo against the shipment of arms and munitions.

One need not be especially learned in statesmanship or international law, or in Government finances, to know that there is no quicker way to get into a war than for a nation to assist one or the other of the combatants by furnishing that country with guns and war materials with which to prosecute more vigorously its side of the controversy. The only thing to be gained by our sale of munitions is that it might give to our people more employment and give to our manufacturers the chance to earn more money. I recognize the fact that there is dire need for both of these conditions in our country but still you cannot weigh human lives and human suffering in the same scales with dollars. We can live without the dollars, as we have been doing through the severe depression in which we have found ourselves in the last 6 years, but we should be careful when we make any bargain or assume any obligation that must be paid off in human lives and human suffering.

Personally, as I have already stated, I should prefer that we had not taken up the consideration of this bill at this time, but since we have taken it up, I shall support any amendments that will tend to defer and delay any final action and any final commitment by our country into any set and definite program. If an amendment to that effect shall fail then it shall be my purpose to support the inclusion of a clause into the bill to provide an embargo against the sale of arms and munitions of war.

All through this bill there are provisions that give the President additional power. These sections giving the President additional power are honestly drawn and I do not want to charge anybody with any ulterior motives. I do not want to charge the President or the Secretary of State with anything but the highest motives. Many of our great Presidents have been mistaken and have honestly advocated policies that would, if accepted, have been disastrous to the Nation. Even the youngest of our membership can remember the issues of the Presidential election of 1920. We were just fresh out of the War. President Wilson, of whom all fair-minded men will say that he was an able and a patriotic man, had a vision of world peace. He was supported in his views by many of the finest people in our country. They thought that the World War had been waged to make the world safe for democracy. Time has proven that Mr. Wilson was wrong in his position. Mr. Wilson was opposed by a few members of Congress who were at first severely criticized. However, when the country awakened, the weakness in the position of President Wilson was soon discovered. He had misjudged the temper of the people of Europe. He forgot that they had been in a state of declared and undeclared warfare for a thousand years. He had forgotten the racial and political and financial prejudices of those countries. He had thought that the millenium had come when as a matter of fact it was just the lull between one storm and another. The political parties in 1920 took up the issue as to whether we should enter the League of Nations and whether we should involve ourselves in such a way as to be tied up with the jealousies and intrigues of Europe.

When our people had a chance to speak through the ballot box they spoke emphatically and we stayed out of the League of Nations. The people were right then and are equally capable of being right at this time. But had we entered the League of Nations, where would we be today? We would be the big policeman for the world until we had exhausted our heritage and all our wealth and until we were on the common level with the rest of the dissatisfied nations of the world. It is a sad fact that practically every nation in the world today is dissatisfied. Many of them are in war or on the verge of war. In our own great country our people are terribly dissatisfied. They feel the pinch of want and the lack of work. They feel that their anchorages have been pulled up and that they are drifting. They feel that no more can it be held that no one is a true American who does not earn his bread by the sweat of his face. They feel that many a good American is denied this privilege now through no fault of his own. Once he could get a job. Now he must accept charity. In the face of all this unrest and uncertainty our country is in better shape than any of the rest from one standpoint alone and that is from the standpoint of peace. Why, therefore, should we risk this one outstanding blessing that we enjoy as against most of the world?

This proposed bill grants to the President many rights and privileges which although he may assume them with the most sincere purpose he cannot be infallible and he may in an effort to carry them out inadvertently and irresistibly involve us in a conflict with other nations.

Take, for instance, the provision where he is given the power to define areas through which American ships and American people should not travel, and provisions where he is given authority to provide regulations for shipments of goods and materials, and provisions where the President may prescribe rules and regulations with reference to the usages of ports. These provisions call upon the President to deal with delicate situations that are clearly outside the field of diplomacy. They deal with business and hard-headed and selfish business practices. I have always felt that in matters of diplomacy the President and the Secretary of State should be given great leeway of operation. I have always been willing to trust them regardless of politics. In considering matters of diplomacy, the principal qualifications that a President and Secretary of State should have are ability and patriotic integrity. I have no desire to impute the lack of either of these splendid qualifications to either our President or our Secretary of State, but I do say that when the President is given rights and privileges beyond his sphere by the Congress there is danger that Congress and the people will maintain that the action of Congress, while originally only the grant of privileges, was in effect a duty to be performed, a harmless grant may become a dangerous duty. In other words, it is hardly fair to the President for Congress to load him down with powers and privileges and then hold him responsible for duties and performances.

We, the Congress of the United States, are by the Constitution given the privilege of representing the people in matters pertaining to a declaration of war. This privilege carries a profound duty in that to us also and alone is given the responsibility of saying whether and when our people and our country shall be thrust into a war. I do not want to shift that responsibility. I am willing to assume my part of it and to go through with it, as I think my constituents would want me to do. I know that my constituents are opposed to war and would sanction war only as an extreme case to protect and maintain the dignity and honor of our country and her people. I know that my constituents are opposed to any steps that will endanger the lives of our young men for the sake of an opportunity to increase the business activities of a nation however badly these business activities need to be increased.

LXXXIV—520

I hope that when our deliberations are concluded and the final vote has been taken on this bill and the amendments thereto, that we will have done what the American people think should be done. As one humble Member of this great body, that shall be my purpose. I shall do nothing that will tend to involve us in a war that can be averted. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to another distinguished Member from the State of Ohio [Mr. BENDER] 5 minutes.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, under this bill the Congress is reduced virtually into nothingness insofar as its ability to control a war is concerned. Under the Bloom bill so many things could be done by the President before declaring a war that it would be virtually impossible to keep us out of war. I would like to see the whole "bloomin'" business thrown into the ashcan, all of it except section 16, the repeal clause. The best way to take American politics out of international affairs is to defeat this measure. [Applause.] The future of our American youth is on top of American soil and not under European ground. During the past year when we have had discussions and rumors of war in this country, the country has had the jitters as never before. I am in favor of relieving the mental anguish the people of this country experience every time there is a rumor of war or a discussion of war on the floor of this House or anywhere else in Washington.

We send our missionaries to China to convert the heathen Chinese and our war materials to Japan to mow them down. There are throughout the land thousands of missionary societies that are knitting, sewing, and giving dimes in order to send missionaries over to China and elsewhere. What are we doing here? What is happening in Washington? We are sending war materials to Japan or permitting war materials to be sent, or closing our eyes to the fact that they are being sent over there in order to mow down the Chinese. What is the use of singing "From Greenland's icy mountains, from India's coral strand" and then vote to give one man unlimited power to determine whether or not we shall be plunged into a conflict that will break down all the Christian principles that we have been taught throughout many generations?

There seems to be a disposition to decide the next election with a lot of phony statements on this war business. If our sensibilities cannot be shocked by the atrocities committed in China, Austria, Ethiopia, Albania, and Russia, and if these are not sufficient to provoke war, then why all this conversation about neutrality? Why present legislation kidding our people into believing that any law will be sufficient to make the world safe for democracy?

What does this bill say regarding a civil war in any other country?

Mr. Chairman, I want to vote against this bill and make it easier for Roosevelt to go back to Georgia this fall. It seems to me that the President is occupying much of his time setting up straw men to knock them down again. The President spoke before Munich, and Mr. Hitler took Sudetenland with honor. Later Mr. Hitler raped Czechoslovakia and earlier he had raped Austria.

The best way for America to proceed is to set its own house in order. Let us have an example of good government at home.

The other day I received in the mail copy of a sermon delivered by Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick on the subject of Dare We Break the Vicious Circle of Fighting Evil With Evil? I commend it to every Member of Congress, and I shall ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD.

No matter how sincere may be the motives which underlie the administration in sponsoring the proposed neutrality act, everyone of us must analyze its provisions microscopically to discover whether or not they will keep us out of war.

We have already gathered an abundance of evidence to indicate that our President is definitely allied with the "internationalists" in the conduct of our foreign affairs. Whatever may be the justification for his position, this much is certain. We run greater risk of placing our necks in a noose if we run around with lawbreakers than if we steer absolutely clear of them.

I object to any foreign policy which places vast powers in the hands of one man whose discretion is almost absolute. No matter who may sit in the White House, it is dangerous for a nation of 130,000,000 people to entrust its destiny in the hands of one man in times like these. In the last few years, we have witnessed an amazing demonstration of presidential astigmatism. Our President was able to see a war in Spain, but he is still utterly blind to the war which has been raging in China for 3 years.

Under the proposed Neutrality Act there is no provision whatever to keep us from taking sides in a civil war. What kind of neutrality is this? If we had shipped armaments to either side of the Spanish conflict, would we have had the right to claim ourselves as "neutral?" If revolutionary struggles break out anywhere, the proposed law would make an absolute mockery of neutrality.

In the last analysis the problem raised by the administration becomes simply this: Shall the President of the United States have authority to determine the position of our Nation in time of war? Shall we vest in him the power to control our foreign policy so completely that the ultimate decision of war or peace is no longer open for discussion? All of us know full well that a President, in whose hands we place the conduct of our international relations, is to all intents and purposes the most powerful man in our land. Given the right to do as he chooses with our armed forces, moving the Navy about from hemisphere to hemisphere, his prerogatives are all but royal whenever there is danger of an international conflict.

Under our Constitution, the White House is already the dominant influence in every question of foreign affairs. But the Bloom bill extends this influence still further. It offers the Presidency almost unlimited powers.

The President alone would have power to proclaim the existence of a war and to designate the nations involved. To judge by our past experiences, we might well find the powers of Germany, Italy, and Japan ranged in a war against Britain, France, and Russia, with our White House solemnly proclaiming that two of the six nations named were not engaged in a "war." Ridiculous, you may argue, but surely it is no more absurd than the distinction drawn by our President in labeling the Spanish conflict a "war" and designating the Sino-Japanese struggle as something else.

The point must be clear. No President should be given the unrestricted authority to make so momentous a decision; and surely it is dangerous to entrust to our present President the determination of a "war" in the light of his own actions in the recent past.

But the tale does not end here. Under the measure favored by the administration, the President having perceived the existence of a "war" would then have the right to declare it unlawful for our citizens to travel on vessels of the warring nations, "except in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe." From the White House would come a description of "areas of combat operations" through which our people, and the vessels owned by citizens of the United States as well, could not travel "except under such limitations as the President may prescribe."

Once the war was established to the President's satisfaction, it would be unlawful for any person in our country to sell, buy, or exchange securities issued thereafter on behalf of any of the governments named as engaged in the conflict, except that the President could make an exception in favor of commercial credits and short-term obligations of a peaceful nature.

Exports of goods to any belligerent state would be banned "except in accordance with rules" which the President might again fix. The use of American ports as bases of supply could be restricted by the President. He might forbid submarines and armed merchant vessels of belligerent nations to enter our harbors; and a good many unpleasant international possibilities could rise here from the presence of machine guns, small arms, and the like, on any vessel.

Running through the entire proposal is the underlying current of dependence upon the judgment of the President. Once more the people of our Nation would be surrendering their right to determine their own affairs. Congress, which has just recaptured the constitutionally granted privilege of legislating for our people, would be in effect surrendering it once more to the White House.

Granting that under present world conditions we must have a flexible foreign policy, we cannot afford to let the determination of that policy rest in the hands of one man, no matter how wise or how benevolent we may regard him. And when we have received abundant evidence casting doubt on both his wisdom and his benevolence, we must make certain that our fate does not depend upon his incalculable whim.

The President speaks of our new frontiers in France. We had a frontier in France 20 years ago and it availed us nothing. I would like to see our frontiers kept over here. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER].

AMERICA WANTS GENUINE NEUTRALITY

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I will not attempt to analyze the provisions of this so-called Bloom neutrality bill, to which I object. I take this opportunity to put myself unequivocally on record as being for genuine neutrality.

There is no question about the fact that the American people want genuine neutrality. The people of this country do not want our men and our money to be shipped across the seas again. They do not want our youth to again shed their blood on foreign soil in another futile attempt to make the world safe for democracy. We did not make the world safe for democracy by going into the last war. We would not make it safe for democracy by going into another war. Our big job, as I see it, is to stay at home and make America safe for democracy. Let us solve our own domestic problems and get back onto the road to normalcy and prosperity. If other nations want to indulge in armed conflict, let them do so.

There is only one way to be neutral, Mr. Chairman. That is to be neutral. This Bloom bill is not a neutrality bill in any sense. It is a bill designed to place in the hands of the Chief Executive the power to plunge this Nation into war.

By no stretch of the imagination can we claim that this administration is neutral. It has chosen sides in the conflict in China; it has chosen sides in the disputes of Europe. To give the President the discretion of deciding when an armed conflict constitutes a war; to give him the power to invoke economic sanctions against one side and in favor of the other, particularly in view of his own declarations on the subject of foreign disputes, is, in my opinion, to give him the power and the discretion to render this country unneutral any moment he chooses and to involve us in another world conflict which would complete the ruin of our civilization.

I agree with those who have stated that in passing on this legislation we are passing on a question of war or peace.

The countries of Europe by reason of their peculiar problems, which are not our problems, have for centuries followed the policy of balance-of-power politics. Great Britain has traditionally been in the position of standing in the middle of the seesaw board of European power politics for the purpose of maintaining a balance of power which would be of advantage to herself and whatever allies she happened to have at the moment. In order to maintain this balance of power England has had to dominate the seas. She has had to maintain a navy sufficiently powerful that no other nation or group of nations could hope to vanquish it.

History does not disclose that either England or France has been free from aggression themselves. Quite to the contrary. To maintain the balance of power England has moved first to one side and then the other of the political seesaw of Europe, always with an eye to her own profit and advantage.

I am not quarreling with Great Britain's position. But I do not want England and France to inveigle the United States into the position where Uncle Sam will be occupying that precarious position in the middle of the political seesaw board of Europe.

It seems to me that if we would adopt a similar cash-and-carry policy, together with a refusal to lend money to either belligerent when a conflict is on, we could remain neutral, stay out of war, and attend to our business at home.

I have no objection to embargoes of arms and munitions whenever two or more nations engage in armed conflict. While I doubt somewhat the efficacy of such embargoes they will certainly not get us into trouble if they are impartially invoked and applied.

I freely admit that a cash-and-carry policy, together with a policy of impartial embargoes on munitions of war and on loans to any belligerent, will operate to the disadvantage of small nations as against large nations. Although I sympathize entirely with China, I do not close my eyes to the fact that the cash-and-carry policy and the embargo on loans and munitions would operate to the disadvantage of China and to the advantage of Japan. On the other hand, the same policy would operate to the advantage of England and France and to the disadvantage of Germany and Italy.

But in such a case we would be neutral. If we expect to maintain neutrality in any sense of the word, then we must expect to stand aside while weak nations of Europe may be the victims of aggressor nations.

Regardless of economic sanctions or anything else, how can we imagine that we could have helped Ethiopia or Albania in any way whatsoever short of sending men and money across the sea to defend them against Italy? How could we have rendered any assistance to Czechoslovakia short of sending men and money across the seas to oppose Hitler and his Nazis?

If we are going to undertake to police the world and to uphold a balance of power in an effort to prevent the historic aggression of some nations against other nations, then we had better look the facts frankly in the face and prepare to maintain an army and navy equal to the combined navies of Germany, Italy, and Japan; and we had also better face the fact that we will be in war up to our ears and over our heads before a very long time has passed.

I am not willing to undertake to have America police the world. I am not willing to undertake the role of becoming protector of every small nation on the globe. I am not willing to climb up on the political seesaw board of Europe and endeavor to maintain a precarious footing while straddling the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans at the same time.

All of the countries of Europe, not the least of whom have been Italy and Germany, have sent us millions of worthy citizens who have helped to build this Nation. Our population is made up of peoples from all the other nations. We have an ocean which separates us from the Orient on the one side and from a quarrelsome and troubled Europe on the other.

We have friendly neighbors to the north of us and friendly neighbors to the south of us. Let us maintain our position at home and leave the playing of power politics to others abroad.

Insofar as the Monroe Doctrine is concerned, I would uphold it at whatever cost and by whatever means may be necessary.

As to any threat of any nation, or group of nations, invading this country and seeking to exact tribute from us, I would say fight to the last drop of blood. I do not, however, believe that any combination of nations within the next half century could even contemplate moving against the United States either through South America, or on our west coast, or from the north.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I say if we are going to enact a neutrality bill, let us have a genuine neutrality bill. Let us not be deceived by a name or a title into voting for this Bloom measure, which is the antithesis of a neutrality bill, and which, in my opinion, if passed, will expose us to the perils of becoming involved in foreign wars. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. YOUNGDAHL].

Mr. YOUNGDAHL. Mr. Chairman, practically every speaker on this bill has denounced war. Practically every speaker has voiced America's desire for peace.

Then why the opposition to the embargo on arms to warring nations? In my opinion, there can be only two reasons; either they desire to favor certain nations over others or else they are concerned with the profit motive. The American people are opposed to both these reasons.

Our experiences in the last war should teach us the fallacy of favoring one nation against another. America cannot pick sides in any war and long remain out of it herself. If America is to favor one nation against another, it will only be a matter of time until we too are in war.

If we are opposed to war in America, and not one Member of this House would say that he favors war, then we should be just as strongly opposed to war in any other part of the world. Shipment of munitions and war material to any warring nation can only aid in the continuation of war. Surely the events of the past year, when our country has been placed on record as favoring certain nations against others by the executive department, should make us move with care in the granting of any further discretionary powers to that department.

American mothers do not want their sons sent to war. Neither do they want the sons of Chinese mothers, of Czech mothers, or any other nations sent to war. American mothers want peace—peace not only for America but peace for the entire world.

If we pass the so-called Bloom bill, the President will have the power of continuing his campaign of favoritism, which, in my humble opinion, can only lead us into war.

Although our last neutrality bill provided that where a state of war exists no munitions nor war material may be supplied, yet we are told by good authority that America is Japan's chief source of the war material she has used in her war on China.

Has it occurred to you that Japan has been one of the most flagrant violators in their treaties with other nations? Do you believe that a nation which violates its word, its promises, and agreements is entitled to help? Do you believe that we should help such a nation against the very nation toward which we have assumed the role of big brother?

If we are to have neutrality, then let us have a strict neutrality. Let us mind our own business. We are not minding our own business by picking sides in someone else's quarrels.

In short, the Bloom bill, in my opinion, gives too much discretion to the Chief Executive, who already has shown his partiality in European and Asiatic affairs. It does not provide for a mandatory embargo to all warring nations. It does not permit America to mind her own business but makes certain that we will pick sides in every quarrel that arises.

The Bloom bill, in my opinion, would throw America into the thick of impending fights. My vote will never be cast for that kind of neutrality.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY].

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, at the outset I want to pay tribute to a fine American, the ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]. [Applause.] I think he has done a fine job in keeping this question alive, not only during this debate but from the time he took off his uniform as a distinguished soldier in the last World War. He has talked on more than a thousand platforms in this country. I shared these platforms with him many times, and I have never found the day or hour in his life that he has not kept this question before the Nation, from a nonpartisan viewpoint, if you will, as a great American, determined no American boy ever again die on a foreign battlefield. As a Member on this side of the aisle, I have disagreed with him, so have my colleagues, on partisan matters. He has been a sincere partisan, but on this question he has been a nonpartisan. I salute my distinguished colleague. I want to ask the Members of the Congress to approach this question upon a nonpartisan basis.

I have heard statements made in the debate that "Professor Who-Is-This" and "Professor Snooper" have said that the golden age has arrived, we cannot be isolationists any longer, which means that we have to get into every fight to save the munition makers and the international bankers. That is the theory upon which their arguments are predicated. I fail in this debate up to now to see anyone giving us the information on the question, "How does labor stand?" How does the working class stand? Who speaks for them? That is the class that will have to furnish the cannon fodder—the youth of America—to fight a war perhaps once again on the pretense that we must save the world for democracy.

I tried to find labor's attitude on this legislation, and I did find out. I got in touch with Mr. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, a Democrat, if you will, a friend of mine of 25 years' standing, and a friend of Franklin D. Roosevelt. I want to read to this Congress what he has to say on this important subject. This is a statement he made before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in April of this year:

The American Federation of Labor has endorsed the principles upon which the Neutrality Act was based, that a neutral nation has obligations as well as rights and that the munitions industry is a matter of public concern. We do not believe that this is the time to make changes in this law, for any change in this legislation might be interpreted as a change in our foreign policy. So essential is it for our country to do its part in maintaining peace between nations that in my opinion we should do everything possible to avoid raising any doubt as to our wish to remain aloof from the controversies of other countries.

The workers of the United States want peace. We went through the World War, doing our full part. The lessons of that experience have convinced us that world problems can be solved only under conditions of peace and through the instrumentalities of peace. The working people of this country are firm in their desire to avoid entanglement in the intrigues of nations seeking aggrandizement of territories or protection of the gains of former aggression.

We believe that the present neutrality law has served the interests of peace between nations and that it should be continued as it was enacted in 1937.

American labor is disturbed by obvious efforts to promote war hysteria. We cannot forget the loss of life and manhood when a generation of young manhood was conscripted for the World War. Labor throughout the length and breadth of the United States is opposed to sending another generation into the trenches of war, and we urge that every possible safeguard be taken to avoid anything that would needlessly contribute to a war development.

This is no time for experimentation. Labor, therefore, urges continuance of a measure that has been helpful in the hope that peace may be served.

Again, in May of this year, over his signature as editor of the American Federationist, Mr. Green states:

Our political institutions are controlled by democratic ideals and have grown out of a deep-rooted desire for freedom. Independence from foreign control and the principle of representation made possible the development of political democracy within our boundaries. As a new and relatively unimportant Nation, we were not concerned with the struggle for territorial expansion and aggrandizement that harried the Old World. Of world powers, we asked only to be let alone to develop in peace and freedom. In our own affairs we have found that political democracy must go hand in hand with economic democracy. Doubtless this is a general principle.

In our Federal Government it has seemed wise to establish and maintain a balance of power between the Executive and Congress. We have tried to maintain the same balance in the field of foreign policy with Congress deciding policies, and the President dealing with specific situations in accord with policies outlined. The Neutrality Act of 1937 is based on this principle, and to change it at the present time is to create an apprehension that we are changing our foreign policy. Any change may add to war fears. American labor wants peace, not war. We therefore ask that the present Neutrality Act be continued in effect.

In the present difficult international situation, strong pressure has been behind a proposal to increase the President's authority and responsibility under the Neutrality Act. The purpose is to make possible quick and efficient action in crises. To follow this course is to adopt the procedure of foreign countries and to abandon the safeguards of our traditional democracy without assuring peace in the world.

For centuries the nations of Europe have relied upon force in their relations with other countries. Power politics still dominate this field. Some countries have their spheres of influence defined and established, others are less fortunate or more recently set to the task of developing power. Foreign influence rests on territories and armaments. If the United States is asked to participate in European matters, we must come into the zone of power politics after policies have been determined, commitments have been made, and a crisis reached. Our interference would mean nothing for peace. The aggressor nation of one generation defends the status quo of the next.

The welfare of the United States is tied up with the progress of democracy in living, and we have found that political democracy is inseparable from economic democracy. Any basis for co-operation between the United States and other governments for world peace must be in accord with these basic principles so that there might be mutual understanding and joint action for industrial and political democracy for all nations.

We are not insensitive to the struggle going on in the world, but amending our Neutrality Act in such a crisis would not express our desire for world peace but would be interpreted as partisan action. American labor is profoundly concerned for peace and for developing the practices and agencies for maintaining peace between nations. In the light of World War experience we hold that war settles nothing and that future generations should not be asked to serve in the trenches. The Neutrality Act of 1937 is a defense against entanglements in the disputes of other countries.

That is the voice of labor, speaking for millions of organized workers, and I might say, yes, for the unorganized workers of America. Heed that voice and heed it well. "No change in our neutrality policy." That is what Mr. Green says. I wanted to be sure of that and I called him by telephone.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEENEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. Does the gentleman know of any group that is asking for this bill? Does the gentleman know of any farmers who are asking for this bill or any businessmen who are asking for it?

Mr. SWEENEY. I can speak only from my own experience, that I have never received one communication asking for this bill.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEENEY. I am sorry, my time is limited. I respectfully decline to yield.

Mr. Green is a Democrat, I repeat. Over the phone the day before yesterday he said, "I have not changed my conviction one iota, and you may tell your colleagues of the House of Representatives how I stand."

Who wants this bill? The other day or a few days ago we entertained a distinguished couple from Europe. Some of us were vocal in our protests. Some of us suspected that there was a sinister purpose behind the visit. Newspaper editorials said it was bad taste even to suspect the sinister purpose behind the visit of the King and Queen of Great Britain. I received, and some of my colleagues who were vocal in their protests received, some very adverse criticism. Well, we can take it, but let me show you some of the proof of our statement that there was a hidden purpose in the visit. Our suspicions are now being confirmed.

Over at Banff, Alberta, when His Royal Majesty was relaxing on the veranda, he made a very significant statement which is carried in Newsweek, a publication edited by my old friend and townsman Raymond Moley, the first brain truster under Roosevelt, under date of June 19, 1939. The article is entitled "Significant." I will read it:

The purely political considerations behind the royal visit to the United States were not betrayed by the exchanges of formal speeches between President and King. Mr. Roosevelt touched lightly on world matters at the White House dinner when he said: "I am persuaded that the greatest single contribution our two countries have been enabled to make to civilization * * * is the example we have jointly set by our manner of conducting relations between our two Nations. * * * It is because neither of us fears aggression on the part of the other that we have entered no race of armaments." But the King, speaking, as throughout the trip, clearly and distinctly, contented himself in reply with a pious, "I pray that our great Nations may ever in the future walk together along the path of friendship in a world of peace."

However, on at least one occasion reporters thought George VI dropped a hint of what was in his mind during the historic North American visit. Relaxing from his regal role momentarily at Banff, Alberta, a fortnight ago, the King spoke freely to British and Canadian correspondents of conditions in Europe. One remark especially seemed significant. It was to the effect that "we" (presumably the democracies) would "show them" (presumably the axis powers). A number of American reporters had straggled up in time to hear these words, but Walter Thompson and George Steward, respectively Canadian and British public-relations aides of the King, persuaded most of them to agree not to report the incident. One American who tried first to telegraph and later to telephone the story found the Canadian communications office would not handle it.

And Washingtonians observed the monarch's half-hour tête-à-tête with J. P. Morgan at the Embassy garden party. No matter if the conversation concerned nothing more serious than the abominable weather, Senator Nye may turn the circumstantial evidence to his account in the forthcoming Senate battle over a new neutrality act. In Nye's inquiry on the causes of America's entry into the World War, Morgan was played up as the man who arranged British loans in this country and later was instrumental in drawing Washington in on London's side.

No one but the principals knows what President Roosevelt and the ruler discussed during their hour-long chat after midnight in the second-floor oval study at the White House. But British journalists in the King's entourage seemed somewhat to give the show away. G. Ward Price, of the powerful Rothermere newspaper chain (headed by the London Daily Mail), spoke frankly of the purpose behind the British Government's insistence on the United States visit and followed up by inquiring whether veteran Washington correspondents thought the visit might have the effect of abating traditional congressional skepticism toward British statesmanship. He asked particularly whether there was any prospect, as a direct result of Their Majesties' tour, of modification of the Johnson Act to permit loans to Britain in the event she became involved in a war which Price thought might very well come this summer or fall. Another British correspondent quite candidly asked an American newspaperman: "Will you be with us if we have to fight these madmen?"

Most of the Washington correspondents gave the inquirers a realistic answer: the royal visit had not, they felt certain, changed the views of the Senate "bitter-enders" who have sworn to oppose any weakening of existing laws designed to keep the United States free of anything vaguely suggesting an alliance. BORAH, CLARK of Missouri, and CLARK of Idaho, for example, told Newsweek this was the case, and the word was passed along to the British.

The consensus in Washington, as throughout the country this week, seemed to be that if Whitehall had planned the royal excursion as a purely social gesture of good will, it was an unqualified success; but that if the British statesmen had had any thought of using Their Majesties' charm to undermine such safeguards as the Johnson Act, they underestimated the breadth and depth of isolationist sentiment in the United States.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SWEENEY. Attempts will be made to amend certain features of this resolution to attract some votes. Emasculate if you will, but the meat of this measure is lifting the arms embargo. A year ago the Congress was under pressure to lift the arms embargo in favor of one side or the other in war-torn Spain. You stood your ground at that time and refused to aid either party to that controversy, which was not of our making. That war ended. Had you yielded at that time to the pleas to lift the embargo in favor of either side in Spain that war would have gone on and we would have been indirectly guilty of killing additional thousands of Spaniards on both sides of that horrible conflict.

Let me take you back to April 6, 1917, in this Chamber on Good Friday night, when the World War resolution was being considered, and I get this from some of the Members of Congress who were here and who voted for war. Party loyalty was the slogan. Stand by the President was the watchword. Some of the Members were misinformed as to what the issues were. Into this Chamber came Postmaster General Bursleson. He took men back in that cloakroom and said, "Boys, this is only a bluff. We are bluffing the Kaiser and the Central Powers. There will be no American boys go to Europe; the war will be over in a few months. Vote for this measure. And what can I do for you by way of rewarding you with a postmastership, or other consideration?"

I have talked with some of those men since and they have told me their dreams are haunted and will be haunted until they die because they literally felt that the blood of 67,000 American boys who were murdered on foreign soil was on their hands. Right here is sitting a man, my good colleague, this fine gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] who was a Member of that war Congress who was disillusioned. He voted for war. His rest has been disturbed many times since, and he has publicly stated time and time again that given the opportunity he would never again vote to send American boys to foreign battlefields. I know how he will vote on this measure. I hope we can see it in our wisdom, as he does, and go along with men like Mr. ASHBROOK. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, no matter how this measure is amended, the public will, in my opinion, construe the passage of this resolution as a radical change in our foreign policy and a direct step involving our Nation in another foreign war. It is designed to help the synthetic democracies of Great Britain and France, who have the ships and are well equipped to secure the merchandise and implements of war necessary to destroy human life and property, as against other nations who are not so well equipped.

If the arms embargo is lifted, then I predict shortly thereafter the machinery to repeal the Johnson Act will be set in motion. More loans to foreign nations will be made by generous Uncle Sam—loans to carry on the insanity of war; loans that will never be repaid. Who will benefit by such a policy? The same group of international bankers and ammunition makers who profited by the last World War.

It is just possible before many months, if we pass this resolution, that this Congress will be called into session to declare war on one or more foreign nations. Before that day arrives—and God forbid it does—I trust every Congressman who has by his vote the constitutional power to declare war will read the life and letters of our wartime British Ambassador, Walter Hines Page. He reveals a startling story of intrigue and deception that brought our beloved country into that horrible catastrophe.

Well do we remember the national political campaign of 1916, when Woodrow Wilson was elected President of the United States for his second term on the issue of having kept us out of war. In his letters Mr. Page indicates that the die for our entrance into the World War was cast many months before April 1917, and that a campaign of false statements and delays were invoked to assure the reelection of President Wilson.

That the American people were betrayed during that period there can be no doubt in the light of history. Our task is to prevent a repetition of 1917. If we must make munitions and implements of war, let us make them to be used in the event our Nation is invaded by a foreign foe. In God's name do not let us be the tools of selfish manufacturers of cannon, shrapnel, poisonous gas, and other implements of human destruction.

Europe has been a battlefield for the past 2,000 years. There is scarcely a foot of her soil that has not been at one time or another soaked and fertilized with human blood. The lust for war still prevails in Europe today. As the only democratic nation still surviving in this world, let us take a definite stand and inform the war lords of other lands that we are, so far as war is concerned, isolationists; that we are steeped in the traditions of George Washington; that we will have no entangling alliances with foreign powers. If we do this, at least we will have minimized the war business with other nations who depend upon us to pull their chestnuts out of the fire, and we will have made a substantial contribution toward peace and international good will.

Mr. Chairman, if this resolution passes lifting the arms embargo, there will be rejoicing in London, Paris, and Moscow. There will be only fear and sorrow in the homes of millions of our citizens, who are already bowed down because of economic and social dislocations primarily caused by the last World War. Let us have courage by our action today in saying to the leaders of Germany, Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, Soviet Russia, and every other power girding their loins for war that we will not become the policeman of the world; that we do not believe in the insanity of war; that we are equipped to mind our own business; and that we expect them to do likewise. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE].

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Chairman, war or peace is not a Democratic or a Republican issue, nor is it exclusively an issue for Congress but rather an issue for the American people. It is an issue for the fathers and mothers whose sons may again be called upon to give their lives on foreign battlefields because of our mistake here. Someone may again wish to make the world safe for the so-called democracies—for the House of Morgan—for the international bankers.

Neutrality. There is no neutrality in the resolution now under consideration. We have been rather free in criticizing certain one-man governments. Yet, if this resolution is enacted into law, it will make it possible for one man—the President—to bring about conditions that will lead to war. That power, I am sure, is more than we are willing to give to any President that we have ever had or ever will have.

Is not the greed for power more dangerous and destructive than the greed for wealth? All history tells us that power is always deaf, dumb, and blind. It always has and always will be abused. Why should we in this country wish to ape Stalin, Mussolini, or Hitler? Why should any one man want the power of life and death over the sons of America? If such an ambition—desire—exists, and I do not believe it does, then it is an unworthy and insane desire.

I do not care who wrote this resolution. That is not the issue. The question is whether we, not as partisans but as guardians of the youth of this Nation, will enact it into law. I am confident that this Congress will not so far forget its responsibility to this Nation as to give any President, now or hereafter, the power asked for in this resolution—the power to bring about a war of aggression.

Presidents are just human beings. We glorify them, but, like the rest of us, they are just human. They are not infallible. They possess no divine wisdom, nor do they possess virtues or honor or greatness independent of "We, the people." They have their likes and dislikes the same as you and I. Sometimes they enter into flirtations with some foreign nations, and sometimes dislike or even hate others, depending upon their childhood environment and preconceived notions.

Fortunately, under our Constitution you and I and all of us are "We, the people." We are 48 States—but one Nation. Under our form of government Congress, and Congress alone, has the power to declare war. No President should ever be given the power to bring about conditions that lead inevitably to a foreign conflict.

This resolution, if passed, will be misunderstood by foreign nations. It will be too readily accepted by the so-called democracies that grabbed everything in sight, after we won the World War for them, as an act of approval. These nations now refuse to let go of the ill-gotten gain. They send kings and charming queens to us. But let us warn them that we will not defend these stolen colonies with the blood of our youth. No one man or set of men will ever be given the power to pledge the youth of this Nation to any foreign nation, except Congress representing the sovereign people.

While other nations, if we pass this resolution, will consider it as an unfriendly act. These nations feel that we have deserted our time-honored policy of "no foreign entanglements." They feel that we have been and are meddling in European affairs. For some unknown reason false propaganda has been spread in this country to rouse our prejudice and hatred toward some nations while glorified falsehoods have been spread in favor of other nations. But, fortunately, we all know that there are few angels to be found among European governments.

We all know that there was no difference between the forceful annexation of Ethiopia, Czechoslovakia, or the Boer Republic. The destruction of these governments was brutal on the part of the nations who destroyed them, but not one of these destroyers, whether it style itself a democracy or a dictatorship, is in a position to point with the finger of scorn at the other and say, "I am holier than thou."

If Great Britain and France really wish permanent peace, I will give them a prescription. Let them return the colonies they grabbed after the World War and let them fulfill the promises they made to Italy, and then I am sure the war clouds will pass. When that happens there will be no need for democracies to talk both hot and cold in the same breath. They will then not be compelled to denounce some dictators and in the same breath sell their souls for an alliance with another dictator.

This resolution is dangerous. In its vague language it conceals the possibilities of an indirect declaration of war. It gives this power to one man. It is the first step to an alliance with Great Britain—which nation, history reveals, has destroyed or annexed more nations and more people than all the other nations in the world combined.

We made a mistake in 1917, but we are stupid if we repeat it. If all the facts had been made public, we would not have entered the World War in 1917. If Congress had known that our Ambassador was secretly urging a declaration of war on Germany in order that our people could be fooled into protecting world trade for Great Britain, there would have been no declaration of war.

On March 5, 1917, Ambassador Page wrote Secretary of State Lansing:

France and England must have a large enough credit in the United States to prevent the collapse of world trade and of the whole European finance. If we should go to war with Germany, the greatest help we could give the Allies would be such a credit. * * * Unless we go to war with Germany our Government cannot make such a direct grant of credit. * * * The pressure of this alarming crisis has gone far beyond the ability of the Morgan financial agency for the British and French Governments. * * * Perhaps our going to war is the only way in which our present preeminent trade position can be maintained and a panic averted.

It is now clear that we gained nothing by selling war material to the allied governments before we entered the war. The truth is, we ourselves paid for the war materials and enriched the House of Morgan and the war profiteers at our expense and made a present of these instruments of death and destruction to the allied governments. At least so far, they have not paid for the materials. They still owe us $15,000,000,000 and refuse to pay. Again I read—

By April 6, 1917, Great Britain had overdrawn her account with J. P. Morgan to the extent of $400,000,000 and had no cash available with which to meet this overdraft. (See Life and Letters of Walter H. Page, vol. 2, p. 272.)

This overdraft was paid Morgan out of the First Liberty Loan.

Why deceive ourselves? We know that the American people want real neutrality. They do not believe in foreign alliances and entanglements. The fathers and mothers are fearful of their son's future. They demand a neutrality that will prohibit the financial monarchs and the war profiteers from dealing in or selling to any nation—in peacetime or in wartime—the instrumentalities of death and destruction. They are opposed to having anyone at any time sell implements to foreign nations with which they can destroy their own or other nations' people.

They know that all war is manslaughter. Mark Twain, in his Mysterious Stranger, has Satan tell us:

There has never been a just one, never an honorable one—on the part of the instigator of the war. I can see a million years ahead, and this rule will never change in so many as half a dozen instances. The loud little handful—as usual—will shout for the war. * * * Before long you will see this curious thing: The speakers stoned from the platform, and free speech strangled by hordes of furious men who in their secret hearts are still at one with these stoned speakers—as earlier—but do not dare to say so.

This Nation is dizzy with war propaganda. The munition manufacturers and the war lords are again in the saddle, riding high, wide, and reckless on the crest of false propaganda—reckless with the public's conscience and with other people's agony. These are again attempting to monopolize patriotism. They are again wrapping the flag of glory around themselves and making millions out of the blood and the tears and the agony of an agonized world.

I repeat, let us stop them by passing a real, not a make-believe, neutrality act. Let us prohibit the sale of munitions, arms, airplanes, armaments, and army equipment to any nation at any time. Then let us provide for an embargo against any nation or nations during a civil or a foreign war, except food and clothing for the civilian population only, to be distributed through the Red Cross or similar organizations.

Let us follow the warning of the Duke of Windsor, who warned us to be on our guard against propaganda from whatever source it came. The world is crying for some nation that is sane enough and big enough to talk peace in place of hatred and war. Shall the United States be that Nation? The answer to that question rests with us.

We must never permit our patriotism to be dimmed or divided because of religious or racial differences. Tolerance and forbearance is our watchword. We shall continue to extend the hand of good-fellowship to all. We shall not permit the religious or racial hatreds of Europe to be transplanted to our shores. We will not again permit ourselves to be engulfed by the war-mad insanity of Europe.

I know that the Members on both sides of the aisle realize that this issue transcends party lines. I know that the Members of this House do not sanction the sale of instruments of death and destruction. I am sure that we will rise to the occasion and not sanction profits stained with the blood of innocent men, women, and children. I am confident that we will defeat this resolution because an enlightened, humane public conscience will compel us to. We are through forever with European entanglements. We learned our lesson in 1917. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, since the address of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY] who quoted Mr. William Green, president of the A. F. of L., I have called on the telephone Mr. Stephen Chadwick, national commander of the American Legion, and I am authorized by him to say that the veterans of the World War as represented by him and the American Legion, stand for a policy of strict neutrality. That may not necessarily require a law for strict neutrality, but they insist upon a policy of strict neutrality to prevent American boys having to go abroad to fight the battles of somebody else again.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. GEYER of California. Did he make any statement as to how he felt on this bill?

Mr. HINSHAW. He did, but not for publication. He is not authorized to do so by the executive committee.

Mr. GEYER of California. Then, probably, his other statement is not for publication either.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield.

Mr. SHANLEY. Is the gentleman willing to say that strict neutrality means the precedents of international law?

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman repeat that, please?

Mr. SHANLEY. Does the gentleman think that strict neutrality, as probably given to him by Mr. Chadwick, means the precedents or principles of international law?

Mr. HINSHAW. Exactly so.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, as a man who, at the age of 49 years, voluntarily put on the uniform of the United States and wore it for a year, I never hear the statement made on this floor or elsewhere questioning the justice and the right of this great country in that war without resenting it to the bottom of my heart as an insult to the 4,000,000 men who wore the uniform, to the flag they followed, and a stain on the place in history of the greatest nation on the face of the earth.

I am the son of foreign immigrants, but I am just as good an American as the people whose ancestors came over on the Mayflower or as any man who ever breathed the air of America. [Applause.] Perhaps that statement may be a necessary preliminary to one or two other things I am going to say.

In my brief time I must limit myself to some scattered observations, without elaboration. I expect nobody to agree with all of them, and somebody may agree with none of them.

First. If the present mandatory embargo on arms, munitions, and implements of war favors the dictators, and this is admitted; and if the pending bill favors the democracies, and this is the claim of its enemies, that fact alone is sufficient consideration for my support of the bill. [Applause.] First, last, and all the time, I am for the democracies and against the dictators; and I am for them, Neutrality Act or no Neutrality Act.

If the emergency arises, I have the utmost faith that that will be the attitude of the overwhelming majority of the American people. The World War forever fixed my faith in the loyalty and patriotism of all groups of the American people, regardless of race or creed.

I am in complete disagreement with the Republican Members who file down here in the Well, one after the other, and shout England, France, and Russia. I hope Russia may stand with the democracies. I believe if it were known that she would, the war in Europe would stop now. Russia is the only unknown quantity in Europe. These party shouters come down here in the Well and scream war, war, war—England, France, and Russia—and by every innuendo seek to tie the administration in Washington up with them. Indeed, the more reckless shout that we are already tied up. Is it significant that not one of them ever mentions the dictators? Not one. Why not?

Second. When you pass a neutrality act you fix and publish to the world the rules under which you will play the game and which must remain fixed after the game starts. To change the rules then would be an unneutral act. When the game starts all the nations of the world will be players, actively or passively, and none of them but the United States will be tied down with fixed rules. All the others will move as the game develops and their interest dictates, the friendly powers to their private gain at our expense, and the enemy powers to force our hand, and underneath it all we will be as unneutral as the game itself. Japan knows that we are for China. Germany knows that we are for Czechoslovakia and Poland. Italy knows that we were for Ethiopia. They all know where we stand on every major international quarrel. In the end our lot will be the World War over again.

Third. The minority report in one breath charges the President with seeking power through section 3 to name and penalize an aggressor. And in the next breath he is charged with failing to exercise that same power in the Asiatic war and his impeachment for such failure is demanded. Both charges are made by the same persons. It raises the question, When does an isolationist become an interventionist?

As an example, the minority report, referring to the provision empowering the President to define an "area of combat," which would be closed to American citizens and American vessels, says:

With this power the President can effectively quarantine an aggressor from American ships and citizens by simply naming the aggressor as a "combat area."

The President is, of course, assumed to be seeking this method of fixing aggression on a warring power. He wants this indirect method of naming the aggressor.

Then, on the next page, comes the direct charge that he has failed to use the power he already possesses to name an aggressor. Says the minority report:

In spite of the mandatory requirements of existing law, the President has failed to "find" the existence of the gigantic war in China.

If the President had found "the gigantic war in China," the next step required of him would be to place an embargo against Japan and China, which would have affected only Japan, which has been receiving more than half of all her war supplies from the United States. Such action would have been tantamount to naming and penalizing Japan as the aggressor. Everybody knows this. In sum, he wants a power which he is refusing to use.

Fourth. If the President declared an Asiatic embargo, it would operate only against Japan and would be considered by Japan as naming and punishing her as the aggressor. It would immediately end all commerce between the United States and Japan. None of the other signatories to the Nine Power Pact, no other nation in the world, would join the United States in this action. It would stick its neck out alone. All the other nations would hold out and then rush in to take over the market we had abandoned. The reason the President did not lay an embargo against Japan is that he had better sense. The more I hear some people up here on the Hill the more I thank God Roosevelt is President. [Applause.]

If the minority want to keep this country out of war, and for 2 days they have shouted themselves hoarse that they do, how do they reconcile their protestations with their constantly iterated insistence that we mix into the war in Asia.

If there is any doubt whether the authors of the minority report want this country to mix into the war in Asia it will be dispelled by the following meaty paragraph from the minority report:

We have let our excitement about what may happen to our remote interests in Europe blind us to what is now happening to our immediate interests in the Pacific, where our treaty rights are being violated and our national interests threatened every day. We feel certain that if we had solved this immediate far eastern problem first it would have gone far toward solving the rest of our international problems.

Fifth. The trouble with a neutrality act is that it never fits the picture. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] said in his able and statesmanlike speech yesterday, you cannot lay down rules to govern the unknown and unpredictable.

We passed the first neutrality act in American history 4 years ago and we have been doctoring it up ever since. We doctor the first Neutrality Act to make it fit the civil war in Spain and laid an embargo that helped the dictators set up a Fascist government in Spain. Spain will now be a hopping-off place for the dictators against South America. This puts them only half the distance of the United States from South America. The next step will be to advance their aviation frontiers to islands off the west coast of Africa. The Spanish dictator has conceived the grandiose scheme of again gathering the Spanish-American nations under the mothering wing of Spain, and he will have help. This takes in all the territory between the Rio Grande and Patagonia.

I fear the democracies will rue the day that they starved out the Loyalist government of Spain, and thus contributed to the triumphant reviews of the victorious Fascist forces in Madrid, Berlin, and Rome. There is no dissimulation now as to who won the Spanish war.

Sixth. Neutrality, as Mr. Hoover said of prohibition, is a noble experiment, and equally futile. Drinking killed prohibition and fighting will kill neutrality, provided the common sense of the country does not kill it before the fighting starts.

I wish with all my heart that this legislation would insure the result the people are looking to from its enactment. No sane man could want to see 1917 over again. The world has been haywire ever since. Another such war might wreck it.

Seventh. The apparent need for a neutrality act is that in the last war Germany repealed international law. Since then the unholy trinity has come into the picture, all imbued with the same ruthless philosophy. They have banded together under the slogan of the three musketeers—"all for one and one for all." Might makes right. Neutrality acts, like peace treaties and international law, will be scraps of paper. Necessity knows no law. It is my will, says the dictator.

The world stands with bated breath today waiting for the next blow. It is not a question whether it will fall, but when and where. In less than 3 years the axis powers have accumulated a most impressive string of scalps: Ethiopia, Austria, Albania, Czechoslovakia, Spain, and China. They are fully panoplied for war and they are on the march.

Eighth. The minority report is a characteristic mixture of inconsistencies bearing the earmarks of its authorship. You could write two or three different neutrality acts out of it. I would suggest that the author put an enacting clause on it and offer it as a substitute for the pending bill. If it passed, we would, perforce, disagree as to what it means and do nothing, which is the wishful thinking of neutrality acts.

Ninth. What is the question before the House in the minds of the minority—neutrality or the next election? For more than a year they have been putting on a national campaign of frightfulness with Roosevelt dragging the country into war as the bogeyman. They are in danger of running out of gas before November 1940. Selling American patriotism and courage short is a doubtful gamble on the political market. Long-headed Republicans do not think a campaign of little America the road to the White House, but the pumpkin-headed variety seems to be in the majority. [Laughter.]

Tenth. There is no sure way to keep out of war, but the surest way is to be able to keep out, meaning to be able to go in. We are getting ready to stay out. There is a reassuring implication in the objection to lifting the embargo on arms. The implication is that in the next war we will have arms to sell. We fought the last war with the arms of the Allies.

Eleventh. I stated that I would support this bill, and I will. I have supported all of these neutrality acts, but with my fingers crossed. It will be the same with this. What I am really for is section 16 of the bill, which repeals all neutrality acts.

Twelfth. Victor Berger in a neutrality debate on this floor nearly 30 years ago—for this is no new subject; England and France made a neutrality pact ending war 140 years ago, then Napoleon came along—Victor Berger said, and it has stuck in my mind ever since:

Neutrality is a fine thing if you are able to defend it.

Let us be able and unafraid. [Applause.]

This country got along without a neutrality act for 145 years and in that short space of time it reached first place among the nations of the earth. No other nation has such an act. What great power in the world is so neutral as ours? What great power in the world has a comparable record? We asked and received not a foot of territory out of the World War, not a mandate, not a dollar in reparations. We asked nothing. In the Boxer Rebellion we were the only nation participating in the restoration of order in China, which returned its share of the indemnity to China; returned it as a contribution to Chinese education. What other nation in the world would voluntarily relinquish the Philippine Islands? What other nation in the world would not have taken Cuba, under the same conditions? We have substituted the good-neighbor policy for dollar diplomacy with the use of the marines as collectors, the policy of this now wonderfully pacific Republican Party. What other nation in the world has unfortified frontiers, 4,500 miles of it, and not even a pill box from one end to the other? What nation on the American Continent, however small and defenseless, has the slightest fear of the United States?

The answer of all these questions stamps as damnably false every utterance, every implication, that the administration at Washington wants war, or wants this Nation to become involved in a military way with the affairs of the other nations.

Mr. Chairman, in the light of our experience with past neutrality acts, I favor discretion in the administration as against a bill of particulars in the law. As soon as the bill of particulars is fixed in the law, Congress as a whole, and its individual Members, will cease to function, but the administration, with its constitutionally created agencies and responsibilities, must carry on.

Unless I know clearly that I should go contrary, I shall give the President the benefit of the doubt. It is his responsibility above that of every living man in America, and it is our history that Presidents have not led the country into war but have been driven into war.

The Democrats in Congress should be heartened by the fact that practically every great newspaper in the United States, and practically all their staff of correspondents here in Washington, are criticizing and condemning the course of the minority in Congress as playing petty, partisan politics with vital national and world problems.

The President knows that if this country becomes involved in war it will wreck his great domestic program, just as the World War wrecked the great program of Woodrow Wilson. He knows that the stake of this program is far greater than anything that could come out of another dogfall like the World War. At such a time as this, a truce ought to be called on political President-baiting. [Applause.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK].

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, while I feel as keenly about the bill now before the Congress as any that has been here during my service, yet I had not intended to say anything, and would not, but for the fact that my friend and colleague the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY] took occasion to use my name. He had the privilege to state to you that I expected to vote against this bill, but for fear that somebody might construe from his statement that I conveyed to him the information that my late friend, the Postmaster General, Mr. Burleson, of Texas, had attempted to exert any influence upon the Members of Congress at that time to vote in favor of a declaration of war, I want to say to you that to my knowledge nothing of the kind ever occurred. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. ASHBROOK. In fact, I want in fairness to state that no one in authority at that time, no one from the President down, attempted to use any influence upon me; but there was a most tremendous and widespread propaganda in existence at that time. My deep convictions were then to vote against a declaration of war. I was submissive and weak enough, I confess with humiliation, finally to yield to the propaganda and to vote for the declaration of war, but I have regretted it from that day to this, and I do not, therefore, intend by my vote to take any chances of involving the United States in another world war, and for that reason I expect to vote against the present neutrality bill. [Applause.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I was in the hall a moment ago when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY] made the statement to which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] referred. Like the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK], I was a Member of the Congress on the night of April 6, 1917. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY] was not a Member of Congress at that time. I knew Mr. Burleson, a distinguished citizen from my State, for many years, and I do not care who the informant of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY] was, when he made the statement to Mr. SWEENEY that Mr. SWEENEY reported on this floor he stated an utter untruth.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, I did not get the significance of the gentleman's remark.

Mr. RAYBURN. I say I do not know who the informant of the gentleman from Ohio was about the conversation of Mr. Burleson here on the night of April 6, 1917, but I do say his informant spoke an untruth.

Mr. SWEENEY. That may be so, but I got it from the lips of three former Members of Congress.

Mr. RAYBURN. There was no such propaganda on this floor or in this Chamber, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK], or I would have known it if it had been going on. I think it is so unfair, it is so out of place for a Member to rise on the floor of this House and repeat gossip or hearsay testimony about a man who is sleeping an honorable and endless sleep. [Applause.]

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] who was here at that time.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I was here on the night of April 6, 1917. It was the first sitting of Congress that I had ever attended. I remember very distinctly of having Mr. Burleson, who was on the floor that night, pointed out to me as the Postmaster General. However, I do not know what he was doing up here.

Mr. PATRICK. He was the Postmaster General, was he not?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Will the gentleman from New York yield me one-half minute to reply to my colleague?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK].

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire from my colleague and friend, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY], whether or not he ever received any information such as he stated on the floor from me?

Mr. SWEENEY. I will say I did not, but I did receive this information from the gentleman, that you felt that your dreams were disturbed to your dying day.

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is absolutely true, and I do not propose to take the chance of having them disturbed for the remainder of my days by voting for this bill. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS F. FORD].

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, there have been a great many acrimonious statements made on the floor during this debate. I do not propose to engage in anything of that kind.

Mr. Chairman, to me the foremost problem confronting us today is how to keep the United States out of any war that may break out in Europe.

The people of this country are overwhelmingly opposed to war; the Members of this Congress are just as overwhelmingly against war. And yet none of us can assure the mothers of the Nation, the youth of the Nation, and all the other citizens harried by the threat of conflict, that war will not come.

As I see it, now is the time to take preventive measures, through the adoption of a neutrality policy that shall make clear to all nations our stand in case of another world war.

Study of the resolution before us convinces me that it will help to prevent the outbreak of war in Europe and that it will go a long way to prevent our being drawn into such a war, if one comes.

The existing Neutrality Act would prevent the exportation of arms and implements of war to all belligerents. But it neither prevents nor restricts the sale and transportation in American ships of supplies necessary to warring nations, such as cotton, oil, steel, foodstuffs.

Plainly, the existing act exposes us to the imminent danger of being drawn into a European war. Let an American ship carrying American commodities be stopped or sunk by a belligerent, and war would follow, as it did after the sinking of the Lusitania. Nothing could stop it.

We who are opposed to war are determined to prevent such a possibility. And that is why we who are opposed to war are supporting this resolution. It prohibits the transportation of war materials or any exports in American ships. The cash-and-carry provision permits the sale of goods for cash to those who can take them away. When exports leave our ports, under the provisions of this resolution, they will not be owned by Americans, and they will not be carried by American ships. If the carriers are attacked in transit, it is none of our business, and we will have no cause to go to war about it.

That this resolution with amendments would indirectly help the democracies, which happen to have control of the seas and embarrass the aggressor nations, is in line with American public opinion, as it is in line with our best interests and our fixed determination to keep out of war.

Because I want to help to prevent a European war and because I realize that the threat of war comes from the aggressor nations, I had hoped to have the opportunity of voting for the Thomas amendment, which so clearly warns aggressors and thus presents the strongest possible deterrent to war.

Whatever happens, I wish to state here my firm intention of never voting to send American forces to fight in any foreign war. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. HORTON] such time as he may desire.

NEUTRALITY

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Chairman, if you are really looking for trouble, just get out in the middle of a bull pasture and wave a red flag—you will get a peck of it right now.

The raising of the embargo against the shipment of implements of war may very well be the remaining step necessary to plunge us into a pending European war.

You cannot effectually pull off a successful hold-up with any of the component parts of a six-shooter. It takes a loaded shooting iron to do that trick, and that kind of an instrument is no plaything for one too quick on the trigger to be fooling with.

There is a real difference between the shipment of those parts which go into implements of war and the shipment of the finished ready-to-go engine of war.

As it is, we have had too much provocative flag waving in the way of loose war talk from those in high places. Their inflammatory pronouncements, coupled with the insistent demand for the greatest army, navy, and air armada of all time, make us all wonder whether we are faced with a Napoleonic ambition over here which is about to challenge the Caesar over there in world conquest. It might be well at this time to recall the words of Lincoln which were uttered more than 100 years ago:

Many great and good men, sufficiently qualified for any task they should undertake, may ever be found whose ambition would aspire to nothing beyond a seat in Congress, a gubernatorial or a Presidential chair, but such belong not to the family of the lion or the tribe of the eagle. What! Think you these places would satisfy an Alexander, a Caesar, or a Napoleon? Never! Towering genius disdains a beaten path. It seeks regions hitherto unexplored. It sees no distinction, and, if possible, it will have it, whether at the expense of emancipating slaves or enslaving free men. Is it unreasonable, then, to expect that some man possessed of the loftiest genius, coupled with ambition sufficient to push it to its utmost stretch, will at some time spring up among us? And when such a one does it will require the people to be united with each other, attached to the government and laws, and generally intelligent, to successfully frustrate his design.

If we have a Napoleon in our midst, may his Waterloo be a personal one rather than one which will involve the entire Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER] such time as he may desire.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, referring to the bill now before the Committee and to the matters therein contained, may I suggest that the House has not had a more important measure before it this session than that embraced in the neutrality legislation presented.

This proposed legislation is not important solely by reason of the fact that it deals with neutrality and the development of our foreign policy, but it is highly important from the standpoint that it repudiates all former legislation passed by the Congress respecting this highly important subject and seeks to chart a new, novel, and a vastly different course than that which has heretofore been established and followed in this country. If the Bloom bill should pass, by a vote in this House, we would embark upon a new plan of neutrality; we would, by the passage of this proposed measure, enter into a new "experimental field" respecting our foreign policy; we would, by the approval of this pending legislation, sever the ties that bind us to a wholesome policy—one which is thoroughly and truly American—and a policy which now vests the right and power of determining the policy of this Nation in the Representatives of the people.

When we refer to "neutrality" we are constrained to believe that such word means to "remain neutral." Webster defines it as "being unbiased"; "indifferent"; "taking no part on either side of a contest"; "to render inactive."

Therefore, if we, as a great nation, are to adopt a policy of neutrality which meets the general demand of the people—and the people want a strict neutrality observed by our country—we must pass that legislation which will maintain an attitude of utter indifference in this country with respect to warring nations; and such legislation, if any new legislation is to be passed upon this subject, should require that we take no part on either side of any contest in the event of controversy or war between any other nations. Our position should be maintained as entirely neutral, in such event.

As we look into this very vital question, may I suggest that there are two ways in which our country can aid in keeping our Nation at peace: First, by helping to prevent a European conflict; and, second, by minimizing the chances of our entanglement if such a war cannot be averted.

As we view this issue, and the possible involvements, we must keep in mind as our outstanding thought that we must keep the United States out of war—and, at the same time we must preserve our international independence; we must retain our freedom to exercise our sovereignty as a nation, and at the same time prevent our own people and other nations from involving us in any foreign war.

While the general debate in this Chamber continues on this subject, many of our people may take the position that we should remain wholly isolated, as a nation, in the event of war between foreign countries, while others take a more liberal view of the situation and advocate that limited sales be approved on a cash-and-carry basis; and with all of the varied opinions of our people the real crux of our neutrality policy should be that we should abstain from the commission of any overt act, respecting any contending nation, which would in any manner involve our country in any war. And in formulating our policy of neutrality it would be wise, in my opinion, to require our ships, no matter what cargo they carry, and our people, to remain entirely out of the war zone. This would obviate, insofar as a legislative policy can do so, the possibility of the overt act which might involve us in war.

We must remember we have our international laws which are our safeguard. It has been suggested by some of our people that with a strict Embargo Act against the transportation of arms, munitions, and war supplies that our neutrality will be retained quite as secure as by the passage of additional laws on this same subject. I am in full accord with this view which has been expressed by so many of our citizens. We must remember the will of our people, regardless of legislation upon this subject, will be the dominating factor respecting our neutrality. If our people continue to insist upon visiting foreign countries, even though a state of war exists, or if our business and industries continue to make sales of war materials to warring nations, then we can have a neutrality in name only and not in fact. Our neutrality must be that plan by which we take no part, either directly or indirectly, in any controversy between nations.

I am opposed to the Bloom bill, because it vests the sole determining power in the President of the United States. This measure does not apply to the present Chief Executive alone, but the provisions of this bill extend to all Presidents of this Nation. The right and power of determining our foreign relations, and any plan of neutrality we may adopt, should rest in the hands of the Representatives of the people—the Congress. Therefore, I shall not cast my vote to transfer that power to any President—no matter who that President may be. This is an inherent right in the people, and their chosen Representatives should never shirk that grave responsibility which rests upon them.

Lastly, Mr. Chairman, we want peace in our country—not war. The people of the United States of America want a permanent peace. We have not forgotten the pall which came to us in 1917 when war was declared; we have not brushed aside the tragedy of it to this late day—the cost in life, the disaster of disability, the expenditure of money, the broken homes, and the saddened souls all make up the aggregate cost of that war.

It is quite true that if necessity should demand it we would appropriate all the funds which would be reasonably necessary to defend our shores, our homes, and our institutions, and to adequately and properly defend our own country; and the manpower of this Nation would respond, as never before, in defense of our own land. But we have had the experience of fighting across the ocean. We want no more of it.

Our vote on this measure may be quite as important as was the vote, taken in this Chamber, for the World War. Let us make no mistake in our ballot. If this bill should pass and we should be led into another war, then let me say that I confidently believe that a vast majority of this membership will never cast a vote to send any American boy across any ocean to help fight in any foreign war in which we have no concern.

Let the wisdom and the courage of this body rise to the heights essential to pass such laws respecting neutrality which will make America secure in the avenues of peace. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN] such time as he may desire.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Bloom bill which is called a neutrality bill and which in my opinion is an "unneutral" bill. I cannot support it and am determined to fight against its passage in its present form. The very fact that it eliminates the embargo on arms to belligerent nations which is in our present neutrality bill is one good reason why it should be defeated. No one in the district which I have the honor to represent has asked me to support this legislation. I have scores of letters from my own people asking that I oppose it. Not a single soul in the 22 counties of the third district of Nebraska has written me asking me to support it. I feel at this moment that the 50,000 American soldier and sailor dead, whose lips are voiceless and whose tongues are silent, would approve of my action. On the other hand, I believe that the munition makers and those who are so anxious to lead us into another world war would frown upon what I have to say here.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened to every word of debate on this bill. I have read every word of the bill and have discussed it with leaders on both sides of the aisle. I have discussed it with men who are in this body today who were here on the night of April 6, 1917, when the war declaration was passed and which drove us into the World War. I have talked to the man who is with us who voted against that declaration and I have talked with a Member who voted for it. Both of them are opposed to this legislation because they fear it is a step which will plunge us into another world war.

In the gallery with us today we see two people who represent a nation which is neutral and which represents those Scandinavian countries which believe in strict neutrality. They are the Crown Prince and Princess of Norway in whose veins runs the blood of Swedes and Danes. Close as their country is located to the scene of much turmoil and strife they are here listening to this debate which has such a great bearing on international affairs. I hope we can remain as peaceful and neutral as their country.

Mr. Chairman, only recently into this historic building came the King and Queen of England. During their visit we had sort of a gentleman's agreement to hold an armistice on war talk. No sooner had these visitors left our shores than we receive this unneutral bill. There may be some significance in the sudden arrival of this bill and the allegations that we are in some way trying to form an alliance with Great Britain and France. I am opposed to all foreign entanglements and alliances which would involve us in another war. I believe a majority of the people I represent are against all foreign entanglements which may lead us into any kind of war. Just think of it—from the day Christ was crucified on Calvary there has never been a year without a conflict of arms. We all know that greed has been the impulse of war; the desire for power and territory; desire for plunder and loot; ambition to rule in the place of someone else. Wars of all kinds, all of them based on greed. Let us resolve here to keep out of all wars.

I am opposed to this bill because I believe it is an un-American bill; that it is a brazen attempt of interventionists to involve us into the international racket of finance and munitions manufacturing. If we pass this bill it will mean in my humble opinion, an involvement into foreign politics, and will be followed by a demand for another debt settlement on the basis of a dime on the dollar.

We who sit here daily and sit in committees hour upon hour debating over legislation which affects the lives of every man, woman, and child in our Nation, see steadily the foreign entangling process. We see daily our attention diverted from the necessary things to be done at home to the troubles and problems in foreign lands.

We see our Nation discussing reciprocal-trade agreements which we from the farming districts feel may result in trading off our own farm markets to the foreign farmers. We see our Government loaning money to foreign nations to rehabilitate the foreigners; we see our Government trading in foreign exchange; we see our Government aiding in the sale of airplanes to foreigners; we see money from our Treasury going to the pay of commissions which are in Europe helping to rehabilitate foreign political refugees at a time when millions of Americans are jobless; we find representatives of nearly every nation in the world in the United States seeking our rich market; and we who study these matters feel that by this process we will soon be entangled in foreign problems from which we can never emerge. In this debate, which has been inspiring and brilliant, we find allegations that the proposed bill is aimed to help one foreign axis and that our present neutrality bill tends to aid another foreign axis. So far as I am concerned, let the foreigners run their own axis, and let us Americans tend to our own business and take care of the gigantic problem we have at home—an unsolved problem which is hitting nearly every home in the land. What I ask for is to defeat this bill and allow the present neutrality bill with its arms-embargo clause remain as the law. Apply it to all nations alike without favor. We are told that the present bill does not prohibit the shipment of arms to Japan and China and that it results in no neutrality. However, the law at present states that no arms shall be sent to belligerent nations. That is the law. Congress passed that law. It is up to the Executive to enforce that law, and Congress can do nothing further with it. We are told that the law cannot be enforced by the President because the Japanese-Chinese conflict has not been declared a war. Yet thousands upon thousands of human beings are being slaughtered there daily. We cannot declare it a war, yet it is a war. The present neutrality law is applicable. If America wants to be neutral and neutrality is what the people want, why not enforce this law and stop shipping arms to belligerents?

I believe what the people of my district want me to do is to vote for peace. I believe that they have made up their minds that never again do they want to see another American soldier or sailor or marine fighting on foreign shores. If other nations want to fight and the foreigners want to kill each other, that is their business. So far as we are concerned, I feel the people of my district want us to keep out. I feel they are for strict neutrality. I believe they want us to keep in the bill an arms embargo—an embargo which would tell our munition makers that we will not allow the shipments of arms to any nation in the world where there is a war going on. We want the world to know that we are a peaceful nation and that we will not take sides with any of them if they get into trouble. But my people are also determined to let the world know that Americans know no creed, religion, color, or party when it comes to patriotism. Our people feel no party has a corner on American patriotism. I feel that our people are in favor of national defense and want their representatives to vote for sufficient appropriations for purposes which would defend our own shores against an attack or invasion by any country in the world. They are opposed to aggression. In fighting to preserve America and American people and the shores of this wonderful Republic our people are united. I believe every man and woman in my district would fight to the death to defend our beloved land, but I believe sincerely that every one of them is determined that never more shall we be involved in war on foreign shores.

Because I feel so deeply about this matter, Mr. Chairman, I must join with others in bitterly opposing this legislation. I feel it is dangerous legislation which would involve us in another war. The world, in my opinion, is on fire right now and the war gods are mixing the war poison again. We free people of America want none of that. We who are fighting against this bill are being charged with being "sub-cellular isolationists." What a cruel charge, Mr. Chairman, when we are willing to trade peacefully with the world. We who are willing to give and take and barter in a peaceful way with the entire world are only "isolationists" when it comes to voting against any bill which would involve this great Nation in another foreign war. If our fight is to stop the killing of innocent men and women and children, then we accept the charge. If the 50,000 voiceless lips of soldier and sailor dead could speak, if the thousands of blind, maimed, and crazed and suffering from the last war could speak in this great Chamber today, I feel they would join us in isolating free America from the madhouse of the war-crazed politicians of foreign lands. If the men who will have to do the fighting, suffering, and dying could speak here right now, if they could know the implications in this bill, I feel they would join our band of alleged "isolationists." Mr. Chairman, we are isolationists as to war. We are praying for peace. We are against all wars. We are for defending our own land and our own liberty, and we are anxious that we run our own affairs and let foreigners run their affairs without interference or intervention by the United States, which has so much trouble of its own to solve.

Mr. Chairman, I know this bill, in its present form, will not pass this House. It must not pass as it is written. For one, I am willing to stay here all summer and fight against its passage in this form, because it is dangerous to the entire welfare of America and would wreck this Nation if it was passed as it is now presented to us. In the name of all of the peace-loving people in this land, help us defeat this dangerous legislation.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. It must be very disappointing to some statesmen to find that we cannot write a neutrality bill; this debate clearly proves that we cannot. I repeat what I said 2 years ago: We find that we should not try to climb a tree to escape a forest fire.

We now turn a complete somersault from the act of 1937. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] said there were only 13 votes on his side 2 years ago, but we seem practically unanimous today in our desire to remove the embargo clause in the present law. We listened to him yesterday with rapt attention and with apparent agreement. He pleaded for the great office of the Presidency of the United States that it might retain its former dignity. He said—and I think with a subtle warning—that "every wise President consults not only those in his Cabinet but the leaders in the Congress before he makes some tremendously important utterance." I hope the present President of the United States reads that remark in connection with other statements made regarding the Presidential office.

Clearly it has been shown that this President of ours is an interventionist. This is manifest from his message to Hitler a short time ago demanding peace and telling Hitler that he was the one, and the only one, that could preserve peace. I do not criticize that, of course, because, at least temporarily, it seems to have had favorable results, although we understand the resentment that must necessarily lie in the hearts of the German people because of that intervention. His words and actions have been quoted here sufficiently the last few days to show that he is an interventionist. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] declared that we must be kept free; that other nations must not know beforehand what we might do; that we must not give these extra-constitutional discretionary powers to the President. He reiterated it many times. Every one of the prohibitions in this bill include discretionary powers to the President, making the prohibitions useless.

Who wants this particular legislation? Read this communistic paper. You have had it on your desk—"National issues, a survey of politics and legislation by the Communist Party." They want this legislation. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] in his speech clearly proved—and I have read most of the arguments—the intent of this legislation. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN] practically said: "Yes; the people are on the side of France and England." Of course! We know it. The stabilization funds can buy pounds and francs; they can buy of these favored nations and furnish them with dollars. We can help finance a war in various ways regarding which we may now not be informed.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I mentioned the gentleman's name, but did I do so in such connection that I must give up precious time?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I am afraid the gentleman did.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman's speech is in the RECORD. Read it.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I probably should. The gentleman acknowledges it?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN] did not say that the people of this Nation are on the side of England and France; but he did say that as between the aggressor nations and the democracies their sentiment probably lie with the democracies.

Mr. GIFFORD. Things equal to the same thing are equal to each other. Recall your geometry. [Applause and laughter.]

Our people are to be surprised indeed when they learn that oatmeal to feed the stomachs of all the people of belligerent nations should now be classified as contraband, to be put in exactly the same category as guns. This is a most amazing doctrine. I cannot subscribe to it. I grant that gasoline is used in trucks and that trucks are used to carry on war; but gasoline is also used for other usual civil activities of nations. Now, however, you see fit to include it in articles of contraband.

I plead with you, and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHANLEY] agrees, let us go back to international law. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GIFFORD. I wish I had time to talk about the mischievous conditions that may arise in South America. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how the time stands?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has 25 minutes remaining; the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] has 27½ minutes remaining.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, while we sit in this great body, elected as Democrats or Republicans, and the middle aisle is the dividing line for the seating of members of both parties, it does not divide in any way, even for sitting purposes, the respect that we entertain for each other, and for the ability and character or service that we render as individuals. A fitting illustration of this pleasing fact was evidenced on Tuesday last in the debate of the pending bill when the distinguished gentleman from Vermont, whom every Member admires and respects, in the course of his address to the House, paid the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHANLEY] a fine and deserving compliment, referring to him as "an outstanding authority with respect to questions involving international law." It was an expression of respect that one Member, a Republican, in the case of the gentleman from Vermont, paid to another Member, a Democrat, in the case of the gentleman from Connecticut.

The gentleman from Vermont is one of the most modest Members of the House. He could have, if he wanted to, referred to his great knowledge of international law; but in his modesty, which we admire, he did not do so. While he did not tell the House anything of his profound knowledge of international law and of foreign affairs, we from New England who know him realize his profound knowledge and experience in this important field.

His late father, Hon. Frank Plumley, who served with distinction in this body from 1908 to 1916, was one of the outstanding international jurists of his day. He was the only private citizen in the history of our country, as I remember it, who was ever selected by foreign governments to arbitrate and adjudicate their differences. The late father of our distinguished colleague was appointed by the late President Theodore Roosevelt as umpire of the Netherlands, Venezuelan, British-Venezuelan, and French-Venezuelan Commissions, which held protracted sessions in Caracas. As a result of his findings as umpire, his rulings on questions involving neutrality and the rights of neutrals are accepted and followed as precedents.

His late father was later selected by France and Venezuela as sole trier of questions in issue between them. Their representatives went to Vermont, to "Northfield-on-the-Dog," for the hearings of the French-Venezuelan Commission. Our colleague was secretary of that Commission. He later taught international law at Norwich University before he was president of that university.

When our friend speaks about neutrality, he speaks from more than a superficial viewpoint and knowledge as to what he is talking about. As his late father was, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY] is recognized as an authority especially on questions involving the rights of neutrals. Whether one agrees with him or not, he is one qualified by education and experience to discuss international law in all of its aspects, and one whose views and opinions are worthy of profound consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY].

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am not afraid that Members of this House will underrate the importance of the joint resolution now under consideration but I am most anxious for each Member to understand the importance of an amendment which I propose to offer. The amendment which I will offer will follow as a new section to section 2. The amendment is as follows:

On page 3, after section 2, insert the following new section:

"TRAVEL ON AMERICAN OR OTHER NEUTRAL VESSELS

"Sec. 3. (a) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 (a), it shall be thereafter unlawful, except in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe, for citizens of the United States to travel as passengers on any American or other neutral vessel carrying arms, ammunition, or implements of war to any state or states named in such proclamation.

"(b) Whenever the President shall have revoked any proclamation issued under the authority of section 1 (a), the provisions of this section and of any regulations issued by the President hereunder shall thereupon cease to apply with respect to the state or states named in such proclamation, except with respect to offenses committed prior to such revocation."

A committee amendment will be offered to section 2 of the resolution, striking out the word "unlawful" on line 19, page 2, and inserting language which will permit citizens of the United States to travel on vessels of belligerent states only at their own risk. The resolution fails to deal with the question of citizens of the United States traveling as passengers on American vessels or vessels of other neutral countries. In view of the committee amendment to section 2, to the effect that citizens may travel on vessels of belligerent states at their own risk, it is clearly indicated that our citizens will assume no risk whatever if they elect to travel as passengers on our ships or ships of other neutral nations although the ship upon which they may be traveling may have its bottom filled with all the deadly instruments of war.

The purpose of my amendment is to make it unlawful for citizens of the United States to travel on passenger boats the bottoms of which are filled with arms, ammunitions, and implements of war. I have discussed the amendment with the acting chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee and with other members of the committee and I sincerely hope that the committee will accept and approve the amendment.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. COFFEE].

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. COFFEE]?

There was no objection.

NEUTRALITY AND WORLD PEACE

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Chairman, debate today has revealed the irrefutable truth that no two Members of this House entertain the same ideas relative to the pending neutrality bill. Each one of us, I submit, is motivated by the sincerest hopes and desire to insure peace for the United States. Yet we have for the past 3 days witnessed the amazing spectacle of many Members, in their zeal to seek and shed light, talking on a subject with which many are unfamiliar, saying things which many in their hearts do not mean, concerning legislation and a function which properly does not come within the scope of the duties of the House of Representatives.

For my part, I am convinced that no neutrality legislation can be devised which is so perfect and infallible in its provisions and enforcement as to meet all emergencies as they arise. How can we anticipate unpredictable events? How can we know a priori just the manner in which the attempted enforcement of any American neutrality act will adversely react upon the peace and well-being of the people of the United States?

The 1937 Neutrality Act was a snare and a delusion. It held forth to the hopeful American people a mirage that could never be attained. The effect of it during the past 2 years, though unintentional, it is true, has been to align us on the side of the Fascist aggressors against the invaded and all too often defenseless victim nations. I am proud that I was 1 of the 13 who voted against the 1937 neutrality bill. I join heartily with the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] in his well-considered and cogently phrased address of yesterday, in which he powerfully criticized the McReynolds Neutrality Act of 1937. In the debate on that bill both he and I actively participated. We then prognosticated the very happenings which subsequently transpired.

Though we embargoed the shipment of munitions to Spain during the civil war, we continued to sell them to Italy and Germany, which countries conveniently and openly transhipped the munitions and materials of war to the revolutionists in Spain, with whom they were brazenly in partnership in conducting that civil war.

Mr. Chairman, we are the only country in the world which attempts to improve upon international law in such detailed fashion in the form of intricately phrased neutrality measures. This is a recondite subject, having many ramifications. One cannot discuss thoroughly even one branch of the topics embraced by the bill in the time allotted. It seems ludicrous to me that even such small sovereignties as Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Finland, Holland, Belgium, and Switzerland, all democracies in Europe, located in immediate contiguity to the Fascist aggressor nations, are yet able to maintain their independence and preserve a true neutrality without the benefit of any so-called neutrality legislation, though here we are, separated from aggressor nations by two oceans and thousands of miles of distance, the most powerful and richest nation on earth, yet giving an appearance of national cowardice because of our insistence upon attempting to legislate peace in advance of the event.

Personally I prefer the repeal of all such neutrality bills as in keeping with our tradition and our glorious history. Let us unyoke and unshackle the hands and freedom of action of our President and the Congress in international relations. Let us restore our own confidence in the Constitution. Let us not beguile the unthinking into the belief that neutrality bills enshroud them in a state of permanent peace. Peace is a state of mind, an abstract conception. War or peace is dependent upon a people's will and determination to have war or peace. If war hysteria engulfs the land, no transitory law upon the statute books will preserve and maintain peace. Before that war hysteria finishes its mad course all obstacles of man's making will be engulfed or thrust aside.

I have long felt that we should face the world situation realistically. Frankly, my sympathy is on the side of the so-called democratic powers, not because I hold any brief for the guilty acts they have committed during the recent centuries but because their maintenance of the balance of power in the world has preserved civilization and has brought us out of the Dark Ages. Only because Great Britain has had a puissant navy for four centuries was it possible for France and the United States and the Western Hemisphere to attain their places in the sun. Today we are at the brink of the precipice. Another world war may engulf the fruits of civilization and snuff out the light of learning. Paganism, intolerance, racial hatreds, pogroms are the order of the day. The worship of right is being replaced by homage to might. We may well be concerned at the dark outlook which events in Europe present and which the aggressions of Hitler and Mussolini have portended for a decade.

For that reason, Mr. Chairman, I feel strongly that the United States should denude itself of encumbering and awkward garments which have been disguised as neutrality robes. Let us courageously and fearlessly preserve without restraint our freedom of action. Let us meet each emergency as it arises.

Who knows what the morrow will bring? We may have to act very speedily to fight for peace. Hence, it is my fervent hope that we will repeal all neutrality legislation. In the event that effort fails, I shall vote for the Bloom bill, not because I believe it to be a model of perfection but because I am certain it is a vast improvement over all preceding neutrality bills, and mainly because its passage means a repeal of the Neutrality Act of 1937.

Mr. Chairman, it is of tremendous importance that the citizens of the United States awaken to the need of refusing longer to participate in Japanese aggression in China. As an enlargement of that subject, I am adding a brief statement with respect to my own Japanese embargo bill, H. R. 5432, concerning which countless citizens have expressed themselves.

MORE CITIZENS URGE PASSAGE OF JAPANESE EMBARGO BILL

Mr. Chairman, as the author of a bill providing for the embargo of the shipment of munitions and war materials to Japan, I have heretofore placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD some comments from various citizens throughout the United States on the measure. Because of the tremendous interest being shown by the people throughout the country in this measure and the formidable support being rolled up in favor of such legislation, I am including brief extracts from other letters received by me endorsing this bill. These letters are pouring into my offices in unending volume. They emanate from citizens of wealth and poverty, from people of all nationalities from every State in the Union, embrace all religions, and reveal a sentiment of great strength and volume in behalf of this proposed law. This Congress should heed the plea of these people and enact this legislation at an early date so that we will no longer be held up to the world in ridicule because we are, in effect, active participants in Japanese aggression.

The excerpts are as follows.

CHICAGO, ILL.

I greatly regret the part that the United States has played in helping Japan in her war against China. I congratulate you on introducing the resolution concerning the embargo on war materials to Japan and hope that you will be successful in having it passed.

JAMES M. YARD,

Executive Secretary, The Chicago Round Table of the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

NEW YORK CITY.

I want to congratulate you on the resolution proposed to put an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan.

Having worn cotton hose for nearly 2 years as the only means possible to me of withholding help to Japan, I hope earnestly that everything possible will be done to further the objective of your resolution and prevent our giving the slightest assistance to Japan in its unwarranted aggression.

LAURA R. SIMONS.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

It makes us partners in her guilt. Moreover, Japan belongs to the Berlin-Rome axis and these war supplies may eventually be used against us. How sorely we will be punished if our own boys are killed by ammunition we have supplied.

With best wishes that your fine resolution passes.

JEAN C. COCHRAN.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

I know literally hundreds of thinking people in this city who are heartily in accord with the resolution proposed by you for an embargo on war supplies, and on materials from which war supplies can be manufactured by Japan. We wish every possible success to your move. Press it with vigor.

EDWIN M. WILSON.

BROOKLINE, MASS.

Congratulations for your courage in proposing your resolution for an embargo on war supplies to Japan. I have hoped for such a resolution for over a year and I cannot speak too strongly in favor of it.

MRS. ARTHUR W. HARTT.

NEW YORK CITY.

We are much pleased that you have introduced a resolution for an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan.

You have our hearty support in this grand objective, and almost everybody we discuss the matter with feels the same. All success.

WELLS RICHARDSON.

RUTHERFORD, N. J.

The pending legislation placing an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan, I heartily favor. I have from the beginning felt our country was criminally responsible for supplying Japan with such a large proportion of her war material with which she has been able to wage one of the most cruel, destructive, and unjustifiable wars ever fought by any nation, civilized or uncivilized, against another nation.

WILLIAM E. SAWYER, Pastor.

THE WESLEYAN METHODIST CHURCH.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Please accept our thanks and congratulations for your resolution to embargo war supplies to Japan.

We heartily support its objectives and think it should be carried.

EDWARD D. WHEELER.

COLUMBUS, OHIO.

May we express our appreciation for your splendid effort in the resolution for an embargo on war supplies sent to Japan and our hope and prayer that it will pass.

STELLA R. MADDOX.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

The resolution of Congressman COFFEE regarding an embargo on war supplies to Japan is the kind of resolution that should have been in force for over 1 year. I strongly support and urge prompt and favorable action upon it. I consider that the probability of its involving us in war is inconsiderable. I write thus strongly because I am deeply concerned and have wide knowledge of the historical background, having lived in China for over 20 years, from 1906 to 1927. For the greatest democracy to withhold this aid from the great, struggling democracy of China is indefensible. For us to aid Japan in its aggression by failing to take such action is to brand ourselves as immoral.

E. L. FORD,

Pastor, Foundry Methodist Episcopal Church.

Brooklyn, N. Y.
We, too, must be realistic and not allow our money grabbers to sell to the very countries who may later attack us. We are a pack of fools to allow it and I am glad to see that you are doing your best to put a stop to it.

MARTHA CASAMAJOR.

New Brunswick, N. J.
Let me express the hope that you will push this resolution with all the energy of which you are capable. It seems to me highly inconsistent that while the sympathy of the great majority of the American people is with China in this outrageous undeclared war, our Government permits American merchants to sell the needed war supplies to Japan.

JOHN H. RAVEN, D. D.,
Professor, Theological Seminary.

Chicago, Ill.
Your resolution for an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan seems to me timely and I am sure has the support of a large body of citizens who are looking for some immediate change in our policy in this matter.

ELISE FAY JORDON.

Brookland, D. C.
I wish to express my deep appreciation of your effort to remove from every thoughtful American citizen the sense of humiliation and sorrow that has been ours, when we contemplate our foreign policy, especially that policy toward aggressors, and I am thinking of Japan now.

For peace-loving America to be providing more than half the war materials to Japan, making it possible for her to carry on a war of horrors, murdering and robbing a peace-loving nation, is hard for us laymen to understand.

EVA HESS.

Leonia, N. J.
I should be in hearty accord with action by the Congress that would place an embargo upon war supplies from the United States to Japan; as a concrete expression of disapproval of military aggression on the one hand, and of Japanese procedures in China on the other. To be sure, we should be diplomatic; but diplomacy ought not to involve compromise with moral convictions of right and justice.

JOHN W. VOORHIS,
Pastor, the Presbyterian Church.

Ridgefield, N. J.
I wish to congratulate you upon your resolution for an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan.

You have the courage and vision to act for the common security of the world. For as soon as the aggressor nations see that the democracies of the world are united and ready to act for their common security they will think twice before precipitating a world holocaust.

F. E. NULL.

Englewood, N. J.
I want you to know that a very large majority of my friends and patriots are strongly in favor of your resolution for an embargo on war supplies to Japan. The country has been waiting impatiently for just such a move as yours and Senator PITTMAN'S.

LEONARD JOHNSON, M. D.

Englewood, N. J.
I am writing to let you know that many of us in this section of the United States heartily support you in your proposal for an embargo on war materials to Japan.

For some time many of us have been asking our own Congressmen to support such a proposal as yours. We feel that it is foolish to cry peace while continuing to sell war materials to a dictator.

VIRGINIA P. MITCHELL.

New York, N. Y.
I have been glad to see the resolution you have so competently drawn regarding an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan, and I sincerely trust that this may be passed by the House.

All of us who are friends of China, indeed, all of us who are friends of Japan, feel the need for such an embargo, that the United States may cease its partnership with the aggressor, Japan, in her cruel and devastating invasion of China.

I favor legislation which would not only place an embargo on all war-sustaining materials for Japan, but which will enable us to assist China in her struggle for freedom, by extending credits and sending supplies.

ELEANOR L. WELCH.

New York City.
The women of the United States by their purchases are financing the massacre of Chinese women and children by the Japanese and our businessmen are supplying the arms and munitions. Both should be stopped.

HENRY H. ROSLONG, M. D.

Bangor, Maine.
Can't America be jarred out of its timid "jitters" and face the Far East problem with Colonel Stimson's farsighted realism?

MARION J. BRADSHAW, Professor.

Williamstown, Mass.
I want to express my approval for your resolution regarding an embargo on war materials for Japan, and am writing in support of the objectives which this resolution has. I feel that something of this sort is the only means of putting to an end the shameful action of this country in helping to destroy China.

F. H. CRAWFORD, Chairman,
Department of Physics, Thompson Physical Laboratory.

Minneapolis, Minn.
I am a member of the Minneapolis group for nonparticipation in Japanese aggression, and hope the resolution for embargo on war materials for Japan will be passed. Thank you for your work on this question.

MRS. A. F. MELLEN.

Pittsburgh, Pa.
I sincerely hope that the House of Representatives will pass the resolution for an embargo on war supplies from the United States. It must cause regret to every friend of the oppressed when he feels that the Japanese invaders of China are armed by supplies from this country. Let us put a stop to this.

JOHN G. BUCHANAN.

Hollywood, Calif.
I strongly support the objectives of your resolution for an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan.

MELVYN DOUGLAS.

Watertown, N. Y.
I strongly approve of the new resolution introduced by you in support of the arms embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan. I believe an overwhelming number of the citizens of this country want a stop put to this inhuman and outrageous traffic and trust that this bill will do so.

PAULINE F. GOODALE.

Parkville, Mo.
I am strongly in favor of the resolution which you have introduced to embargo goods to Japan. You are to be congratulated for your insight. Why in the name of common sense and humanity do we help Japan rape China and then turn around and arm to fight Japan at some later date? I cannot answer the question except it be due to lobbyists. Is business bigger than the Government? We have helped the dictators win Spain. Shall we now continue to help Japan win China?

HOMER L. WILLIAMS.

New York City.
May I appeal to you, as a loyal American, interested in the peace of the world and particularly the saving of the lives of innocent Chinese people, whose friend we are supposed to be, to support with all the power you have, the resolution proposed by Congressman COFFEE of Washington for an embargo on all forms of war materials to Japan.

Japan's unwarranted rape of China is one of the worst blots on our modern civilization and that America, just because of the personal greed of a small group, should be the silent partner in this ghastly thing is utterly disgraceful.

WILLIAM P. BENTZ.

St. Petersburg, Fla.
I know something of the honorableness of the Chinese character, and I do feel our country cannot afford to lose their friendship, and apart from the honorableness and morality of the affair, our commerce, if properly built up with China, is worth more to our country than the commerce with the entire South American continent. I think it is high time our country is letting Japan know that she is not destined to control everything in the Pacific, which she is absolutely obsessed with.

If there is anything I can do to help get your resolution passed by the Congress, I shall be most happy to help.

STEPHEN C. LEWIS, M. D.,
Good Samaritan Hospital.

Lawrence, Kans.
We wish to thank you for proposing the resolution for an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan, because we are heartily in favor of such an embargo and think the world would be better off today had such an embargo been made long ago.

Mr. and Mrs. WALTER H. BURNHAM.

BATON ROUGE, LA.

I favor very much an arms and war material embargo against aggressor nations and especially against Japan because of her wanton methods against the inoffensive Chinese.

LYNN M. CASE.

BARRON, WIS.

I am writing to express my sincere approval of your recent proposal for a bill placing an embargo on the sale of war materials to Japan.

MONONA L. CHENEY.

AUBURNDALE, MASS.

I wish to add my name to the people who strongly support your resolution for embargo on war material to Japan.

Mrs. JOHN E. WILLIAM.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

I wish to go on record as strongly supporting the objectives of your resolution for an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan. It is clear, is it not, that, irrespective of the situation in the west, something must be done to stop this diabolical aid to Japan.

May I join with your many friends in commending you most heartily in proposing this important resolution.

PAUL B. BREMICKER,
General Secretary, Y. M. C. A.

NILES CENTER, ILL.

I am heartily in favor of your resolution for an embargo on war supplies from the United States of America to Japan.

ARTHUR KINBERG.

DURHAM, N. C.

The embargo proposed by you, Congressman COFFEE, seems to me a plausible help toward the solving of a very difficult problem.

SUSAN GOWER SMITH, Duke University.

BEAUMONT, TEX.

The resolution for an embargo on war supplies from United States to Japan is very important and I wish to register my support.

HARRIET RIETVEZD.

NEW YORK CITY.

We heartily endorse your resolution.

We congratulate you and ask that you make a strong fight for its passage.

RETAIL STAND EMPLOYEES' UNION,
AARON D. SCHNEIDER, Business Manager.

ELMIRA, N. Y.

It is nothing short of criminal in my opinion for us as a Nation to allow the sale of munitions and armament supplies to Japan under the present circumstances.

E. RICHARD BARNES.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

I endorse the bill to ban exports to Japan.

Mrs. L. H. JOHNSTON.

DEERWOOD, MINN.

Support JOHN M. COFFEE's resolution. No war supplies to Japan from United States.

FRANK ENGMAN.

LUNENBURG, MASS.

I have noted with great pleasure that you have introduced a resolution calling for an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan.

This sale of war supplies to Japan is not only an outrage against humanity, but is a danger to the future security of the United States.

JOSEPH A. HARWOOD.

BRONXVILLE, N. Y.

I heartily endorse your resolution for an embargo on the sale of war supplies by the United States to Japan.

Mrs. D. D. VAN SLYKE.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

I am therefore strong for your bill (H. R. 5432), and I hope that you will be able to have it adopted, or one as nearly related thereto as possible.

JOHN H. COWLES.

NORTHFIELD, MINN.

Your resolution regarding an embargo on war supplies to Japan comes at a crucial time and should receive the heartiest support.

HARRIET M. HEADLEY.

I am strongly in favor of an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y.

A. A. KNOWLTON.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Most earnestly do I and many others endorse your resolution for an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan. It is certainly a tragic situation in international relations if it has come to where we may not refuse to be party to an outrageous and brutal aggression by withholding war materials and supplies with which to carry it out without it being considered either meddling in other folks' business or an unfriendly act.

F. M. SHELTON.

MUSCODA, WIS.

Congratulations on your resolution for an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan. We want you to know we are backing you. All power to you.

LOUIS BULTENA,
Pastor, Presbyterian Church.

WEBSTER, N. Y.

May I add my sincere desire to the host of requests you undoubtedly have received that you will do all you can to see that an embargo is placed on war supplies from the United States to Japan?

Rev. JOHN SCHOTT.

CORVALLIS, OREG.

I wish to express my personal support of effective legislation working toward an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan or aggressor nations generally and particularly the Coffee resolution for such embargo. Self-interest as well as humanitarian considerations makes it imperative that we cease exporting supplies which strengthen principles hostile to the causes of peace and decency, and contribute to the strengthening of a potential national enemy.

M. ELWOOD SMITH,
Dean of Lower Division, Oregon State College.

WINTER PARK, FLA.

A large number of the members of the University Club, including myself, support the objectives of your bill for an embargo on war supplies to Japan. We urge its passage.

HARVEY S. CHASE.

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.

California congratulates you on your well-conceived resolution placing an embargo on munitions to Japan.

Sentiment on the coast is 100 percent behind you, not only in California, but from Mexico to Vancouver.

In the cause of peace and humanity we trust that your resolution succeeds of adoption.

DEE SMITH.

CARROLLTON, KY.

We at home are depending on you at the helm to put this across. If we can bring war in China to an end, we have accomplished a most humanitarian act, and saved one nation from the prey of another.

JANE STRINGFELLOW.

CHICAGO, ILL.

In view of the Japanese rape of China, the very least that we can do as a decent, Christian nation is to place an embargo on war supplies of every sort from the United States to Japan.

I wish to thank you for introducing such a bill, and to urge you to use every possible effort to secure its early enactment. The country is overwhelmingly in favor of such action, as anyone can easily find out by conversing with the people.

E. M. HARRISON, B. D., Ph. D.,
Pastor, Woodlawn Baptist Church.

NEWPORT, R. I.

I am deeply impressed with the great importance of your resolution for an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan, which is gaining such tremendous support to that war in China.

MISS HELENA STURTEVANT.

CRICHTON, ALA.

Your proposed embargo stopping the sale of war supplies to Japan represents a long-needed piece of legislation.

For the sake of innocent sufferers in China, and to set an example to other nations that we stand for peace, I hope your resolution will pass.

ROBT. OF RUBEL, JR.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

I am writing to urge an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan. I strongly support the objectives of the resolution you have proposed in the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House.

ELLA B. METCALF.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

May I tell you how thoroughly I approve of your resolution for an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan. I hope most sincerely that you will keep at it until it is passed.

HATTIE L. WEBBER.

NEW YORK CITY.

I am greatly in accord with your resolution for an embargo on war supplies to Japan and wish you every success. Our part in Japan's war of aggression is a disgrace to the United States of America.

M. E. TOPPING.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

I wish to go on record as being in strong sympathy with your recent resolution for an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan, and I hope that the Foreign Affairs Committee will see fit to adopt it.

SUSAN C. ERWIN.

WYNDMOOR, PA.

I strongly support the resolution which you have proposed for the embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan.

CAROLINE C. SMITH.

LEONIA, N. J.

Your resolution deserves the powerful support of all thinking people in this country, and we owe you a debt of gratitude for your competently drawn resolution.

ELIZABETH O. LEEPER.

WASHINGTONVILLE, N. Y.

As pastor of the Presbyterian Church here I believe public sentiment is strongly in favor of an embargo on war materials to Japan, such as your splendid resolution would effect.

REV. ALEXANDER M. CONGER.

APPLETON, N. Y.

I would most earnestly urge that you do all in your power for the resolution you have introduced for embargoing war supplies to Japan. I heartily believe in this resolution and all that you are doing to help our old friends in this great time of suffering for them.

GEORGE R. HYDE.

CAMBRIDGE, MASS.

I want to express my thanks for your resolution in favor of an embargo on war supplies to Japan.

I hold reluctance between right and wrong to be immoral and, of course, at present our law is far from neutral.

C. B. RUNKEL.

ST. PAUL, MINN.

You have our hearty cooperation and support of your proposed resolution to place an embargo on war supplies from United States to Japan.

MRS. N. V. LADERE.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

I hope that your resolution for an embargo on war supplies to Japan will be acted on favorably. It is a national disgrace that we are supplying Japan with the war materials to continue her inhuman campaign in China.

MISS KATE G. MILLER.

WINTER PARK, FLA.

I want you to know that I am strongly in favor of your resolution for an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan.

MARY LEONARD.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

I wish to go on record as supporting the objectives of the resolution regarding the embargo on war supplies from the United States of America to Japan.

MAUD H. MYRIET.

NEW YORK CITY.

Please use every bit of influence to have your resolution to have the embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan go through promptly. I am speaking for a multitude of friends, as we all think this should go into effect at once.

MARY L. VAN LENNER.

LONGEACH, FLA.

You are to be highly commended for bringing before the Foreign Relations Committee a resolution favoring an embargo on war supplies to Japan. It is high time we ended this most disgraceful and shameful partnership in the destruction of the Chinese nation. What infamy! "How long, O Lord, how long?"

W. W. HIGHERBERG.

SARASOTA, FLA.

I most heartily endorse the resolution you have proposed for an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan. Let us put a stop to the most disgraceful thing the United States has ever been a party to.

LXXXIV—521

MRS. ROBERT G. MOORE.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.

We urge that you support the Coffee resolution to place an embargo on war supplies for Japan from the United States.

MARY J. BARCLAY.
MIRIAM JOHNSON.

EVANSVILLE, IND.

Most emphatically do I endorse your resolution for an embargo on war supplies from our United States to Japan. Things have reached a place where something must be done to curb Japan before it is too late for China's good. Everything should be done to make it difficult for Japan to carry on her war against China, and I am very much concerned in any resolution or legislation that will prevent nonparticipation in Japanese aggression.

VIOLA JUNG.

BOSTON, MASS.

We believe that these shipments to Japan could be stopped without incurring the risk of war with Japan, and that it is to our best interest that we give all possible encouragement to the people of China in their struggle against the unprovoked aggression of Japan. We are strongly in favor of such action as may be taken by Congress to make these convictions effective.

Signed by 45 individuals.

RUSSELLS POINT, OHIO.

Am writing you to tell you I am strongly supporting the resolution proposed by you, namely, an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan. I trust the Foreign Affairs Committee will give this proper consideration.

MRS. K. PRATER.

URBANA, ILL.

It is said the Foreign Affairs Committee is considering a resolution proposed by you for an embargo on war supplies to Japan.

We have waited long—too long—for someone to make this move. May I commend you for doing this and add my voice to others urging its speedy adoption?

Why should America furnish Japan with materials which are being used to destroy our own schools and hospitals? They are being bombed even though the American flag is displayed. And why should we help to murder innocent civilians, women, and children?

FLORENCE B. ROBINSON.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.

On behalf of thousands of members of the Episcopal Church in the diocese of southern Ohio I write to urge you and other Members of Congress to support the legislation now pending which has as its purpose the prevention of traffic in war materials to Japan.

It is obvious that no legislation will correct the present difficulty entirely, but any action Congress could take to reduce the present traffic in war materials will help to focus the mind of the country on the problem, and thus enable us to move toward the position in which this country will not be guilty of being a party to the tragic destruction going on in China today.

HENRY W. HOBSON.

NEW YORK CITY.

I was pleased to note that you have introduced legislation which would prevent the United States from supplying Japan with war materials. I urge that the bill be passed as soon as possible, in accordance with the great sympathy throughout the country for the Chinese people.

EUGENE FEENBERG.

SARASOTA, FLA.

We wish you to know that we heartily endorse the resolution proposed by you for an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan.

We assure you we are absolutely in sympathy with every thing you do along these lines.

LENA R. WULFF.

CHICAGO, ILL.

In the interest of peace, human conduct, and human understanding and for the benefit of the morality of the entire world as well as that of the United States, it is of the utmost importance that the resolution proposed by yourself for an embargo on war supplies from United States to Japan be put into effect and force as soon as possible.

MAXWELL KUNIN.

DETROIT, MICH.

We heartily approve your resolution to place an embargo on all war supplies to Japan from the United States, and urge you to use all your power to make this into law. The producers of war supplies will feel decent once more if all of them are forbidden to aid Japan against China. We know full well that Japan can do nothing against us or China either without United States supplies. The very idea of cash-and-carry is wickedly foolish; and open fraud and a transparent defense of entrenched interests.

Mr. and Mrs. CLARENCE W. WRIGHT.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

In presuming to write to you advocating passage of the bill creating an embargo on war supplies to Japan, I am motivated not so much by the desire to preserve human life, because we all have to die some day, but in preserving the great work of foreign missionaries and educators in China.

J. F. McCLENDON,
Professor, University of Minnesota.

NEW YORK CITY.

I should like to endorse most heartily your bill which would stop American shipments of war materials to Japan. The vast majority of American citizens do not sympathize with Japan's military aggressions, nor with American merchants' partnership in the bombing of civilian populations. It is time that the Congress of the United States followed the will of the people it is supposed to represent and stopped the sale of war materials to Japan.

WILLIS LAMB.

WYNEWOOD, PA.

I am heartily in favor of the resolution which you proposed to prohibit the export of war supplies to Japan. I think you have done a fine piece of work.

NORMAN E. FREEMAN, M. D.

STREATOR, ILL.

I have noted with great satisfaction the introduction by you of a resolution calling for an embargo on war supplies from United States to Japan, and I thank you. I hope it may have a great support and that we shall say to the world that our people do not approve of such ruthless barbarity as Japan has shown in this "incident" or "undeclared war" on a people that had been making such brave and rapid strides in their endeavors in building a strong, noble civilization.

Rev. ELI PITTMAN.

COLCHESTER, CONN.

Both I and my church people are interested in your resolution putting a war-supplies embargo on Japan. This ought to have been done long ago. We hope that every effort will be put forward to make it a law.

Rev. C. FLOYD MILLER.

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.

Will you please do all in your power for the support of the resolution for an embargo on war supplies from United States to Japan?

MINNIE B. BARTON.

NEW YORK CITY.

Keep up your splendid work for placing an embargo on all war materials to Japan.

ANDREW TOLSTOY.

SARASOTA, FLA.

We wish you to know that we heartily endorse the resolution proposed by you for an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan.

We assure you we are absolutely in sympathy with everything you do along these lines.

CHRISTINA SMITH.

HOMER, N. Y.

We hurt ourselves by our present course. China means more to us ultimately than several Japans.

Rev. BENJAMIN L. HERR.

NEW YORK CITY.

I should like to express to you my enthusiastic support for your resolution for an embargo on war supplies to Japan. I am sure that the country stands back of you in this fine stand that you are taking.

ELIZABETH L. GAMELE.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

As a regular voter who is sincerely desirous of putting an end to Japan's attack on China, I urge you to vote for the embargo on the sale of war supplies to Japan.

M. ELOISE SCHUYLER.

CONCORD, N. H.

I wish to express my hearty commendation of your resolution for an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan. I hope that it will go through the House and the Senate with as little delay as possible.

ARTHUR S. PIER.

GLOVERSVILLE, N. Y.

I am a lover of peace, and believe that our Government should remain neutral so far as foreign wars are concerned; nevertheless I approve of this move, for I have long been ashamed of our partnership with Japan in her aggression upon China.

Miss ANNA C. WRIGHT.

ROME, GA.

I am writing to thank you for proposing a resolution to embargo war supplies to Japan. Feeling is very strong here for such action, and let me urge you to continue fighting for its adoption.

Mr. and Mrs. PHILIP SHULHAFFER.

NEW YORK CITY.

I heartily endorse your proposed legislation on an embargo of war materials for Japan. I hope the bill will soon come before Congress and will secure an early passage. Surely the American people as a whole resent warmly our participation in the Japanese aggression in China.

M. PHILLIPS.

TYRONE, PA.

I am much interested in the objectives of the resolution proposed by Congressman COFFEE, to place an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan.

GRACE H. BURKET.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

I want to commend you on your resolution for an embargo on war supplies from this country to Japan. I feel that we should have made this move long before this, and am very hopeful for its passage.

ERNEST H. BAILEY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO.

May I express the deep interest I feel in your resolution calling for an embargo on war supplies from our country to Japan? Surely decent people can view only with horror and shame the murder-for-money policy followed by America thus far.

HENRY FORMAN.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.

I am in hearty accord with your resolution proposing an embargo on war supplies from our country to Japan and trust that you will be most vigorous in promoting it. The utter senselessness of our procedure thus far is all but exasperating to the citizen who has any regard for the rights of other democratic peoples and who is at all concerned about the future international and trade relations of our own country. If exterminating the Chinese would do us any good, I could see some little excuse for it, though even under such circumstances I could not approve; but the fact is that such extermination is detrimental to us, ourselves. Surely we should not be aiding our own enemies, as so far we have been doing.

ELLA M. HANAWALT.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.

I wish to assure you of my hearty and enthusiastic support of your proposed resolution for an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan. I most earnestly believe that such a measure is demanded by all considerations both of justice and expediency.

Mrs. J. B. JACKSON.

WASCO, CALIF.

I want to put all my strength behind your resolution for an embargo on war supplies for United States to Japan. We have dallied with this important matter far too long.

JOHN B. TOOMAY.

CHICAGO, ILL.

I am heartily in favor of your resolution to place an embargo on all war supplies to Japan. Our share in this war is a disgrace to the United States, and many of us are thoroughly ashamed of it. Such a resolution is what we want passed.

LILLIAN F. ABBOTT.

CHATHAM, N. J.

I am strongly in favor of your resolution for putting an embargo on all war supplies from the United States to Japan and hope it will go through quickly.

I am not buying Japanese goods if I know it, as I am told the silks we buy enables them to buy war materials.

Miss CORA KINNEY.

YONKERS, N. Y.

God forbid that we help Japan enslave China. Our present policy seems to me incredibly stupid, short-sighted, and ill-advised. The Chinese are a fine people and deserving of our help. They will be our friends.

Miss CORDELINE WENDT.

DENVER, COLO.

I am much gratified to learn that you have introduced a bill for an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan.

The contribution of our country to the shameful slaughter that is going on in China should be stopped without delay, and I cannot too strongly express my interest in supporting your efforts in that direction.

Mrs. WAYNE D. MYERS.

I support wholeheartedly your resolution for an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan.

It is extraordinary when many view with apprehension the possibility of a future war with Japan that we not only help her to keep up the outrageous aggression in China but are actually arming a potential enemy.

Mrs. B. HUBERT COOPER.

CLEARWATER, FLA.

I express the desire of many of our citizens that you press forward your resolution for an embargo on war materials from these United States to Japan. In the interest of humanity and wavering civilization, induce the Foreign Affairs Committee to work for it.

H. S. FLETCHER.

St. DAVIDS, PA.

Since I am convinced that the exportation of munitions and other war materials from the United States to Japan makes our country virtually a partner in Japanese aggression against China, I earnestly pledge support to the resolution proposed by you for an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan. I strongly urge that every available avenue to the accomplishment of this objective be sought.

HARRIET S. HAAS.

LAKE FOREST, ILL.

This brief note is to express most emphatically my complete sympathy with your proposed resolution for an embargo on war supplies from the United States of America to Japan. Reverently I say, God grant that something be done at once to stop this slaughter.

MINNIE MAY RUMSEY.

YPSILANTI, MICH.

This is written to express my appreciation of your action in introducing a resolution to place an embargo on our export of war supplies to Japan. This traffic has proceeded all too long and I hope very much that you will be successful in your efforts to end it.

BERTHA G. BUELL.

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO.

I hereby assure you of my sincere sympathy with the objectives of your resolution for an embargo on war supplies from the United States to Japan, and urge you to put forth every possible effort in its support.

MARTHA B. STECKEL.

EMPORIA, KANS.

As a loyal American and one who knows the Orient well, I urge you to work for legislative embargo on war materials to Japan. By our trade we are virtually Japan's partner in this unjust aggression. My conscience cries out against America having any participation in the attack upon China. Let us cease arming and aiding the aggressor.

WARREN HORTON STUART.

COLUMBUS, OHIO.

An embargo should be placed immediately on all war materials to Japan. By war materials I mean not only munitions but the other vitally necessary commodities such as scrap iron, gasoline, oil, cotton, and steel.

I cannot help admiring the resistance that the Chinese have offered against such terrific odds, due to the superior modernized equipment of the Japanese war machine, which we in America have helped to maintain by our sales to Japan of the above essentials.

BURTON M. NICHOLSON.

LAKEWOOD, OHIO.

It is indeed heartening to realize that our representatives are considering this America's crime of crimes, her participation in Japan's war guilt.

Many of us American citizens feel strongly our responsibility in this matter, and we are pleased with your resolution for an embargo on war materials to Japan.

Please feel that many of us are strongly supporting your resolution and that we fervently hope you will increase your efforts for the passing of this legislation.

HELEN E. PENMAN.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I am thoroughly convinced that the overwhelming majority of the citizens of my congressional district and of the entire Nation strongly favor a policy of absolute, complete, 100 percent mandatory neutrality in regard to all present and future foreign wars. The American people are, therefore, in favor of legislation which will insure insofar as is humanly possible a policy on our part of noninterference and nonintervention in the affairs of foreign nations. The American people are unalterably and uncompromisingly opposed to our showing any discrimination or favoritism in regard to the disputes and controversies and wars of other nations. They favor a strictly pro-American policy, first, last, and all the time, which alone will keep us out of wars in other parts of the world.

Consequently, I favor legislation which prohibits travel by our citizens on belligerent ships, prohibits trade with belligerents excepting upon a strictly cash-and-carry basis, prohibits financial transactions with belligerents, prohibits the solicitation or collection of funds for belligerents, prohibits the use of our ports as a base of supplies, denies the use of our ports to armed belligerent vessels, and continues in existence the present Munitions Control Board. The pending Neutrality Act of 1939, with the proposed amendments, does all of these things and is neutral in letter and in spirit. We thereunder accord the same treatment to all belligerents, which is the essence of neutrality and is the only policy which will keep us out of war.

Mr. Chairman, in 1897 Chief Justice Fuller, of the United States Supreme Court, in the case of the Three Friends, remarked that:

Neutrality, strictly speaking, consists in abstinence from any participation in public, private, or civil war, and in impartiality of conduct toward both parties * * *.

He went on to say—

That neutrality was the relationship which exists between the belligerents and the states which take no part in the war.

John Quincy Adams, as Secretary of State, wrote that:

The state of neutrality recognizes the cause of both parties to the contest as just—that is, it avoids all consideration of the merits of the contest.

In the negotiation of treaties dealing with neutrality the State Department has held to this traditional American view of neutrality. Up to 1938, 37 treaties dealing with some phase of neutrality had been negotiated by the Department. All of these were based upon the fundamental thesis that neutrality means a strict impartiality in the treatment of the belligerents.

Emmerich de Vattel, the French publicist whose work The Law of Nations has been the veritable bible of the United States Supreme Court since the foundation of this Republic on any question of international law, in his chapter on neutrality, states that—

Neutral nations are those which take no part in a war and remain friends of both parties, without favoring either side to the prejudice of the other. * * * So long as a neutral nation desires to be secure in the enjoyment of its neutrality, it must show itself in all respects strictly impartial toward the belligerents; for if it favors one to the prejudice of the other, it cannot complain if the latter treats it as an adherent and ally of the enemy. Its neutrality would be hypocritical neutrality, of which no state would consent to be the dupe.

American courts have held to Vattel's definition of neutrality from their very inception. In 1781 the Federal court of appeals held in the case of the Resolution that the idea of a neutral nation "implies two nations at war and a third in friendship with both."

Henry Wheaton is the best-known early American authority on international law. His work The Elements of International Law was the first study of the American interpretation and practice of international law. Concerning neutrality he writes that—

The right of every independent state to remain at peace, whilst other states are engaged in war, is an incontestable attribute of sovereignty. It is, however, obviously impossible that neutral nations should be wholly unaffected by the existence of war between those communities with whom they continue to maintain their accustomed relations of friendship and commerce. The rights of neutrality are connected with correspondent duties. Among these duties is that of impartiality between the contending parties. The neutral is the common friend of both parties, and consequently is not at liberty to favor one party to the detriment of the other. * * *

Quoting Bynkershoek, he continues:

A neutral has nothing to do with the justice or injustice of the war; it is not for him to sit as judge between his friends who are at war with each other, and to grant or refuse more or less to the one or to the other. * * * If I am neutral, I ought not to be useful to the one in order that I may hurt the other.

The pathway of neutrality is thus clearly marked, and it is the pathway of peace. Any other pathway leads to war. The most important and solemn duty to be performed by our Government and Congress at the present time is to keep our country out of war. We must avoid any and every action which might involve our country in war. We should surround ourselves with every possible safeguard to prevent war. We must not again, after our sad and bitter experience in the last World War, allow the desire of a few of our citizens for commercial profits or to extend credit to belligerents to expose us to the danger of a foreign war. Those of our citizens who wish to trade or travel in war zones should do so at their own peril. We hereby crystallize into law the wishes and hopes and prayers of the people of America, and especially of the mothers of America, that we may place peace and the lives of our young men high above the profits of international trade and finance. We refuse to form any alliance with any belligerent nation in the coming conflict, and we remain neutral. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL].

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the so-called Bloom bill, House Joint Resolution 306. The people of my district and my State, and I believe the people of America, are determined that America shall never again take part in a foreign war. Furthermore, they are unalterably opposed to taking sides in a foreign war.

The primary consideration that confronts us in considering this legislation is what course should we take to insure so far as it is humanly possible that this Nation will not be called upon again to send our soldiers across the water to fight. In determining this question and considering the bill before us, I believe it is the well-considered opinion of the majority of our American citizens that we should observe as a fixed foreign policy absolute neutrality. It is true our sympathies are with the so-called democracies as opposed to the totalitarian states, but that does not mean that America must take sides in European conflicts or join with the democracies in another conflict on foreign soil. It is my judgment that if this bill is enacted into law it will place America in a position not only to take sides in such a conflict but we will be drawn into such a combination of circumstances that it will be practically impossible for us to remain neutral. Furthermore, it will place the power within the hands of the Executive to name aggressors and to exercise his discretion in giving assistance to one foreign power as against another. This is not a neutral position but one which will ultimately lead America down the road to war.

Without doubt this legislation is designed to carry out the policies of the administration which have been openly announced on a number of occasions to which our attention has been called in this debate. America should be concerned with one question, and one question only, in deciding upon this legislation, namely, "What is the best for America?" We have our own domestic problems, which up to date we have been unable to solve. We have expended vast sums of money in an endeavor to break the depression and bring back prosperity. We have done so in vain. Our first concern should be in solving our domestic problems and taking such a course of action as will keep us at peace with the whole world, and, above all, keep us free from any involvements which will lead us into a foreign conflict. The legislation before us is not designed to accomplish that end. On the other hand, it will make more easy the entrance of the United States in a foreign conflict.

This bill places large discretionary powers in the hands of the President which are not lodged there by the Constitution. It repeals all embargoes against the sale of arms and munitions. Our munition makers should not be allowed to traffic in death by selling to belligerents death-dealing instruments of war and munitions. Let America remain neutral and not provide the means by which wars may be prosecuted. If we carry on such traffic, we cannot remain neutral and are certain to be embroiled in war ourselves. The munition makers want the Bloom bill to be enacted; the American people do not want it.

For one, I still believe that the advice of George Washington and Thomas Jefferson is as sound today as it was when given almost a century and a half ago.

George Washington, in his Farewell Address, said:

Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence (I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens), the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike of another cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots, who may resist the intrigues of the favorite, are liable to become suspected and odious; while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people to surrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none, or a very remote relation. Hence, she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves, by artificial ties, in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation; when we may choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Our foreign policy, with one exception, has always been directed along the lines of the admonition of the Father of our Country. George Washington, perhaps more than any other man in our Nation's history, was familiar with the history of foreign nations and with the wiles, intrigues, and subtle influences, desires, and motives that controlled their actions in their relationships with one another. He had led the struggling, infant nation through the trials and vicissitudes of the Revolution to gain our independence. Out of this wealth of experience he said:

Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence (I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens) the jealousy of a free country ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government.

Washington realized, as we should realize today, that our natural advantages, by reason of our detached geographical position, protected by two great oceans, and separated by 3,000 miles or more from the warring nations of Europe and Asia, are our first line of defense. In his words:

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalry, interest, humor, or caprice?

It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world.

Thomas Jefferson adhered to and advised this same course. He said, in his inaugural address, we should maintain "peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations, entangling alliances with none."

SHOULD WASHINGTON'S ADVICE, "AVOID ENTANGLING ALLIANCES," BE DISCARDED?

Mr. Chairman, America today is at the crossroads. We have come down through a century and a half of development and expansion observing the advice of the Father of our Country. During that short span, as the history of nations is reckoned, we have become a great nation and occupy a commanding position in the family of nations. We have developed in power, influence, and in the material possessions and advantages of our people more than any nation of the world in a like period. Should we now abandon our foreign policy which we have followed through the years and enter into combinations and commitments with Old World nations? Should we abandon our time-honored, independent position and assume the roll of world policeman to settle the disputes of Europe?

The one time we departed from Washington's advice, when we joined in the World War, we proceeded on the false premise that by so doing we could preserve democracy and, as the slogan said, "Make the world safe for democracy." Our American boys, 2,000,000 strong, crossed the seas following the mirage that it was a "war to end war." Instead of accomplishing those great objectives the nations of Europe, after that struggle of death, were bankrupted and thrown into a welter of turmoil, dissension, jealousies, conquests, wars, and rumors of wars, in keeping with the history of European nations for more than 2,000 years.

As a result there has now developed in Europe the Berlin-Rome axis. This combination, together with Japan, has been remaking the map of the Eastern Hemisphere. We have witnessed the conquest of Ethiopia and China, the dismemberment of Czechoslovakia, the taking over of Albania, and the threatened invasion of many other nations in the field of operations of these European powers. Opposed to Germany, Italy, and Japan are England, France, and Russia, with whom other smaller European nations are allied or in the process of alinement. The armed forces of the world are better prepared with armaments for conflict than at any other time in the world's history, and they stand ready for mobilization and ready to strike. They only await the order.

Mr. Chairman, it is said that this threatened conflict is one between the democracies and the totalitarian governments to determine which shall survive and rule the world. When we examine the alinement of these forces and the motivating causes of the unrest, we find this to be untenable. Certainly Russia standing with England and France, cannot be fighting for the preservation of democracy. The dividing line between these two groups of armed countries is not the line between the democracies and the totalitarian governments. The bones of contention today, as they have always been throughout European history, are territory for expansion and development, boundary lines, natural resources, raw materials, property and property rights, trade lanes, and routes of commerce, all climaxed with selfishness, the urge for conquest, and the greed for spoils and power.

The struggle today is the same that has been going on for 20 centuries for the control of the balance of power in Europe. It involves the control of the Mediterranean and Gibraltar, the Suez Canal and the Dardanelles, the control of Spain and the lands rich in natural resources lying east of Germany and Italy, giving an outlet to these nations to the Black Sea and the East. Such a control cuts across the life lines of England and its world-wide colonial possessions and leaves France exposed to crushing attacks from every side but the Atlantic. Its accomplishment would mean the destruction of the Balkan entente consisting of Rumania, Greece, Yugoslavia, and Turkey.

With the horrors and loss of life in the World War still fresh in our minds, the American people are of one mind, that we shall adopt that course of action which will not again involve us in a foreign war. In that great struggle there were approximately 120,000 of our soldiers who lost their lives and 182,000 who were wounded but not mortally. These same nations with whom it is now proposed that we shall join in impending conflicts are still indebted to us, aggregating, with other foreign debts, some $13,000,000,000, earned from the sweat of the brows of American citizens, many of whom are now in want and privation. This bitter experience has determined the mind of America that it shall remain aloof from foreign conflicts.

My colleagues, as I said on a previous occasion in this House, I do not know what lesson you take from these pages of history. To me they point the way. For my own part our course seems clear. Not another penny should be advanced to any of our debtor nations who have repudiated their obligations. They should pay their just debts to us. The war chorus should be silenced and made to understand that no amount of war-inspired hysteria and propaganda will budge us from our fixed purpose to make no alliances with European countries, to enter no war except a war of defense, and never again to send our soldier boys abroad to be slaughtered. We want to remain at peace with the world and be permitted to mind our own business and work out our own destiny. Other nations should be granted the same rights free from our intermeddling. The American people are determined that come what may in Europe, America must keep out, and take no part, directly or indirectly, in European entanglements. We must maintain absolute neutrality with all foreign nations to the end that we be not led into war. We must make no commitments, nor enter into any relationships, understandings, or agreements with any foreign nation with respect to Old World affairs. Furthermore, we should refuse to furnish a single American dollar for another foreign war.

We must preserve and maintain the Monroe Doctrine, limited as it is to the Western Hemisphere, which is a command to the nations of the Old World "Hands off America," a domestic policy of self-defense. Likewise, we must not meddle in European affairs. We cannot say to foreign nations, "Keep out of the Western Hemisphere," and in the same breath seek to inject ourselves into their world and attempt to influence and direct the decisions that they shall make. Our concern is to preserve, maintain, and perfect American democracy, and make it work. This should be done here, in our own country and for our own people. Except by example, we should not attempt to project our democracy or ideology into the governments of other nations.

Whenever we shall, by commitments, collaboration, embargoes, commercial restrictions, quarantine of aggressors, or any other means, endeavor to shape the course of European affairs, we are taking the first step toward war which will ultimately lead us into full and complete participation therein. We should mind our own business, maintain strict neutrality, hold aloof from European turmoil, and not take this first step toward war. Once started down the war road there will be no turning back. We must not under any circumstances become a party to a foreign war.

There is one thing that has caused more heartache and misery in the world than any other, and that is war. The sole objective of war is destruction. Brute force is its main-spring; the dead and the maimed are its harvest. It not only bankrupts nations in their material welfare but it robs them as well of all spiritual values. It not only sets nation against nation but breeds in the hearts of men, hate and the desire to destroy and tear down. It never builds; it never ennobles. Worst of all, its fruitage is the death and maiming of the young manhood of the country. It feeds not upon the old and the maimed but devours the flower of the youth of the country and leaves the living impoverished, sickened, and spiritually weakened for generations, and casts its spell and its burdens upon generations yet unborn. Over 10,000,000 soldiers were killed or died in the World War and over 20,000,000 wounded. It is estimated that it cost the United States to date over $60,000,000,000 and the nations engaged in it over three hundred and thirty-eight billions. Nothing truer was ever said than the words of Washington in his Farewell Address that America should avoid entangling alliances. America should adopt as an unalterable policy that it shall never again engage in war upon a foreign soil; that our soldier boys, if fight they must, shall spill their lifeblood only on American soil in the defense of America and the liberties of our democracy which have made us a great Nation.

We are being importuned again to go to the relief of some of these same nations as the war clouds gather over them. If we yield to the call, it will only mean one thing should war break over Europe, and that will be that we will be thrown again into the maelstrom of a war-mad world with all our resources and our American youth. With a $40,000,000,000 debt to start with, we could not finance another world conflict. We will be bled white and our own democracy may be destroyed. American blood will again run on foreign soil. Thousands, and perhaps millions, more of the little white crosses pointing heavenward will be added to those now standing in the poppy fields on distant shores—saying to the world they, our boys, made the supreme sacrifice; here they lie to Sleep the sleep that knows no breaking

Morn of toil or night of waking.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN].

NEUTRALITY LEGISLATION

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, an analysis of the large volume of propaganda coming to my desk during the past week in behalf of the so-called Bloom neutrality bill, sponsored by President Roosevelt, definitely discloses the desperate attempt now being made to involve our country in future foreign entanglements. Pressure for the passage of this nonneutral legislation comes from our New Deal internationalists, who have lately been patted on the back by certain royal figureheads of great European countries primarily interested, by social cajoling, of having the United States provide men, money, and supplies for them in the event of another foreign war.

Personally, and as a Representative in Congress from a great State, vividly recalling the false propaganda which led our country into the last foreign war, I am extremely suspicious of the pressure for the passage of the so-called Bloom bill. This legislation, as now written, does not intend to maintain a neutral position for our country. The provisions of the bill give the President additional discretionary powers in respect to our foreign policy. I am convinced that if this type of unneutral legislation is enacted into law, the first open hostilities between European powers will force our country from its traditional neutral position and into another foreign war. I am not for this type of neutrality.

I shall always support legislation and appropriations to provide for the most perfect system of national defense. I favor fully carrying out the principles of the Monroe Doctrine in the preservation of the integrity of this country and the Western Hemisphere. But I will not support any bill which, by the delegation of great discretionary powers to the President, may involve us in foreign entanglements and the possibilities of another foreign war. I am for real neutrality for the United States and shall, therefore, cast my vote against the Bloom bill now before the House.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, the very extensive and interesting debate on this resolution has made clear that—

First. Every Member of this body is opposed to war.

Second. Every one of us believes thoroughly in a national defense that is adequate to protect the Western Hemisphere against all foreign aggression.

Third. The Congress will never vote to send our boys to do battle on foreign soil outside the Western Hemisphere.

Fourth. We want to avoid foreign alliances and entanglements.

Fifth. We want to be neutral in all foreign wars.

Sixth. The arms embargo is the vital part of the present neutrality law.

The Bloom resolution is entitled "The Neutrality Act of 1939," the purpose of which is presumed to be to keep the United States neutral if and when other nations are engaged in war. Just what does "neutrality" mean? Webster's Dictionary answers:

Neutrality, specifically in international law; the condition of a state which refrains from taking part, directly or indirectly, in any war between powers.

No one wants to get into war, and we are all groping for a formula that will keep us out of war. There is an honest difference of opinion as to the best route to pursue. No law can guarantee against war, but a genuine neutrality act will be helpful. The question for us to decide here is as to whether the neutrality law now in force or the Bloom resolution will be most likely to help right now. Let me repeat for emphasis that neutrality is "the condition of a state which refrains from taking part, directly or indirectly, in any war between powers." I emphasize the words "directly or indirectly."

The major purpose of the Bloom resolution which is before us is to:

(a) Remove all restrictions on the sale of arms and war materials.

(b) Prohibit travel by American citizens in "combat areas" designated by the President.

(c) Prohibit American vessels from entering "combat areas."

(d) Ban loans and credits to belligerent nations.

(e) Require the transfer of title to foreign ownership of goods shipped to belligerents.

(f) Regulate the solicitation and collection of funds for belligerents.

(g) Continue the National Munitions Control Board with its licensing system for arms exports.

(h) Continue the restrictions on the use of our ports by submarine and armed merchant vessels.

With present embargo restrictions removed, and the President given the discretion asked for, he will be empowered to so shape the policy of this country up to the time he asks Congress for a declaration of war that it will be almost impossible for Congress to deny his request. It seems unthinkable that such vast discretionary power should be given to any individual under our democratic form of government. Remember that under the Bloom resolution the President, after making a neutrality proclamation, can authorize the sale of arms on ordinary commercial credit to one side and deny such sales to the other side; he can permit our vessels to enter the ports of one belligerent loaded with needed supplies, while barring our vessels from the ports of another belligerent; he can prevent a foreign vessel carrying arms from leaving our ports by requiring a prohibitive bond whenever he suspects that the shipment will be transferred to a tender belonging to a belligerent but "the evidence is not deemed sufficient to justify forbidding the departure of the vessel," while permitting exactly the same sort of a shipment to proceed to another belligerent. Permitting the President to name the aggressor nations will not make for peace.

With all the propaganda agencies of the administration at his disposal, it will not be difficult to sell a foreign war to the people. With Government-regulated radio and with prejudiced columnists, there will be no end to the propaganda. The propaganda of the peace groups will be as a drop in the bucket. There is no question but that an overwhelming percentage of our people today favor the policies of the so-called democracies in Europe as against the dictator nations, yet it is none of our business what kind of government they have in Europe. Let them settle their own quarrels, but they must not come over here. The present neutrality law contemplates an embargo when any foreign war develops. Through a technicality the President has escaped making this embargo effective in the Far East, thereby favoring Japan. If the American people had a vote on whether or not we would help China or Japan in the present war, there would not be enough Japanese votes to count. This is a striking example of discretion lodged in the President. However, if we want to be neutral, we cannot change that law at this time. For my part, I am utterly opposed to giving the President any more discretion, and there is no question but that our people want the Congress to take back some of the power already given to the Executive, rather than to give him further authority.

We all know that Europe is sitting on a powder keg at this moment. If war does come, and the President so proclaims, immediately all shipments of arms, munitions, and implements of war from this country to the warring nations will cease. In the opinion of those who believe in the present neutrality law, this is as it should be. The President and the Department of State think otherwise. The primary purpose of this Bloom resolution is to repeal the present law, thereby giving to certain warring nations an advantage over others. This is the President's policy. If this is the intent, then the title is a misnomer. It should be "the Unneutral Act of 1939."

Representatives of the Department of State, when appearing before the committee at the hearings, were asked whether there was any change in the international situation which should cause Congress to repeal the provision for an arms embargo at this time, and the committee was told that Hitler's taking over of 27 munitions plants in Austria and the Skoda works and 11 other plants in Czechoslovakia justified the change; that is, Germany and Italy now have more munitions factories than France and Great Britain, so it is the purpose of the Bloom resolution to change the law so that United States munitions factories will be available to Great Britain and France in case there is a war in Europe. This would favor the democracies, not only indirectly but directly. On the other hand, it would militate against Germany and Italy. Do not forget that France and Great Britain control the seas. I cannot think of a more unneutral act than for the Congress to knowingly and intentionally modify existing law for the express purpose of making the United States a supplemental arsenal for any particular nation in time of war.

Neutrality laws must be enacted before the game starts. The game is on in Europe and any legislation changing the rules at this time is bound to be unneutral, if not actually hostile, to one side.

If the administration were not so bold in stating the specific reasons for this demanded change in law, I would be prompted to ask whether this Bloom resolution is intended to be a promise to the democracies, a threat to the totalitarian nations, or just a bluff to the world.

Much is implied in that word "promise." If the Congress, by the removal of this embargo, leads France and Great Britain to believe that we are to become their ally in the production of war supplies in the eventuality of war, then in good morals we must fulfill the promise. We must at least be a silent partner in the war. Great Britain has cash enough to pay for munitions from this country for a time, but it would not be long before her cash supply would be exhausted, exactly the same as was the case in the World War. The next step in the partnership would be for our allies to ask this country for credit, the money to be spent in the United States, as was done in the World War. In the meantime our munitions factories would be expanded, our whole economy would be changed, and we would be enjoying that which for the moment seemed like economic prosperity. However, we would be paying for that prosperity with the money we loaned the allies. In the end we would be "holding the bag," just as we were after the World War. We would have gone so far that it would be very difficult to cease; because if we did, first, we would be breaking our implied promise and pledge and deserting our allies. Second, we would be upsetting our whole local employment and economic situation. Do not tell me that this would be neutrality and for the best interests of our country.

It is admitted that this resolution is intended as a threat to Germany and Italy. Do not tell me that a threat of this type is neutral and will keep us out of war.

There are none among us who will contend that the President's purpose in seeking to strike out the embargo on exportation of arms is that of a passively neutral party. Granting all good motives to the President, and not charging for an instant that he wants to get this country into war, it seems to me that it would be rather difficult to find a quicker way to get into war than to have the Congress of the United States pass the Bloom resolution and announce in this fashion that we are to become the ally and economic partner of certain powers in a prospective and, it seems, imminent European war.

This country wants no more economic stakes in the victory of either side in any foreign war, or, I might add, in the continuation of a war, even though it were temporarily economically profitable to this country. Our people prefer peace to war profits. They do not want to contribute in any way to any war anywhere.

I have received many communications in regard to this legislation. In substance, these communications urge:

- (1) An embargo on the sale of arms to belligerents;
- (2) Prohibition on American ships carrying any materials to belligerent nations;
- (3) Prohibition of American citizens to travel in war areas;
- (4) Determination by Congress as well as the President as to when the law should be invoked.

The Bloom resolution eliminates these safeguards from the present law. That is its purpose. The people of the country know that this is not intended to be a neutral bill.

Mr. Chairman, let us not be misled by propaganda that the impending war in Europe is a conflict between the doctrines of the democracy as against that of the dictatorship. There is nothing further from the truth. If these nations go to war—as now seems likely—form or type of government will not be the issue. These nations will fight for territory, colonies, boundary lines, raw materials, trade, and, last but not least, power. Our boys went to Europe once to make the world safe for democracy, and we know now that was not the issue at all. It does seem that we should have learned our lesson. We contributed our blood and treasure for what we thought was a Wilsonian ideal. We were all sincere, but we know now that it was just another European war. We changed our entire economy. We piled up billions of dollars of indebtedness. We sacrificed of the flower of our young manhood, and because of that World War we are even yet passing through the valley of one of the greatest depressions of all time. Our people are opposed to embarking upon any policy where there is even a remote possibility of repeating our experiences of the World War.

Of course we have a preference as to the various forms of government obtaining throughout the world, yet we are not the keeper of the world; we are not the policeman of the world. We have enough to do to attend to our own business, make this a better land in which to live, and influence by example rather than by attempted force. Let us quit fussing around in Europe and put our own house in order. For hundreds of years these European territorial and boundary line disputes have raged, and there is no indication that the end is near. Why should we be drawn in? If the pending war develops, it will be but a quarrel over the spoils of the last war. Everybody knows now that the Treaty of Versailles was punitive and Hitler gets some sympathy for the German people in his effort to reclaim the colonies and possessions taken away by that treaty. President Wilson was an idealist. He thought that the ways of Europe could be changed. Now we all realize the sad truth. We paid a terrible price for this knowledge. We should remember the admonition of Washington who, in his Farewell Address, said:

Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none, or a very remote relation. Hence, she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalry, interest, humor, or caprice?

While the Bloom resolution completely repeals all embargo law, yesterday the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORVY], a member of the committee handling this resolution, gave notice that he would offer an amendment inserting an embargo on arms and ammunition. As explained by the gentleman from Ohio, this embargo would cover only "lethal" weapons; that is, anything that is designed solely for use in offense and defense in war, and would not cover any other articles or materials, even though they could be changed into arms and ammunition by a belligerent, or used both for peace and war.

This amendment limits the embargo, but I prefer the present law. To me this so-called modified embargo will be ineffective, is intended as a palliative to mollify our citizens who demand an effective embargo. It is form and not substance.

I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTON], in his argument yesterday favoring this Vorys amendment, spoke as a realist when he said:

Now we are speaking frankly, and I think honestly there is not the same general objection to the purchase by foreigners of our airplanes, trucks, automobiles, petroleum, cotton, or even scrap iron, though it is recognized that these are essential to the successful conduct of war. These are not primarily lethal weapons. An embargo limited to lethal weapons might well satisfy the desires of those of our fellow citizens to whom the embargo idea has become a symbol and a hope. On the other hand, the foreign nations which may find themselves attacked are not short of lethal weapons. They have already dislocated their economy to erect vast plants for the making of guns and ammunition. What they need are the other materials and products that we have in abundance.

If a compromise is possible on the middle ground of a modified embargo, it would surely represent a consummation devoutly to be hoped for. It would comfort our own people.

The gentleman from New York does not beat about the bush at all. He makes it clear that it is his view that there should be no embargo at all—that is the administration's view—yet he recognizes the fact that the American people feel otherwise, and he wants to placate them with the thought that their symbol and hope is contained in this unneutral bill. He also makes it clear that the Vorys amendment will enure to the benefit of France, Great Britain, and Russia, the so-called democracies, if the contemplated European alliances are effected.

The more experience we have with present neutrality law, the more we are convinced of its impotency so far as guaranteeing against war is concerned. We got along pretty well under international law and if the time ever comes when a change can be made, without taking sides for or against some particular nation and thereby getting us into war, I believe the American people will carefully consider returning to international law where the President exercises his constitutional powers only, and the Congress enacts legislation to meet any emergency. No neutrality law is preferable to the Bloom resolution.

In conclusion, I repeat that you cannot change the rules of the game when the game is on and not be partial. The game is on in Europe and in China. Japan is at China's throat. The totalitarian nations and the so-called democracies in Europe are ready to shoot. Soldiers are marching. Armies are mobilized. The plans of battle have been formulated. The world awaits in fear. This is no time for loose talk, much less for spectacular legislative action. If there was ever a time in our history when we should proceed with caution it is now. To substitute the discretion of the President for the judgment of Congress in these matters is unwise. It matters not how well intended, the Bloom resolution leads toward war and not toward peace.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the power of the National Government to control foreign relations of the United States is both complete and exclusive.

The complete control is shared by the three branches of the National Government:

First, Congress, the legislative.

Second. The President, the Executive, and sometimes he shares with Senate.

Third. The Supreme Court.

The clauses of the Constitution which give Congress its share are:

Article I, section 8:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts, and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States * * * to regulate commerce with foreign nations; * * * to establish a uniform rule of naturalization; * * * to define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas and offenses against the law of nations; to declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water; to raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer time than 2 years; to provide and maintain a navy; * * * to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

Sections 1, 2, and 3 of article II describe the share of the President alone, and with the Senate, respectively:

The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America * * *. The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the militia of the several States when called into the actual service of the United States; * * * he shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls * * *. The President shall have power to fill all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session * * *. He shall receive ambassadors and other public ministers; he shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed; and he shall commission all the officers of the United States.

Article VI, paragraph 2, of the Constitution describes the share of the Supreme Court:

This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.

In our 150 years of constitutional government, Presidents, Congresses, Senates, and the public have combed them for more guidance to answer these questions:

First. Congress may declare war.

Second. The President and the Senate may make peace by treaty.

Third. The Constitution does not mention:

(a) Neutrality.

(b) Abolition or repeal of a treaty.

(c) The recognition of new governments and international agreements short of treaties.

In the past 150 years Congress, the President, and the Senate have crowded upon the reputed prerogative of the other by virtue of these same provisions. Remembering that Congress may declare war upon, and the President and Senate may make treaties with, foreign powers, suppose a treaty is consummated which provides for war when certain incidents happen. Is Congress constitutionally obligated to declare war? To appropriate money to carry on the war?

The famous Jay Treaty furnished a battleground for the fathers of our Constitution to determine these questions. The office of the President emerged the victor while our first President, George Washington, held that esteemed position.

In 1793 war broke out between France and England. The brilliant Washington, eminent statesman, successful Executive, astute scholar, capable general, the Father of his Country, ex-surveyor, soldier, author, beloved character, already belonging to the ages, undaunted by insurmountable tasks with the young Republic, the idol of his fellow men, must have possessed a deep feeling of gratitude for the assistance of his friend, General Lafayette, of France. He surely could yet feel the hot breath of the tyrant King of Britain at the point of his defending sword. His heart surely beat in sympathy to the fallen dead in the battles of the Revolution that set his countrymen free. He surely yet had dammed up inside his magnanimous heart the pity, the compassion for the men who left their bloody footprints at Valley Forge, because a tyrant stalked upon our shores.

He must have sensed the stirring hearts of grateful freemen anxious to pay their debt of gratitude to their benefactor, France. He must have felt the ties of love that existed between his countrymen and France.

He loved Lafayette and France none the less because he loved his countrymen more. With the price of liberty, the happy hearts of freemen in a great republic seared deep in his soul, he issued the first neutrality proclamation of these United States of America:

ENJOINING NEUTRALITY AS TO WAR AGAINST FRANCE

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA—A PROCLAMATION

Whereas it appears that a state of war exists between Austria, Prussia, Sardinia, Great Britain, and the United Netherlands of the one part, and France on the other, and the duty and interest of the United States require that they should with sincerity and good faith adopt and pursue a conduct friendly and impartial toward the belligerent powers:

I have therefore thought fit, by these presents, to declare the disposition of the United States to observe the conduct aforesaid towards those powers respectively; and to exhort and warn the citizens of the United States carefully to avoid all acts and proceedings whatsoever, which may in any manner tend to contravene such disposition.

And I do hereby also make known that whosoever of the citizens of the United States shall render himself liable to punishment or forfeiture under the law of nations, by committing, aiding, or abetting hostilities against any of the said powers, or by carrying to any of them those articles which are deemed contraband by the modern usage of nations, will not receive the protection of the United States against such punishment or forfeiture; and further, that I have given instructions to those officers, to whom it belongs, to cause prosecutions to be instituted against all persons who shall, within the cognizance of the courts of the United States, violate the law of nations, with respect to the powers at war, or any of them.

In testimony whereof, I have caused the seal of the United States of America to be affixed to these presents, and signed the same with my hand. Done at the city of Philadelphia, the 22d day of April, 1793, and of the independence of the United States of America the seventeenth.

G. WASHINGTON.

By the President:

THOMAS JEFFERSON.

One cannot read that proclamation without there stirring in his breast a pride that George Washington never needed to mention the word "neutrality." The observance of the rules laid down in these few short phrases commanded conduct of the American people so that we avoided that war.

I want this Congress to bear in mind that the first neutrality proclamation was issued by the President under his constitutional authority after a war had broken out between France, England, and several European countries, and the proclamation was addressed to particular belligerents and the condition of war as it existed at that time.

When the chairman of the committee took the floor after the speech of the ranking Member of the minority side, he incorporated in the RECORD the neutrality proclamation of George Washington, and claimed that this bill would give a parallel result. This bill gives wide and extra constitutional powers to the President, and the people of the United States are already afraid of the bias and the prejudice of the present holder of that office. They have listened to the statements of this President.

The people have listened to the address of the President before the Seventy-sixth Congress on January 4 where he virtually invited us to join a holy war. Laying side by side the proclamation of neutrality of George Washington, issued in his constitutional capacity as the exclusive agent of our Government in speaking with foreign countries, the people do not feel that this President bears the armor of peace in his soul.

I ask the Members of the House to read the discussions of Alexander Hamilton, under the pseudonym "Pacificus," contributed to the Gazette of the United States in the first article dated June 29, 1793, where Hamilton discusses the constitutional questions fortifying President Washington's position that he had constitutional power to issue a neutrality proclamation.

Hamilton contended:

First. That the conduct of the foreign relations of a state is an executive function and, except where the Constitution provides, otherwise, belongs to the President upon whom the Constitution bestows the executive power; and Second. That power granted by the Constitution to Congress to declare war does not diminish the discretion of the President in the exercise of powers constitutionally belonging to him.

The language of the Constitution: "The executive powers shall be vested in the President of the United States of America" is entirely different phraseology from: "All legislative powers herein granted" that limit the powers of Congress to specified powers and the phraseology that the powers and functions of the judiciary "shall extend to" certain enumerated cases.

"Executive power" though clearly stated is vague and has been subject to constitutional interpretation.

The interpretation of these enumerated powers is frequently such as to give the President an extraordinary and practically undefined range of authority.

The exact limits of the Presidential power in time of war is entirely different than his power in time of peace.

Neutrality legislation addresses itself to conduct of this Nation in time of our national peace. From the point of view of a peaceable nation, I will discuss the President's powers in reference to negotiations with foreign countries.

The function of managing the foreign relations may be classified into two distinct branches:

First. The power of intercourse, intercommunication, and negotiation.

Second. The power of entering into formal or binding international compacts.

The second power is shared by the President with the Senate, but the former belongs exclusively to the President.

John Marshall, in the House of Representatives on March 7, 1800, stated:

The President is the sole organ of the Nation in its external relations and its sole representative with foreign nations.

At this time I want to call your attention to the status of the Department of State, which has been recognized as a department more directly subject to the control of the President than any other department. The act creating the Department of State in 1789 was an exception to the acts creating other departments of Government. From the beginning the Senate has never assumed the right to direct or control it, except as to clearly define statutory matters not connected with the conduct of our foreign relations.

I note in the Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, page 1420, that Senator John C. Spooner made this observation in regard to addressing communications to the State Department:

We direct requests to the real head of that department, the President of the United States and as a matter of courtesy we add the qualifying words "if in his judgment not incompatible with the public interest."

In the light of this observation let us see what control the President exercises over our foreign relations.

The President possesses the whole power of initiating and formulating the foreign policy of the Government.

We have seen the President exercising that power freely, and defying us to give us any information as to what his foreign policy is. The President, through the State Department, has the exclusive channel of communication between this country and foreign nations, and when he chooses to give us any information, then only can we get it. The agents of countries rely upon his word and rely upon Congress to back up its agent.

Ex-President Taft, on diplomatic correspondence, has said:

He—

The President—

is bound in such correspondence to discuss the proper construction of treaties. He must formulate the foreign policy of our Government. He must state our attitude upon questions constantly arising. While strictly he may not bind our Government as a treaty would bind it, to a definition of its rights, still in future discussions foreign secretaries of other countries are wont to look for support of their contentions to the declarations and admissions of our Secretaries of State in other controversies as in a sense binding upon us. There is thus much practical framing of our foreign policies in the executive conduct of our foreign relations.

Students of government who know of these constitutional powers of the President are gravely concerned about the effect of any commitments given by this President of the United States, because during the administration of this President, Congress has been subservient to the will of the President and should he make a commitment to any combination of nations in Europe or Asia, whether wise or unwise, the people of America are afraid of an appeal to uphold the hands of a President who has made a mistake, who has submitted to pressure, who has submitted to his own personal beliefs to back up those beliefs with our men, with our money, with our homes, with our savings, and with our blood. There has been considerable discussion as to the real motive of the King and Queen of Great Britain visiting our shores. There has also been negotiations between Great Britain and Russia which have embodied mutual commitments of protection.

The people of America do not want the President to commit us to any combination of foreign powers who by treaties and pacts duly consummated among themselves, may bind us by their conduct and alliance, and, if I might go so far as to say, political intrigue on the happening of a certain event that they have provided for, that we should go to war.

President Wilson contended:

The initiative in foreign affairs, which the President possesses without any restriction whatever, is virtually the power to control them absolutely. The President cannot conclude a treaty with a foreign power without the consent of the Senate, but he may guide every step of diplomacy, and to guide diplomacy is to determine what treaties must be made, if the faith and prestige of the Government are to be maintained. He need disclose no step of negotiation until it is complete, and when in any critical matter it is completed the Government is virtually committed. Whatever its disinclination, the Senate may feel itself committed also.

The cases of Foster v. Neilson (2 Pet. 253), decided in 1829, and Williams v. Suffolk (13 Pet. 415), decided in 1839, have definitely upheld this power of the President and there can be no question as to the President's right and power under ordinary circumstances to initiate and formulate such foreign policies as he may deem proper, and virtually commit Congress and the country to their execution.

Policies leading to disturb relations with foreign countries and even endangering the peace and safety of the country have been adopted at the will of the Executive.

It is no wonder that the people of the country are crying out for a voice in determining the conduct of their foreign affairs. It is no wonder the people of the country have risen up and demanded that their representatives address themselves to neutrality, and it is all the more conspicuous how ineffective the bill under consideration is to give the people any assurance that their relations with foreign countries will be the relations directed by themselves or dictated by one person, the Chief Executive.

In the last 10 years there have been rumors that at London a full year before our declaration of war, President Wilson committed us to assist the Allies in the World War. I say committed us, because with it he committed over 350,000 boys of America to slaughter, he committed $25,729,000,000, the cost of the war up until June 30, 1921, of hard-earned American money from the rank and file of the people, representing their savings over a period of years, and he committed thousands of the finest young men in the country to maimed and broken bodies, crushed hearts, and nervous wrecks. The boys themselves that fought in that great conflict, if they knew where to strike at neutrality would want to muzzle any Chief Executive of either party from making such a commitment without any control, direction, and guidance of the people, who give their sons and daughters, their wealth, their homes, and their lives for some imagined ideology of a President. And here is the gravamen of the really popular demand of the people. The striking resentment of the public against one-man commitments have been ringing to high heaven long before there was a putsch in Germany and a march on Rome, and this administration instead of answering that call with a constitutional curb upon the President, yes, even a chance for the people to vote upon a constitutional amendment that would give them the right to commit themselves to the President before he commits himself to any foreign country has never been brought forward by this administration.

As early as 1826, when President Adams was about to send representatives to the Panama Congress, Senators Hay, Woodbury, White, Van Buren, and Benton opposed the United States sending members to such congress, because they thought it was to be a congress of belligerents that by our very taking part would compromise the neutrality of the United States, would involve us in "entangling alliances," and incur the risk of war with Spain.

Van Buren—later President—said:

It is, then, the design of the Executive to enter into an agreement at the congress that if the powers of Europe make common cause with Spain, or otherwise attempt the subjugation of Spanish America, we shall unite with the latter and contribute our proportion to the means necessary to make the resistance effectual.

Van Buren observed further that this was—a measure by which the peace of the country is to be exposed to a contingency beyond the control of our government * * * we shall bind ourselves, in a certain event, to pursue a certain course, whatever those to whom the Government of the country may have been committed, shall think the honor or interest of the country may require.

In the House of Representatives President Adams' participation in the Panama Congress was equally opposed by some Members.

The resolution of Congress to instruct the ministers through the influence of Webster was eventually voted down. Congress yielded, because it was convinced, as summed up by Senator Johnson, of Louisiana:

There is nothing peculiar in the present case. The President has at all times the power to commit the peace of the country and involve us in hostilities, as far as he has power in this case. To him is confided all intercourse with foreign nations. To his discretion and responsibility is entrusted all our delicate and difficult relations; all negotiations and all treaties are conducted and brought to issue by him.

Even the opponents of President Adams, among whom was the illustrious Van Buren, later to become President of these United States, admitted that no matter what action the Senate or Congress might take, President Adams could still constitutionally provide for such a mission on his own authority.

The Panama mission of 1826, with all the reputed dangers attributed to it, is of little importance here, except to illustrate that the President alone has the power to decide upon a certain diplomatic policy such as this mission presented, and it was likewise within his exclusive power to determine whether or not its consequences might involve the peace and safety of this country.

This power of the President has been demonstrated in actual practice again and again. During a period of about 25 years—1823 to 1849—the Cuban policy of the Executive was consistently friendly to Spain and a guaranty of Spanish sovereignty; after the Mexican War that was changed to a policy whose chief end was the acquisition of Cuba by the United States, and in the development of which American diplomacy has been characterized as aggressive and intolerant; while during the period after the Civil War it was again changed to a policy of commercial and humanitarian interest, culminating finally in actual intervention and war.

President Grant's handling of the Virginius incident in 1873, President Cleveland's of the Venezuelan affair of 1895, and President Wilson's of the Mexican situation throughout the entire course of his administration illustrate the power of the President both to bring on and to avert diplomatic crises. Mention need only be made of such events as Washington's neutrality policy, the Monroe Doctrine, the annexation of Texas, the Mexican War, the Alabama claims settlement, the acquisition of the Panama Canal, the "big stick" doctrine, our entrance into the war with Germany—all these and many more must be set down to the credit of Executive leadership in the field of foreign relations.

I say without fear of contradiction that the President, through his exclusive control of diplomatic intercourse, holds in his keeping the peace and safety of the United States, that he may initiate diplomatic policies, conduct diplomatic relations in such a manner as to force this country into war without any possibility of hindrance from Congress or the Senate. It has been suggested by some newspaper circles, and denied by the President, that the President invited a participation on the high seas at a conference between the United States and Italy, Germany, and other European powers.

The people of America fear the President of the United States and his bid for consultation and influence in the power politics of Europe, and the President of the United States surely knows that they fear it. And this Congress surely does not want the people of America to again be committed by one man to a course of conduct concerning nations and people with whom we have no direct national quarrel.

And I submit that whether you pass the neutrality legislation or not, if the President wants to meet upon the high seas with Hitler, Mussolini, Chamberlain, or Daladier, or Kaiser Wilhelm, that this Neutrality Act will never stop him, and it is needless to say that he can commit us to war and this Neutrality Act will be of as little value as a bucket brigade in the Chicago fire.

Let me call to your attention a second phase of the President's control over foreign relations. Has anyone ever disputed his power to recognize the belligerency or independence of new states and governments? Has anyone questioned his right to refuse to recognize Czechoslovakia and his right to protect the Czechoslovakian Embassy in the city of Washington against the orders of the German Government?

This power, though not expressly granted by the Constitution, is implied from the general power to enter into diplomatic relations with foreign countries through the making of treaties, the exchange of accredited envoys. The power is not conferred on any one department, but is now generally conceded as belonging to the Executive.

In practice in 150 years of the history of our constitutional Government, recognition has always been extended as the exclusive act of the President. New states come into existence often by revolution from an existing state. Recognition is a normal act provided the new community has won its contest and successfully maintained its separate existence and independence, but recognition at a proper time and premature recognition are entirely two different things, and the President of the United States again can commit us to war and this neutrality legislation will not help one iota.

Let us examine the record of the Presidents of the United States with reference to this power.

In 1817 President Monroe, sympathetic with the aspirations of the South American provinces for recognition, feared possible complications with Spain and declined to recognize the new South American states until he was satisfied that Spain would not resent the act with war.

President Jackson was extremely cautious about arousing the hostility of Mexico through a premature recognition of Texas, and referred the Texas situation, in his message of December 21, 1836, to Congress. Let us see what he said about premature recognition at that time:

At all times an act of great delicacy and responsibility, but more especially so when such state has forcibly separated from another of which it had formed an integral part and which still claims dominion over it. A premature recognition under these circumstances, if not looked upon as a justifiable cause of war, is always liable to be regarded as proof of an unfriendly spirit to one of the contending parties.

He therefore announced that he considered it "with the spirit of the Constitution and most safe," that the power of recognition, when probably leading to war, should be exercised "with a previous understanding with that body by whom alone war can be declared, and by whom all provision for sustaining its perils must be furnished."

The power of recognition belongs to the President, and I am sure I need call your attention to no further cases to show how easily that power may involve us into serious complications with foreign nations, and in such cases should be exercised with due regard to that branch of the Government whose power it is to declare war.

Because Congress has the power to declare war, the salient feature of this bill is that it commits Congress ahead of time to give the President the sole power to determine our future course of conduct with foreign nations and virtually destroys the constitutional power to deliberate in the greatest deliberative body of the world, the grave consequences and the grave necessity of declaring or not declaring war against a foreign country in the future.

The President has power to receive and send accredited envoys and he also derives the power to withdraw the diplomatic representatives at his pleasure, or dismiss representatives of foreign powers, and thus sever all relations with the particular country.

Is there anything in this bill that will stop a President of the United States, who is intent upon placing his bid in power politics in foreign alliances from exercising this power in such a way as to produce an immediate incident with foreign nations?

The President has publicly spoken that he would use methods short of war. In the time allotted to me I have not been able to discuss the exclusive powers of the President that are short of war commonly known as powers in the twilight zone.

The people of America fear that as long as Congress is subservient to the will of one man, that those of us who might honestly oppose the commitments of this President would be subjected to the indignity of being called copperheads, reactionaries, partisans against the President. The people of America are afraid that the debate will turn upon the same battleground as the reorganization bill presented with party stalwarts taking the floor calling for the members of the majority party to read the story of Lorna Doone, and to aim their guns lower.

The people of the United States do not want one-man government. They do not want this President, or any other President, to have the power to commit us to war by his conduct of foreign relations. They do not want us committed to power politics in Europe over the conference table. They resent open letters to foreign governments over affairs that have our personal sympathy and compassion, but are none of our national business. They resent notes of protest from our State Department that infer our personal bias, passions, and prejudices. They do not want the discretion of life and death of their children lodged in the ambitious hands of one man. They do not want a bill that will serve one side, sold to them as a neutrality bill.

The people of America resent military flourishes that shadow totalitarian state receptions.

The people of America want a man to fill the office of the President of the United States with the vision of a Washington, and with the philosophy of a man content with the greatest honor which the world can bestow upon one of her children.

I shall vote against this bill because it will not vouchsafe the people the relief they want—peace.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT].

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, in this present Congress on March 4, at a joint session in this room, we sat at a ceremony in commemoration of the One Hundred and Fiftieth Anniversary of the Commencement of the First Congress of the United States under the Constitution. One of the speakers on that occasion was the Honorable Charles Evans Hughes, the Chief Justice of the United States, and I quote from his speech on that day:

The American people are eager and responsive. They listen attentively to a vast multitude of appeals, and with this receptivity it is only upon their sound judgment that we can base our hope for a wise conservatism with continued progress and appropriate adaptation to new needs.

We shall do well on this anniversary if the thought of the people is directed to the essentials of our democracy. Here in this body we find the living exponents of the principle of representative government—not government by direct mass action, but by representation which means leadership as well as responsiveness and accountability.

And he goes on developing that thought, which time does not permit me to quote here, but finally he arrives at a sentence that makes a telling point in American progress—and I quote:

And what the people really want they generally get.

What have the people asked for? The universal demand by the fathers and mothers and the thinking folks of this Nation is for a neutrality bill.

This bill before us has two bad features: One, section 3, "Areas of Combat Operation." This section we are now told will be stricken from the bill. I wish to congratulate the committee on that decision.

The second feature to which there is objection is the elimination of the embargo on arms and munitions. Some argument has been advanced that there is no logical difference between the selling of such articles of highly explosive natures as machine guns, and so forth, and the selling of commodities such as wheat, cotton, and motorcars. Therefore, they say be prepared to forego the exporting of cotton, wheat, and so forth, or be logical and abandon the present policy regarding the sale of arms.

One editorial has rightly referred to this reasoning as "dangerous nonsense." Arms and munitions by their very nature are highly specialized commodities, specifically and originally designed for the taking of human life and the destruction of property. The fundamental difference, therefore, of character between arms and other objects of trade has had a just recognition throughout the history of international law, the distinction being absolute contraband and conditional contraband of war.

As I have stated, the bill had two objectionable features: The naming of combat areas and the lifting of the arms embargo. The former has been eliminated by the committee, and I intend to vote against the latter. I believe that such action is carrying out the mandate of the people and will help in keeping our Nation out of war and foreign entanglements.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE].

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, there is a wave sweeping over this entire Nation which, rightly or wrongly, intelligently or unintelligently, demands of this Congress the enactment of a neutrality law that will keep this Nation out of war. [Applause.] The mail which I have received in great volume since I have become a Member of Congress has reflected this sentiment in no uncertain terms. The men and women of America are demanding that we lay our cards on the table and tell the nations of the Old World that we are going to stay out of any foreign war.

The pending neutrality legislation—the so-called Bloom bill—is, as I understand it, the administration's answer to the demand of the people of this Nation that we write legislation which will keep us out of war. Without emotion I want to endeavor to analyze this bill, section by section, for a few moments, as I find there is a tremendous amount of misinformation, not only in this House but throughout the length and breadth of the land, as manifested by the editorials which appear in the pamphlet submitted by the gentleman who has acted as chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee.

Section 2, 4, and 5 of the present bill, with the deletion of section 3, as proposed by amendment, are the administration's response to the demands of the people that the Congress write a neutrality law which will effectively keep us out of war. Bear in mind that none of these sections become operative until a proclamation has been issued by the President under the authority of section 1 of the act. This section is not mandatory in character but vests in the President great, broad, discretionary power. Before he is required to act and required to issue a proclamation naming the countries at war he must make certain findings, and this bill reserves to him the discretion as to when he shall make those findings, if he makes them at all.

First, he must find that a state of war actually exists between certain foreign nations. Second, he must further find it is necessary to protect the security or preserve the peace of the United States or protect the lives of the citizens of the United States. Then, and only then, by the terms of this act is he required as a mandatory duty to issue a proclamation naming the states that are involved in this controversy. Remember that sections 2, 4, and 5 are under the very terms of this bill dependent upon the issuance of such a proclamation, and none of these sections become operative, not a single provision of this law, as a matter of fact, becomes operative, to affect and protect the neutral position of this Nation until the President in his discretion sees fit to issue such proclamation. In the event of a general undeclared war in Europe, who can state with certainty when the President will make such findings, if at all, and issue the proclamation? Under the present law he has failed to publicly note the existence of a state of war that has been carried on for a long time between Japan and China.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, he has utterly failed to perform this solemn duty imposed upon him by present law to find that a state of war exists, and as a result, despite the fact that every citizen of the world knows a war is continuing over there in China the President has seen fit, because of some purpose that he alone knows, to publicly refuse or fail to carry out the mandate of this Congress contained in the present law and proclaim the existence of a state of war and impose an embargo.

In considering the first section of this bill I ask, Who is there who can say in the event of the existence of a state of war between the nations in Europe the President will issue a proclamation that will set in force the provisions of the so-called neutrality act? Suppose he does see fit to issue a proclamation naming the nations involved in war, then what happens? There are a lot of people who have a mistaken idea as to what will happen.

The next section provides what? They propose an amendment which says that no citizen of the United States shall sail upon a foreign ship except at his own risk and subject to such regulations as the President may again determine. In other words, the people of this country demand that, in the event of a finding of war and the issuance of a proclamation, citizens of the United States stay off foreign ships and keep this country out of war.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to go through all the provisions of this act, but I cannot do it in just a few moments. May I take time at this point to call attention to just one thing. There is a bill pending before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries which is the first cousin to this act. You enact the pending neutrality bill and you will be called upon to pass the bill now pending before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. What does that bill provide? It provides for the setting up of a revolving fund of $100,000,000 in the Treasury of the United States and creates a Bureau of War Risk Insurance which will permit the United States to insure the hulls and the bottoms of every foreign ship which will be called upon to carry the merchandise back to Europe that these foreign belligerents may order and pay for on the line and in which we have no interest. It further will permit this War Risk Insurance Board to insure the lives of American seamen and American bottoms carrying this contraband, if you please, to foreign nations, contraband in which we have no interest and which will directly take us into war. I am opposed to it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, to you who would eliminate the arms-embargo provision from any bill in the hope that it will keep us out of war, let me bring back the lesson of history of 20 or more years ago.

This week we observed the twenty-fifth anniversary of the firing of the shot at Sarajevo. This week we observed the twentieth anniversary of the conclusion of the World War by the peace treaty at Versailles. Those echoes are resounding in this Chamber today.

When that war came on Charles M. Schwab, of Bethlehem, took himself immediately to London and came back with substantial munitions orders. When they began to transport munitions from this country there was introduced in the Senate of the United States by Senator Hitchcock a resolution, one of perhaps a score, to put an embargo upon the shipment of arms. What happened to that resolution? I will read you from history. Lord Cecil Spring-Rice, the British Ambassador, advised Viscount Grey that such a position by the United States would be unneutral. On the 11th of December 1914, Viscount Grey suggested unofficially to the Government of the United States that the Hitchcock resolution would be "special legislation passed while a war was in progress, would be a radical departure from long-established custom, and would be definitely an unneutral act." We tried to put an embargo in effect at that time, but the wells of hysteria had been churned and emotions were running full force. Mr. Bryan said to Viscount Grey that the administration was not behind the Hitchcock resolution. It was then too late to avert the inevitable with an embargo on arms. We were moving on into Armageddon, and it was too late. I say to you gentlemen today, it will be too late if we do not put an arms embargo in this bill today. [Applause.]

Let the first artillery shot be fired on the other side and then hysteria will move across the land even as it did in 1914, let the first vessel bearing arms of American manufacture be torpedoed whether title passed or not, and frenzy begins its tragic march. I prophesy to you today that if we do not put an embargo on arms and ammunition in this bill we will never have another chance. The ghost of history rises today to admonish us of the experiences of 20 years ago.

Secondly, I hope that section 2 will have the exception eliminated so that not even the President of the United States can make any exception with reference to our citizens traveling on vessels of belligerents. [Applause.] It was 23 months from the time the Lusitania went down off the Irish coast until we went into war. What were the events of history? First, 159 American lives went down to a watery grave on the Lusitania. Then in succession came the torpedoing of the Gulflight, the Falaba, the Dacia, the Hesperian, and the Arabic—British and French vessels with two or three Americans on board. We read the front page accounts. Staring at us were photographs of American citizens who were victims of submarine warfare. Hysteria and frenzy went across the land. Then came the Sussex. Then came the Laconia. President Wilson was sending a message to Congress when the Laconia was torpedoed off the Irish coast with two American women on board. The son of the American mother who lost her life was living in London. He telegraphed to President Wilson and said, "What are you going to do about it?" Once more hysteria went across the country, and inevitably we were being led into the abyss of Armageddon. If we avail ourselves of the lessons of history, we will demand an unequivocal measure which will absolutely prohibit the travel of American citizens on belligerent vessels.

Third, I say to you who entrust yourselves to the abstruse tenets of international law, go back and read about the tortuous course of international law in 1917. Read about contraband and noncontraband, visit and search, search and seizure. Read the notes on blockades, effective blockades, and cordon blockades. Read all the tortuous language of diplomacy. Yes, it was down the pathway of international law that we walked into carnage and shambles in 1917. For the sake of an elusive and undefined and unenforceable thing which provides no embargo on arms, no prohibition against travel on belligerent ships are you willing to give away what progress we have made toward peace?

It is interesting to hear the older Members of the House talk about the night of April 6 when the war resolution was adopted. I was a student at a university and getting ready to go into that war. I served 18 months over on the other side. Today, in the light of history and on the basis of that background, according to my own lights and with what conviction I can muster, I am going to do my little bit to help keep America out of the next war. [Applause.]

In so doing I shall support an arms embargo. I am going to support a provision to keep our citizens off of belligerent vessels, as a hope, even though slender and tenuous, that it will stop the wells of emotion and hysteria and keep the feet of America in the pathways of peace. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JOHNS] such time as he may desire.

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill in its present form. Unless it is amended very materially, I shall vote against it.

The bill as written gives entirely too much power and discretion to the President of the United States. No one man, whether he be President, or a private citizen, should have such power given him where this discretion and responsibility rests under our Constitution in this Congress.

With the provisions of this bill as presented to us, the President has the power to decide for himself where a state of war exists between certain nations. He may then by proclamation say what commerce, if any, may be carried on with the United States and these warring nations, what amount and kind of credit they shall be granted. Under his power he need not take into consideration any existing indebtedness that may then exist between either of the warring nations or other nations owing to the United States. In other words, this bill gives to the President absolute power and discretion to regulate commerce between this Nation and other countries involved in war and the amount of credit to be extended to them.

It will be much better for us to keep the power given us to regulate the commerce of the United States at all times.

The President has it within his power if Congress is in session, and if not in session, to call it into special session to bring to it any facts which in his mind may be of sufficient importance to justify our intervention in any war to protect our interests at all times.

The citizens of our Nation, at least in my district, are against giving this power to any one man even though he be the President of the United States. It is a dangerous thing to do, and I am against it.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK] such time as he may desire.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, from the debate there remains no doubt that the present bill, the so-called Bloom neutrality bill, embodies the demands of the administration and of the President of the United States. I am opposed to the act, not because the President is a Democrat. I would much more prefer to favor the President than to oppose him, and I am sure my record will show that I have never cast a party vote against any measure in this House. I have at times voted with the administration when I was the only Republican on this side of the Chamber who did.

At no time, however, have I failed to vote my convictions, and no matter how friendly I may be to the President and in favor of many of his objectives, I still, as a Member of this House, have a duty to perform and in the performance of that duty I must follow my convictions as I see them. According to the best light I have, the passage of this act may lead us into war. I do know that by following the present law we have kept well out of foreign embroilments. My purpose is to keep the United States out of any foreign war no matter what countries may be mentioned. We had absolutely no business in the last war; we are paying for it now. Thousands of the best men in the United States lost their lives, hundreds of thousands of others were injured in body and mind, and billions of dollars were thrown into the mad whirl of war. All to no purpose, because the peace terms of that peace were a breeder of war, and for proof of this we can stop long enough to unfold the present picture of Europe. In addition to that we loaned billions of dollars to the Allies and today we are holding the sack for a total debt of $20,000,000,000, a very small portion of which will ever be paid. We are paying it each day. We are paying the interest on this debt every day. Have we not learned any lesson from interfering in Europe?

I am opposed to this act because it puts too much responsibility on the President of the United States. Why do we want to shirk our constitutional responsibility? We were elected by the people; we represent them; it is our duty to pass upon the question of war. I am willing to shoulder this responsibility as long as it is my responsibility. Why hand this power over to the President? Some have said we are not doing this in the present act; but let us see. Under this act the President, when he sees fit, can, by proclamation, declare that certain nations are at war. After he so declares he can then, by another proclamation, prohibit citizens of this country from traveling on any vessel belonging to any of those countries at war. He can by proclamation prevent citizens of this country or any ship of this country from entering into any combat area as the President shall fix it in his proclamation announcing a state of war. The President can further prevent business transactions with those countries. An exception is made in case of old war debts; but that is meaningless, as no country seriously intends to pay those debts. Those Liberty bonds have been and will be retired by taxes paid by the citizens of this country.

The present law gives the President power to proclaim a state of war whenever he finds that a state of war exists. No one knows how long it will take the President to make this discovery. Japan has been murdering China now for approximately 2 years and the President has not as yet made that discovery. If he did, then under the present law the embargo provision against arms would apply to both China and Japan. Since the President has not made that discovery yet we have sold enough scrap iron, guns, and munitions to Japan to assist in killing millions of Chinese.

Suppose again the President did name countries at war, but left the allies of those countries out, we could still ship all the death-dealing instruments our munition manufacturers desired to sell to those countries. This alone would have the effect of forcing those countries who suffered from our action into a declaration of war against this country. With the embargo left out of the present bill, it looks to me like a clean-cut munitions bill to sell munitions to anyone who had the cash. If that is our Christian attitude on stopping war, I say it is none of Christ's teachings.

The act will give a power to the President that he should not ask for and should not have. If we want to keep out of war, let us keep out. If we mean to do the right thing, and the Christian thing toward all nations, let us take control of the munitions plants of this country now, in accordance with my resolution now before this Congress, and stop the paid propaganda for war. It is all right for the King and Queen of England to visit us. We welcomed them as we should the sovereign powers of any nation, but just because of that visit, let us not embrace England or any other country with a revocation of the Johnson Act, that prevents a country in debt to us of getting any more money; just because we like the King and Queen of England personally, do not let us put the President in a position where, if England is at war, he cannot determine that fact as he cannot determine that fact with respect to Japan and China. If he did not determine it, we could ship our whole munitions output to England, and that alone would be sufficient cause for the opposition to England to declare war against us.

Let us be men about this matter. If we want to fight England's battles, let us stand up here and say so; if we intend to keep out of all foreign wars, let us stand up here and say so and not clothe the President with powers which in all probability will lead us into war.

Remember the history of our times in 1914 to 1917—the great war hysteria which swept America. It was all handmade—made to order—made for a purpose—made for war profits. That same hysteria can again be artificially created—we are not yet immune from it. The same interests control our munitions, the same financial interests of the United States have old debts in Europe, which they will want our young men to protect, and that selfishness and greed and profits, at the proper time, will make monsters of us all. We covet no foreign territory as a nation, we wish to be friendly with all nations; we desire to live under the Golden Rule. We want peace, and we believe in Christ and his teachings. If this Congress will keep its powers and follow those teachings, we will not get into any war. If it is necessary to drive the money changers out of the temple before we can accomplish this mission of peace, let us have the courage of Christ and drive them out. [Applause.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, judging from the remarks of my colleagues on the left side of the House and their loud applause to the suggestions that we go back to international law, I take it for granted that they do not have very much objection to this bill. If they are really in earnest when they are committing their applause and making the statements that they favor international law, then after the adoption of the amendments which will be proposed by the Democratic members of the committee, my Republican friends should certainly support this bill. When we really analyze the bill, section by section, lay aside our political thoughts, and lay aside our prejudice against some of the foreign countries, we have practically international law if this resolution is adopted with the proposed amendments.

What do we find under section 1? We find that the provisions of that section simply give the President the right to issue a proclamation when two or more states become engaged in a conflict and he believes the peace of this country and its citizens are in danger.

Then under section 2 it provides that when American citizens travel in ships of belligerent nations they do so at their own risk. The bill would give them timely warning of that fact.

Under the decision of the Supreme Court in the Curtiss-Wright case, the Court clearly holds that the President has unlimited powers in dealing with foreign countries and in dealing with nations engaged in war. This resolution, if adopted, does not give the President any more power, in my judgment, except to issue proclamations, than he has under international law and the Constitution of the United States. The argument that it gives the President all of this power is certainly not consistent with the language contained in the bill itself. The bill takes no power from Congress. Under the Constitution Congress has the sole power to declare war.

We find if section 3 is deleted—and that was really the section that gave him wide power in defining combat areas—and if you gentlemen on the left and my colleagues on the right who are pleading to go back to international law support the amendment to strike out section 3, we strip the President of practically all the power that this resolution gives him that he does not now have under the Constitution of the United States and under international law.

Section 4 prohibits loans to nations that are engaged in war except on a general commercial basis and not to exceed renewals for 90 days.

Under our present law or under the so-called Johnson-McReynolds Act this country and our nationals are prohibited from making loans to those countries that are in default on the obligations which they now owe. This simply gives the President additional power to prohibit loans to belligerent states and prevent renewals for more than 90 days. Certainly no valid objection could exist to giving the President this power, because it would tend to keep us from being involved as we became involved during the World War.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I yield.

Mr. KUNKEL. If these loans are not paid at the end of 90 days, they become automatically renewed, do they not?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. They do not.

Mr. KUNKEL. If the loan continues, what are you going to do about it?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Just as we have done in the past.

Mr. KUNKEL. If you once let that loan get established, you have established a credit that may become permanent, have you not?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. We must have commercial transactions with the foreign nations of the world. If we do not, we perish economically. There is no way around that. We cannot bottle ourselves up in this country without having the usual commercial transactions; and if it is necessary to extend loans in order to carry those on, and those countries become engaged in war, then, of course, demand will be made for them to pay. If they do not pay, we can only extend it for 90 days. If they refuse to pay, then, of course, there is nothing we can do but refuse more loans and thereby prevent them getting deeper in debt to this country or its nationals.

Mr. SHANLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I yield.

Mr. SHANLEY. The Johnson-McReynolds Act prohibits loans, and I know the gentleman is in favor of that act. That is one of the most salutary laws that we have had in post-war days. In your opinion, is there any danger that any of the amendments or specific acts that we have today on the statute books would in any way interfere with the Johnson-McReynolds Act, prohibiting loans to foreign debtor nations?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. In my judgment, the amendments would not. This bill goes right along in connection with that act and adds something to it, because this section deals with belligerent states, and the Johnson-McReynolds Act deals with our present debtor nations.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. The Johnson Act has this exception, "excepting renewal or adjustment of existing indebtedness." This bill, which comes later, provides a new kind of existing legal indebtedness. Would not the gentleman say that, therefore, the Johnson Act is, by implication, extended so that it would except from its terms loans which the President would permit to be made under the amendment which is to be offered?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Oh, not in the least, because the Johnson-McReynolds Act deals with debtor nations at the time the act was enacted. This deals with such countries as may become engaged in war in the future.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. But the Johnson Act excepts from its provisions existing indebtedness.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Yes; but at the time of the enactment of the act. By that language and provision, it cannot keep on excepting existing indebtedness, because if it did it would not have any effect at all.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. If it would permit a new kind of legal existing indebtedness, would that not clearly come within the exception of the Johnson Act?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Section 4 simply deals with those countries that may owe us in the future and which may hereafter become engaged in a state of war. That is the only possible meaning it could have. It would give the President power to deal with those conditions.

The law also provides that no bonds or other obligations of belligerent states shall be sold in the country and to our nationals. If that does not tend to promote peace, I do not understand what the promotion of peace is. The bill also prohibits the solicitation of funds for belligerent countries, and that should tend to keep down feeling in this country and thereby promote peace.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. Will you explain to the committee why it was that the Foreign Affairs Committee would not insert a provision in this bill with regard to travel by American citizens on American vessels and vessels of other neutral nations?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Certainly we did not want to restrict travel of our own citizens on our own vessels.

Mr. COOLEY. In other words, your committee is perfectly willing to have another Lusitania incident by providing that you can have mixed cargoes of human beings riding on top of implements of war, headed for belligerent ports. Is that not true?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. No; I think not. If my memory serves me correctly, the Lusitania was a British ship.

Mr. COOLEY. Would the gentleman object to a provision which would make it unlawful for citizens of our country to travel as passengers upon ships the bottoms of which were loaded with implements of war?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Does the gentleman mean our own ships?

Mr. COOLEY. Yes.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. How in the world could you man the ships if our own citizens did not travel?

Mr. COOLEY. I said "travel as passengers"; not as members of the crew.

Mr. BLOOM. That is covered by the rules and regulations. That question has never been before the committee.

Mr. COOLEY. I would be glad if the gentleman would point out what provision in this bill prohibits the very thing that happened when the Lusitania went down.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I know of no absolute provision to that effect, and personally I would have no objection to such an amendment.

Mr. COOLEY. Section 2 deals only with vessels of belligerent states and does not deal with vessels of the United States.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. That is correct. Another important provision of the pending bill is contained in section 4, subsection (d). This section provides that when the President issues a proclamation under section 1 of the act, it shall thereafter be unlawful, except in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe, to export or transport to any state named in the proclamation any articles or materials until all right, title, and interest therein shall have transferred to some foreign government, agency, institution, association, partnership, corporation, or national. This is a departure from international law, but, in my judgment, a wise one, since it prevents our citizens from making claims for any losses that might arise from the seizure or destruction of property which they might sell to countries engaged in war. I think this provision will do much to promote peace and keep us from becoming involved in any foreign entanglements. I would like also to call attention to the fact that the proposed bill continues the National Munitions Control Board and requires munition manufacturers to register with the Secretary of State and also makes it unlawful for them to export arms, ammunition, or implements of war without first having obtained a license therefor. This provision enables the Secretary of State to keep a close watch on all munition manufacturers and their business with foreign countries. It is a wise provision and should be retained.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Ford] has expired.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, for 3 days now the pending House joint resolution to amend the 5-year-old so-called Neutrality Act has been debated on the floor of this House. For the most part, the debate has been on a high plane during which time the issues involved have been discussed. Only one or two Members have insisted upon injecting personalities into the debate. Although there are wide differences of opinion on the floor of this House, the same as there are vast differences of opinion throughout the country, it is only fair to say that it is obvious that all Members who have participated in this debate have one outstanding purpose in mind and that is for America to remain at peace with the rest of the world. I am sure that this also applies to every Member of this House irrespective of his views on neutrality or political affiliations.

I think it is generally conceded that no one Member of this House or group has a "corner" on all the patriotism in the land. All good, sincere citizens in and out of Congress desire to aid in keeping America out of war; yet, from the very beginning of this debate, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has repeatedly referred to war hysteria of this administration, as if Uncle Sam is parading over the world looking for someone to fight. Evidently the gentleman is laboring under the hallucination that someone in this Congress, or connected with this administration, is anxious to start a war any moment. No one should object to helpful and constructive criticism, either against the present so-called Neutrality Act or against the pending bill to drastically amend the present law. For anyone to assume, however, that any Member of either House of Congress, or the President of the United States, our great Secretary of State, or any other Member of the President's Cabinet would purposely espouse a foreign policy that would drag this country into a war with any nation on the face of the earth, is manifestly unfair and ridiculously absurd. There has, of course, been a lot of war-hysteria talk over the radio and upon the floor of this House, but such talk has come largely from those who for political purposes insist upon singing a hymn of hate against the President who has used every power at his command to keep America out of another awful war.

The most horrible thing imaginable is war. Such legalized murder should be outlawed by every civilized nation of the world. War never settles anything. Generations yet unborn will still be paying dearly for the World War after we shall have long since passed from the present scene of action that we were told was to make the world safe for democracy, but in fact made it safe for the war profiteer, the munition makers, and certain international bankers.

No one is here advocating war. All are agreed that this horrible, uncivilized, and barbaric practice of legalized military murder has no rightful place among honorable and decent people. [Applause.] But all admit it is extremely difficult, if not impossible, to legislate in time of peace to forestall future international emergencies. All agree it is impossible to legislate against passion, prejudice, intrigue, and rascality.

Because of insinuations, charges, and countercharges about war hysteria, I have endeavored to make it plain that all loyal patriotic American citizens are, of course, opposed to war. Not only do our people of all classes, young and old, wish to remain definitely out of any and all entangling alliances in the Old World, and therefore out of any and all future wars, but this is especially true of our war veterans and their wives and families. I say this for the reason that there are some who apparently believe that to be a war veteran is to be a jingoist, who would like for America to become involved in every misunderstanding or international disturbance across the seas. But, of course, nothing is further from the truth.

Who could possibly know better than our war veterans and their wives, mothers, and sisters of the horrors, heart-breaks, and utter stupidity of war? Having served as a buck private during the World War, with many months of overseas service, and having a vivid remembrance of my experience in the front lines with the Thirty-sixth Division, I think of war as a horrible and unforgettable nightmare. More than three millions still left of the four and one-half millions of veterans of the World War, as well as veterans of other wars, their mothers, wives, widows, and children, will join in a fervent prayer that America mind her own business and stay forever out of war or any entangling alliances that might possibly involve us in future wars. [Applause.]

Let me add, in this connection, that one thing war veterans and their wives and children have consistently and enthusiastically been fighting for during the past 20 years is for a real law with teeth in it to eliminate, if humanly possible, any future war profiteering. That, in my judgment, would do more toward maintaining the peace of America and the world than all the neutrality legislation we might write during this or any other Congress. [Applause.]

For many years patriotic citizens have gathered from almost every town and hamlet in the United States in conventions annually here in the Nation's Capital and have discussed and passed resolutions on the cause and cure of war. At each convention the long list of the causes of war has grown longer, but no group in or out of Congress has ever found a sure cure for this horrible holocaust called war. As long as there is hatred in the hearts of men and a mad desire on the part of war lords for power, there is no possible way to legislate war out of existence.

Of course, there is no sure cure for war any more than there is a cure for thievery, highjacking, or murder. Yet the most perplexing problem facing us as lawmakers is how to enact sane and practical legislation that will promote the spirit of peace and good will and to at least do our utmost in preventing America from being embroiled in another death struggle. For my part I can think of no condition at this time that would cause me to vote to send an American soldier to a foreign soil to help settle foreign quarrels of ungrateful nations across the sea. [Applause.]

But getting back to the pending bill, serious objection has been raised against the bill, the heart of which, if passed, will eliminate the controversial embargo clause. The most of us supported the present neutrality law in good faith believing that it would help keep our country neutral between any two warring nations. It is generally agreed, however, that the present law is unfair and unneutral. That it has had the exact opposite effect from that which we had anticipated no one can truthfully dispute. It has penalized the weak and helpless nations and made us practically an ally of some of the strong aggressor nations, nations which are more interested in expanding their borders than in aiding in the maintenance of world peace. As has been repeatedly brought out in this debate, the United States, under the present weak and unsatisfactory law, is actually aiding Japan by shipping war materials, scrap iron, and other sinews of war against poor helpless China. Such a condition is not only indefensible but absolutely unconscionable. [Applause.] So it is quite evident that 5 years of unneutrality have demonstrated the futility of the present law. It is also clear that the law must either be discarded or drastically amended. We have no neutrality now.

It would now appear that the objectionable features, actual and imaginary, will be deleted from this bill before its final passage. Now that this has been practically agreed upon, I am delighted to see some of the ablest Members of the minority side enthusiastically supporting this legislation. This is not a political question. It is not a partisan matter and should not be thus treated. Yet a few, unfortunately, have attempted to inject partisan politics into this discussion. Despite the barrage of unfair criticism that has been leveled at the President and his foreign policy, I feel that a vast majority of our people, regardless of politics, are convinced that he has done everything humanly possible to promote the good-neighbor policy among the nations of the world and to prevent our country from being drawn into another devastating war.

It is significant that our great Secretary of State, Hon. Cordell Hull, also a lifelong advocate of world peace, and whose firm but fair position toward all foreign governments—a policy that has met with widespread approval throughout the entire country—has wholeheartedly endorsed the pending bill. For my part, I prefer to heed the advice and counsel of President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Hull on foreign affairs than some of those who so bitterly assail them because of their straightforward and sincere foreign policy. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT], who for 3 years was national commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, because of my activities in veterans' affairs in the recent past it has been suggested that I should voice the views of veteranism on the question of neutrality. Let me hasten to disclaim any such presumption. I speak only for myself, as a Representative of the Twenty-third District of Pennsylvania.

It is true that as commander in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States for three terms it was my privilege to speak for that splendid organization of overseas veterans of all wars and campaigns of this country since the Spanish-American War. I also am proud of my membership in the American Legion, which has done so much to perpetuate a fine spirit of patriotism in America.

My duties as commander in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars brought me in contact with thousands of veterans in all sections of the country. They are my "buddies," my best friends, and, naturally, I have kept in close contact with them since I left my official post. I receive scores of letters from veterans throughout the Nation in my mail every day. Therefore, I am in a position to know what is in the minds and the hearts of the veterans of America. And while I do not assume to speak for any veterans' organization, I feel that I can reflect accurately the opinions held by the vast bulk of the rank and file of veteranism. And since the average veteran is the average American, I am confident that the views that I express here are the views of an overwhelming majority of the American people on the question of neutrality and the even more vital question of war which goes hand in hand with it.

In making separate mention of the veterans I do not intend to make any distinction among the American people. If there is any difference between the veteran and the non-veteran, it is this: The average veteran is even more bitterly opposed to war than the average American, if that is possible. Veterans who fought in France saw their "buddies" die beside them. They saw the bodies of other messmates riddled with shrapnel and their best friends writhing in agony that comes from gas.

When you consider that only 35,931 men in the American Expeditionary Forces were killed in action but 14,785 died of wounds and 122,558 died of other causes out of the 4,791,171 men actually mobilized in the armed forces during the World War, a remarkably high percentage escaped unscathed by bullets. But the horror of the hateful experience of war was stamped upon their memories. They know the utter futility of that war fought "to make the world safe for democracy."

It was not so much their own experiences that make the surviving veterans hate war, but the sight of their crippled comrades, maimed for life. Death would have been merciful to some of the boys who returned from France. I have seen thousands of them in veterans' hospitals throughout the country awaiting their rendezvous with death. There they lie, 20 years after the last shot was fired in France, thousands of men still suffering with lacerated flesh, suffocated lungs, shattered limbs, mangled bodies, and shadowed minds.

No man could gaze upon the sights I have seen without an appalling sense of the brutality and hideousness of war. That feeling is shared by veterans generally and that is why veterans hate war. That is why veterans oppose so bitterly any policy that is likely to lead us down the road to war. That is why the average veteran and the average American demand a strict neutrality policy that will keep us out of war—other people's wars. That is why they demand that this country keep free from entangling alliances, either express or implied, because that is the inevitable way to war.

But, as much as the average veteran and the average American hate war, they always are ready to fight in a war of defense. The American people are prepared to defend our own shores and our possessions overseas. They are prepared to maintain the Monroe Doctrine by defending any part of the western world from attack by force or from political encroachment by any Old World powers.

The President repeatedly has expressed himself as a believer in the Monroe Doctrine "in all its pristine purity." On that point, the President is at one with the vast and overwhelming majority of the American people. And that is the basis of our policy of hemisphere defense.

But the President has failed to follow the Monroe Doctrine in its entirety. The President apparently has forgotten the Monroe Doctrine is in two parts—two essential parts, two parts each of equal importance to the American people. If we are to maintain the Monroe Doctrine "in all its pristine purity," we must remember that one part of that fixed foreign policy of the United States was especially designed to keep us out of other people's wars—Old World wars.

Let me quote, in part, from the message sent to Congress on December 2, 1823, by President Monroe, the message out of which grew that famous doctrine. I quote:

Of events in that quarter of the globe with which we have so much intercourse, and from which we derive our origin, we always have been anxious and interested spectators. The citizens of the United States cherish sentiments the most friendly in favor of the liberty and happiness of their fellow men on that side of the Atlantic. In the wars of the European powers, in matters relating to themselves, we never have taken any part nor does it comport with our policy so to do.

In other words, the Monroe Doctrine, "in all its pristine purity," assumes an inherent right to deny European interference in the western world, but that right is directly dependent upon our promise and our policy not to take part in the wars of European powers. If the second and highly important part of the Monroe Doctrine is omitted, then that 116-year-old policy becomes a selfish instrument. If we ourselves violate the "pristine purity" of that great doctrine, we put ourselves in the false position of demanding of other powers that which we ourselves are unwilling to give—that is a guaranty to keep our hands out of Old World affairs, while we demand that Old World powers keep their hands out of the western world.

Whether we had what we regarded at the time as good and sufficient cause to enter the World War on the side of the Allies, the fact remains that we violated the Monroe Doctrine "in all its pristine purity" when we did so. And we have had cause to regret it ever since. It is idle to say that we might have had greater cause to regret it if we had failed to throw our weight on the side of the Allies and thus win the war. I have yet to find one single benefit the American people derived from the World War.

And merely because we, ourselves, violated the Monroe Doctrine once, that is no justification for violating it a second time by adopting a policy now which, in all probability, would give future generations cause for regret and, in all probability, just cause to curse us in our graves.

A moment ago I said that I had failed to find one single benefit the American people derived from the World War. I now wish to modify that statement with a reservation. We had a bitter experience which can prove a lasting benefit to the American people if we will but profit by it. If we toss that experience aside, then I will allow my original statement to stand—the American people have not derived one single benefit from the World War.

For that reason alone we should exercise the greatest care and caution about passing a measure in the name of neutrality which would be anything but neutral. In the first place, unless there is a will to neutrality the word becomes empty and meaningless. And there is no will to neutrality in the measure before the House. It is not designed to keep the United States from taking any part, directly or indirectly, in a war between two powers. It is designed to put the United States in a position to become the indirect ally of the so-called democracies of Europe in the event of war with the dictator nations.

Unless a neutrality law or a neutrality policy will keep us out of war, other people's wars, it is worthless. How could the United States become the indirect ally of the so-called democracies, their ammunition depot, in fact, and yet remain neutral? And, what is more to the point, how could we long remain out of the war as an active ally? The answer is obvious. We would be in for another bath of blood and tears, another series of economic dislocations and depressions. And in the end we might sacrifice our own democracy by reason of our unneutral actions and our ultimate participation in the war. Any mis-called neutrality measure, such as the Bloom resolution as it stands, which almost certainly would lead us into war—other people's wars—is worse than worthless. It is a fraud, a delusion, and a snare.

No other characterization could more aptly fit the Bloom resolution as it was presented to this House. It was "rail-roaded" through the Foreign Affairs Committee with unseemly haste in an effort to foist it upon the American people in the name of neutrality. It was not until after the measure was reported to the House that Congress and the country became fully aware of the grave dangers inherent in the measure.

Now that the plans of the administration to rush this resolution through the House have gone awry, the full significance of the adroit and deceptive language of the measure has become apparent to all who can read between the lines. It now is obvious that the purpose of this measure was to commit the United States to a virtual war alliance with the so-called European democracies. The tricky language was calculated to make the United States the ammunition depot for Britain and France, if and when war breaks out in Europe, with that pair on one side and the dictator nations of Germany and Italy on the other side.

If we should aid one side in a general European war, our experience in the World War is sufficient proof of our eventual entrance into the conflict on that side. The sympathies of the administration in power at that time were on the side of the Allies and we finally declared war on Germany. History could not fail to repeat itself in the event of another European war with the same general line-up of foes.

As I have stated repeatedly, I am not complaining about the side that would be chosen in advance for American boys to fight on in the next European war. I protest against American boys being thrust into any war on either side in the Old World. It is possible that we might be drawn into the war by the same methods that sucked us into the World War, but by the eternal, I do not propose to sit here silent when an attempt is made to trick the American people into a war alliance by legislative action.

I will grant that a vast and overwhelming majority of the American people abhor Hitler and despise Mussolini. The totalitarian state is repugnant to American ideals of democracy. And the methods used by that precious pair of dictators in governing their unfortunate people is even more repulsive to free-born, liberty-loving Americans.

While the so-called democracy of Britain and France is not democracy as we know it, it is far closer to our conception of good government than the ruthless regimes now in power in Berlin and Rome. But a people deserve no better government than they get. If Germans and Italians wish to submit to that yoke, that is their business, not ours.

Furthermore, the question of sympathy for England and France or antipathy toward Germany and Italy is not involved in honest neutrality legislation. The question before the House and, more properly, before the American people, is this: Shall Congress, in the name of neutrality, enact legislation which would be a virtual war alliance with any nation or nations?

If we are going to turn our backs, close our eyes, and shut our ears to the solemn warnings of Washington, Jefferson, and Monroe against all entangling alliances and participation in the wars of Europe and enter into a war alliance with the so-called democracies, then the proposition would not properly come before this House. If the President wishes to toss all our traditional policies into the scrap heap, it is within his constitutional powers in the conduct of foreign relations to negotiate a war alliance treaty with Britain and France against Germany and Italy. That is the orderly procedure in such matters. Treaties with foreign powers are not originated and consummated by legislative action of Congress alone.

Naturally, the President does not dare to flout American public opinion in any such high-handed fashion. And, even if he dared to do such an outrageous thing, he knows full well that the body at the other end of the Capitol never would ratify any such alliance. The storm of protest aroused by some of the President's domestic policies, which led to their ignominious defeat, would seem like a mild summer zephyr in comparison to the cyclone of disapproval which would sweep this country if he dared to play ducks and drakes with our foreign policy in that manner.

Nevertheless, that would be the honest and straightforward way to proceed in this matter which so deeply affects the lives of the American people, the lives of generations unborn. That sort of procedure would give the American people an opportunity to learn what was going on behind the international scenes. They would have full knowledge of what such a treaty meant to them and they could make themselves heard in no uncertain fashion.

Strangely and sadly for the leader of a democracy, under which the Government is supposed to derive its just powers from the consent of the governed, the President has seen fit to seek extraordinary powers never dreamed of by the makers of the Constitution and to achieve his ends by indirection.

Of course, it is difficult to say at this date what might have happened if the American people had been aware of what was transpiring behind the international scenes during the days before this country entered the World War. But, the fact is, they did not know what was going on. The then President, some of his intimates, but not all of his Cabinet, and a few international bankers, knew what was happening and how America was being eased over the brink and into war. But the American people were in complete ignorance of the diplomatic double-dealing that was double-crossing them.

I say to you gentlemen of this House, if the American people fight the Nation's wars, die in the wars, and then pay for the wars, they are entitled to know all about why we might go to war, how we are going to be drawn into a war, when we are likely to go to war, and on which side we are going to fight the war. Neither the administration nor the Congress has any right to keep the American people in the dark about such a grave matter as the danger of war.

I have listened with some impatience to the arguments made by gentlemen seeking to justify this measure. I have heard the threadbare argument that this measure is only intended as a bluff to make the dictators behave. The roars of the British lion have failed to frighten Mussolini or halt Hitler's march to the east. And, it is extremely doubtful whether we could run a bluff on the dictators with a phony neutrality law, even if it amounted to a virtual war alliance with the so-called democracies.

I do not for a moment question the President's desire to avert a war in Europe, but I do question the wisdom of any policy or program which would result in the United States being involved in war. If the President believes it is the will of the American people, if he believes he can get away with it, let him go the whole hog on this proposition. Let him tell Hitler and Mussolini point blank that the United States is prepared to aid, or even fight on the side of Britain and France, in the event of war with the dictators. Instead of asking Congress to enact a phony neutrality law and achieve a war alliance by indirection, let him announce his purpose to Congress, the country, and the world.

Since this measure was reported by the Foreign Affairs Committee, the administration and the members of the committee have been hearing from the country. Now we are told that the most objectionable sections will be withdrawn. I have no doubt the gentleman making that announcement made it in good faith. But if that is done, the measure certainly will not be acceptable to the President. Moreover, it will not be a sound neutrality measure no matter what is done to it by this House.

The longer I study this cross-word puzzle of neutrality by law, in which the words come out neutral when read across and unneutral when read down, the more firmly I am convinced that legislative neutrality is an impossibility in the world situation today. It would be far wiser to scrap the entire neutrality law and toss this measure into the wastebasket than to enact an unneutral neutrality law with the avowed purpose of aiding either side in any war.

Under the present conditions in the world, it would be far safer for America to adopt a strict and sincere policy of neutrality, not a law. Our current royal visitor, Prince Olav, pointed out in an interview appearing in this morning's papers that the Scandinavian countries do not have neutrality laws, but maintain strict neutrality policies. And it is significant that the Scandinavian countries were able to remain neutral throughout the World War with that conflict raging in their back yards.

The first essential to the maintenance of neutrality is a strong national defense. History has demonstrated that the neutral rights of nations are not respected by the belligerents in war unless the neutral is powerful enough to enforce respect. Even such a potentially powerful nation as the United States, which found itself woefully unprepared at the outbreak of the World War and far from prepared even when we entered the conflict, had its neutral rights disregarded and our nationals and our ships subjected to all sorts of indignities by England before Germany began sinking our ships and killing American citizens.

But surely it would be far safer for the United States to adopt a strong policy of actual neutrality than a phony, unneutral proposal such as we find in the original Bloom bill. Under the Constitution, the President is entrusted with the conduct of foreign relations. But Congress and Congress alone can declare war. In view of the highly explosive state of affairs in Europe, Congress should be taken more into the confidence of the administration about the developments in the Old World. And, above all, Congress should be consulted before any action is taken that would have the effect of committing us to war. Congress should be consulted before—not after—the deed is done and America's course is beyond the control of Congress.

Wars do not come overnight, as a rule. Wars usually come as a consequence of a train of events. We have seen the long and hideous shadow of a general war in Europe for more than a year now. No one has any doubt about the eventual outbreak of hostilities. Only the time for the start of the war is obscure to us.

Perhaps it is unnecessary for Congress to remain in session indefinitely awaiting the outbreak of war. Perhaps it may come before this session adjourns. In any event, if Congress is not in session when some new emergency arises, Congress should be convened at once. Congress could enact any emergency measures necessary to meet any special circumstances that might arise. And thus we might avert and avoid the necessity of American boys ever again going to fight a war on foreign soil.

No Member of this House wants to go home and tell his constituents he voted for a measure, which even remotely held the danger of war within its four corners. Therefore, I urge the Members of this House to hesitate and to reflect before they vote for any so-called neutrality law, which would have the practical effect of aiding and abetting any nation or set of nations in the Old World in this coming war. [Applause.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I am for strict neutrality in dealing with foreign countries, and firmly adhere to the principles laid down by our first President, George Washington, in his farewell address.

Few of us today realize, or can appreciate the dangerous difficulties met and overcome by our early Presidents in guiding our country through perilous times of an early existence, and establishing the Nation on a firm foundation of freedom and independence.

History tells us that President Washington postponed his retirement to Mount Vernon on account of the "perplexed and critical posture of our affairs with foreign nations." It is difficult for us today with our secure and well-defined borders, with our closely welded and tested Union, with our long and popular tradition—but lately disturbed—of indifference to the quarrels of the Old World, to realize how dangerously exposed we were in the earliest years of the Republic to the storms of European politics. The Revolution, although it secured our political independence, did not make us economically independent of Europe. After the war, as before it, our prosperity depended on our foreign commerce. Manufactures were in their infancy. Laborers were scarce and land was abundant. Our enormous surplus of foodstuffs, lumber and timber, fish, and tobacco had to be exchanged abroad for the luxuries, and even for some of the bare necessities, of civilized life. We were vitally concerned, therefore, in the commercial policy of the European maritime and colonial powers—France, Spain, Holland, and Great Britain. Furthermore, the land between the Alleghenies and the Mississippi was a vast "arena of friction." Indian tribes and confederacies still harassed our settlements as they spread northward from the Ohio and southward from the Cumberland, while the agents of England and Spain, our neighbors on the north and south, were busy with a disavowed but rather obvious propaganda to encourage the Indians in their resistance to the establishment of our authority in the lands which had been ceded to us by the Treaty of Paris. England even retained garrisons in half a dozen fur posts strung along the Lakes from Dutchman's Point on Lake Champlain to Mackinaw on Lake Michigan—all in the territory of the United States.

Our diplomatic relations also were highly unsatisfactory. With Spain, who had been the ally of our ally France in the Revolution, we had made no treaty at all in 1783, nor were we able to conclude one in the critical years that followed, although Spanish control of the Mississippi and Spanish possession of Florida (lying all along our southern border) made an agreement concerning the navigation of the river and the policing of the hostile tribes of Creeks and Cherokees an imperative necessity. With France we had a treaty, the earliest in our national history, dating from the dark days of the American Revolution (1778). But as this treaty was in the form of an alliance, pledging us under certain conditions to fight by the side of France for the protection of her American (West Indian) possessions, and giving her the privilege of using our ports for her prizes of war, it proved eventually to be more of an embarrassment to us than the lack of a treaty with Spain. As to England, there was, of course, the famous treaty of 1783. But instead of settling old disputes, this treaty only opened new ones. Every article in it, except the first, which recognized the independence of the United States, led to contention and mutual charges of bad faith.

To deal with the delicate diplomatic situation we should have had a well-organized department of foreign affairs, with the tradition of a firm and consistent policy, backed by the strength of the united Nation. Instead of that, when Jefferson assumed the office of Secretary of State, in the spring of 1790, he inherited a legacy of mistrust and contempt bequeathed by the weak Government of the critical period. It was certain, under these conditions, that the first serious strife among the maritime nations of Europe would be the signal for trouble in America. And, indeed, it looked as if that trouble were at hand in the very first year of Washington's government, when Great Britain threatened to go to war with Spain over the seizure of British ships attempting to establish a trading post on the western coast of America at Nootka Sound. In case of war the British would probably march across our territory from Canada to attack the Spaniards on the Mississippi. They would kindle war in Florida and Louisiana and rouse the Indian tribes on our borders. Fortunately, the war cloud blew over and our country was left in an apprehensive state of peace during Washington's first administration, to establish the Federal Government.

Hardly was Washington seated in office for a second time, however, when the storm burst. In the first days of April 1793 a British packet sailed into New York bearing ominous news. The French Republic, whose baptismal victory over the Prussians at Valmy the Americans had celebrated with civic feasts and processions, with bell ringings and banquets, only a few weeks before, had fallen into the hands of the radicals, who had guillotined their King, hurled defiance against all the thrones of Europe, and added England, Holland, and Sardinia to the list of their enemies in arms. A few days after the arrival of this news citizen Edmond Genet, the Minister from the French Republic to the United States, landed in Charleston with "the smell of blood on his ambassadorial garments." Genet was enthusiastic, vain, rash, and emotional. He came not as a diplomat but as the agent of the French Republic. Even before his credentials were presented at Philadelphia he began to violate the principles of international courtesy and law, equipping vessels in our ports to fight the British, enlisting our seamen, establishing courts for the condemnation of prizes, ordering French consuls to carry out his belligerent plans, demanding an advance payment of the interest on the French loan for the purchase of war supplies.

As Genet was making a triumphal progress up to Philadelphia, feted by the Francophile Republicans of the Southern States, the President summoned his Cabinet for advice as to how to treat the new envoy. Should he be officially received and the republic which sent him recognized? If so, what would be the effect of our relations with those maritime countries with which the French Republic was at war and with which our trade was flourishing? There was the embarrassing Treaty of Alliance of 1778 with France, pledging us to fight her battles and opening our ports to her prizes. Was there occasion now for France to demand fulfillment of the pledge and so involve us in a war with Great Britain? The Cabinet agreed unanimously that Genet should be received, but that, at the same time, a proclamation should be issued forbidding our citizens "to take part in any hostilities on land or sea with any of the belligerent powers" or to carry contraband goods to their ports. Washington published the proclamation on the very day that Genet entered the Capital, April 22, 1793.

"THE PROCLAMATION"

"Whereas it appears that a state of war exists between Austria, Prussia, Sardinia, Great Britain, and the United Netherlands, of the one part, and France on the other; and the duty and interest of the United States require, that they should with sincerity and good faith adopt and pursue a conduct friendly and impartial toward the belligerent powers:

"I have, therefore, thought fit by these presents to declare the disposition of the United States to observe the conduct aforesaid towards those powers respectively; and to exhort and warn the citizens of the United States carefully to avoid all acts and proceedings whatsoever, which may in any manner tend to contravene such disposition.

"And I do hereby also make known, that whosoever of the citizens of the United States shall render himself liable to punishment or forfeiture under the law of nations, by committing, aiding, or abetting hostilities against any of the said powers, or by carrying to any of them those articles which are deemed contraband by the modern usage of nations, will not receive the protection of the United States, against such punishment or forfeiture; and further, that I have given instructions to those officers, to whom it belongs, to cause prosecutions to be instituted against all persons, who shall, within the cognizance of the courts of the United States, violate the law of nations, with respect to the powers at war, or any of them . . . ."

France had sent us men, ships, and money to help secure our independence. France was our ally now, and England a surly neutral. France was a republic, proclaiming the end of the reign of despots and of the privileges of aristocrats in the Old World as we had proclaimed it in the New World. France had thrown open her ports to us, while England forbade us to use them. Should we treat our enemy better than our ally? We had dismissed Genet for overstepping the bounds of propriety, but we tamely allowed England to retain our fur posts, to seize our ships, and to impress our sailors. If the French faction did not want war with England, at least they were willing to go to the very verge of war.

But Washington was determined to have peace. In April 1794 he appointed John Jay, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, as special envoy to Great Britain to negotiate a treaty.

Our first President, having successfully guided our Nation through all the dangers that beset the Government by firmly establishing the principles of neutrality, left for our guidance, in turning over the responsibilities of our Government to his successor, the principles laid down in the imperishable words of his Farewell Address, which have been followed in making America a Nation that is preeminent among world powers.

Let us heed the advice of Washington today and not yield to the "insidious wiles of foreign influence," and remember his admonition to "observe good faith and justice toward all nations; cultivate peace and harmony with all." Religion and morality enjoin this conduct, and can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and, at no distant period, a great Nation, to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt but in the course of time and things the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages which might be lost by a steady adherence to it; can it be that providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue? The experiment, at least is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature. Alas, is it rendered impossible by its vices?

In the execution of such a plan nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others should be excluded; and that, in place of them, just and amiable feelings toward all should be cultivated.

And remember that he cautioned:

A passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the allusion of an imaginary common interest, in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter, without adequate inducements or justifications. It leads also to concessions to the favorite nation, of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions, by unnecessary parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill-will, and a disposition to retaliate in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupted or deluded citizens who devote themselves to the favorite nation, facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country, without odium, sometimes even with popularity; gliding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation, a commendable deference for public opinion, or a laudable zeal for public good, the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation.

As avenues of foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent patriot.

And for guidance—

The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign nations, is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests, which to us have none, or a very remote relation. Hence, she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves, by artificial ties, in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics, or the ordinary combinations and collisions or her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon, to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation, when we may choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalry, interest, humor, or caprice?

It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliance with any portion of the foreign world; so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than private affairs, that honesty is always the best policy. I repeat it, therefore, let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But in my opinion, it is unnecessary, and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Harmony and a liberal intercourse with all nations are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand; neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things; diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the streams of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing with powers so disposed, in order to give trade a stable course, to define the rights of our merchants, and to enable the Government to support them, conventional rules of intercourse, the best that present circumstances and mutual opinion will permit, but temporary and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another.

And today, in light of the experience of the years since our Nation was founded, as a Member of this House, I sanction his statement as did the Members of Congress 146 years ago, when he said:
